The New York Tribune, in a late editorial article, commented upon the fact, published in this journal a few weeks since, that tea, equal in flavor to Young Hyson, had been successfully cultivated near this city. The editor of the Tribune demonstrated the vast influence which the success of the tea culture in the South would have upon the development of our Southern internal resources, and urged that all the information connected with its culture should be laid before the public. That the interest, which has succeeded the announcement of the successful cultivation of this important article of commerce, may be enhanced, and to the end that some practical benefit to the industrial interests of the country may be derived from a more general discussion of the subject, we visited the farm of Captain James Campbell, some ten miles from Knoxville, where the tea plant has been in successful cultivation for ten years.

We learned that the plants had been distributed through the Agricultural Department in Washington, about the year 1858. Hon. Horace Maynard, member of Congress for this district, received a few of the plants, and mailed them to Captain Campbell. This gentleman has fully tested their adaptedness to our genial climate, and has succeeded beyond his most sanguine expectations.

The plant is a deep evergreen shrub, and attains, at its full development, about five feet in height. It is hardy and needs no protection from frosts. It bears an abundant crop, with beautiful fragrant flowers in October. The following season it matures a seed, somewhat resembling the seed of our native hazel, and which grows as readily.

Captain Campbell informs us that he has cultivated merely a small number of the plants, or, as he expressed it, "just enough to keep the family in tea." At his suggestion we drank a cup of the tea, and confess our surprise at its fragrance. In our judgment the tea raised by Captain Campbell is fully equal to Young Hyson.

The vigor and hardiness of the tea plant, and its adaptedness to the climate of East Tennessee, have been fully tested, with a perfectly satisfactory result.—Knoxville Press and Herald.

A Christian bushel contains three hundred and thirty-two cubic inches, and is filled brimfull.

Gypsum.—This mineral, which, under the name of plaster, forms so large a part of the exports of Nova Scotia to this country for agricultural purposes, it is stated, has been discovered in Smyth county, Virginia. The Richmond Inquirer, directing the attention of the public to these deposits as one of the unfailing sources of wealth, if properly worked, says: "The main bed is situated in what is called the Cove, on Cove creek, a branch of the North Fork of Holston river, about twenty-five miles north of Wytheville, and fourteen miles east of Saltville, the present terminus of the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad. The route from thence to the Cove is up the valley of the Holston, a most favorable line for a railroad—the grades would be about fifteen feet to the mile—descending with the export tonnage. The quality of this plaster is superior to any now known on this continent. Such as have had a fair opportunity of testing it with the Nova Scotia, fix their relative value at fifty to one hundred per cent. in favor of the Virginia—that is to say, one ton of the Virginia is equal to one and a half to two of the Nova Scotia. In quantity it is enormous—it underlies hundreds of acres in a compact body. A well, or shaft, ten feet in diameter, has been sunk at one point. Within four feet from the surface plaster was reached, and continued (with the exception of a few diminutive seams of clay) for the depth of five hundred and eighty-two feet, and operations suspended without reaching the bottom of the vein or deposit, so continuous was the plaster—no water came in—the plaster continuing of a uniform superior quality through out.—American Farmer.

Blessed be the Hand which Prepares a Pleasure for a Child.—Does not almost everybody remember some kind-hearted man who showed a kindness in the quiet days of his childhood? The writer of this recollects himself at this moment as a barefooted lad, standing at the wooden fence of a poor little garden in his native village; with longing eyes he gazed on the flowers which were blooming there quietly in the brightness of a Sabbath morning. The possessor of the garden came forth from his little cottage—who was a woodcutter by trade, and spent the whole week at his work in the woods. He was come into his garden to gather a flower to stick in his coat when he went to church. He saw the boy, and breaking off the most beautiful of his carnations—it was streaked with red and white—gave it to him. Neither the giver nor the receiver spoke one word; and with bounding steps the boy ran home; and now here, at a vast distance from home, after so many events of so many years, the feeling of gratitude which agitated the breast of that boy expresses itself on paper. The carnation is long since withered, but it now blooms afresh.—Anon.

Christian Missions in Japan.—Rev. J. Goble, a Baptist missionary in Japan, pays all his own expenses. He is publishing a translation of the New Testament; and by an arrangement with the Japan Herald, eight pages of the Testament are printed for him, for every three pages of matter he contributes to that paper. Two or three years ago the prime minister of one of the daimios made a public profession of religion. He was not persecuted for his performance of duty, and since that time he has been the means of the conversion of his own son and a native physician. This minister told the daimio that the Christian religion was the great want of Japan. The daimio asked for the Bible and other Christian books in Chinese, and having examined the subject for himself, sent a few months ago his prime minister to the missionary with a request that he would take up his abode in his dominions and establish schools on a Christian basis.

It is said that Mazzini recently visited Paris and showed himself openly, but was not recognized, and was on the way to England before the prefect of police knew of his escapade. He learned it then only by a message from Mazzini himself.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE

OF THE

CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

EVERY CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

Letter from Major J. T. Hester, of Alabama:

AUBURN, ALA., April 4, 1869.

MESSRS. JOHN DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents.: I have received so much benefit from "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid" that I feel it my duty to let you know it. I had an attack of Typhoid Fever, and with it a most stubborn case of Erysipelas, and was confined to my bed near two months, suffering the most intense pain all the time from Erysipelas; and after exhausting the many prescriptions of my physician, he finally commenced the use of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, and soon found that I was being improved by its use, and continued to use it, and am nearly well. I consider it the most valuable medicine for the diseases and purposes for which it is made that is sold. I also used it most successfully on my little son, who was severely burned, and I do assure you that it was from this medicine alone that I could get any relief from my distressing attack of Erysipelas.

I do not write you this as a certificate for publication, but as a duty that I feel I owe to Professor Darby and his invaluable medicine.

I shall never be without it again if I can by any possible means get it.

I hope you are succeeding, and will make a fortune.

Very truly yours,
J. T. HESTER.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$25 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circulars to aug15 2m Secretary of Faculty.

O. F. CASEY,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has continued extremely dull, nearly every branch of trade partaking of the prevailing apathy. Sugar has been in fair request, and has commanded full prices. There has also been a moderate demand for molasses, but, from scant supplies, the sales have been of limited extent. Western produce has exhibited very little movement, operations having been restricted by scant supplies, but prices generally have been well maintained, and corn has further advanced.

The weather has been generally clear and warm. The accounts from the interior are still more encouraging. The recent dry, warm spell has had a decidedly favorable influence on cotton. Blooms are opening, and bolls forming freely, and although the crop is still backward, yet it presents a vigorous appearance, encouraging the hope of a liberal yield, unless some unfavorable contingencies occur later in the season. There is a general apprehension felt that even in case all else is auspicious, a deficiency of labor will prevent any more being picked than last year. Cane is, if anything, more backward than cotton, and although an increased area is in cultivation, it seems doubtful whether there will be any increase over last year's yield. A planter on the coast who has a reliable force of laborers, and has cultivated twenty-five per cent. more than last year, says he will be perfectly satisfied if there is no falling off in his crop, and that few or none of his neighbors have any better prospect.

The river has fallen two inches since our last report, and is now three feet eight inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 9th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ....bales..	345
Total	565

The market has been nearly at a standstill, nothing having been reported on Saturday, being the first blank day this season; only 60 bales (one sale) on Monday; and 21 bales damaged on Tuesday. We also heard of another sale of 15 bales on Tuesday which we did not authenticate. Although the business has been of too limited extent, yet it has been the general impression that the lower grades, from barely low middling down, could be bought at a reduction of 1c. per pound. The better qualities, on the contrary, are so scarce that they are offered much less freely, and orders for them could hardly be executed at any marked falling off. The decidedly favorable news from Liverpool on Tuesday inspired the hope that it would excite a renewal of the demand for the North.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 81 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 793,152 bales, against 586,220 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 90,513 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 22,557 bales to France, and of 6,419 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 248,489 to Great Britain.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	27½ to 28
Good ordinary	29½ to 30
Low middling	31 to 31½
Middling	32½ to —
Strict middling	— to —

Sugar.—Since our last review the market has been quiet, but prices have ruled firm. The receipts of fresh sugar have not all been sold, and the retail trade has been languid. The sales of Saturday and Monday embraced 93 hogsheads, part on private terms, and the remainder at 11¼c. per pound for good common to low fair, 14c. for strictly prime to choice, and 15c. for yellow clarified. Tuesday 88 hogsheads changed hands at 11¼c. for low fair, 11¾c. for fair to good fair, 13 to 13½c. for fully fair, and 14c. for yellow clarified.

Molasses.—We have no change to notice in this article since our last review. The receipts have been meagre and have all been sold.

Flour.—The market has continued quiet but firmer since our last review, with a scarcity of the medium and lower grades, the descriptions most in request.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—From the recent indications at the Treasury Department it is believed that the official public statement will show another large reduction of the indebtedness, though not near so large as was exhibited on the 1st of the present month. The receipts from customs and internal revenue are considered good for the dull season, estimating the receipts and expenses of government for the remainder of July on the basis of what they have been to the present time, the debt statement on the 1st of August will show a reduction of about $5,000,000.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—Wade says the Virginia election result will unfavorably affect Northern elections.

Peabody and Corcoran visit the White Sulphur Springs to-morrow.

The Revenue Department decides that smoking tobacco can't be retailed from pound packages unless packed in wooden boxes and stamped.

Efforts are being made to remove General Gordon Adams, attorney for Mississippi. It is understood that Commander Ames desires his removal. The charges against Adams are political.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—Mr. Whitaker, recently removed from the editorship of the New Orleans custom house has been appointed by Postmaster Maxwell to a clerkship in his office.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, July 16.—There are no additional particulars of the Erie Railroad accident. Mr. Gibbs, a passenger, says of the burning of the smoking car, that in it, lodged in his seat by the heap of broken timber, sat Rev. Mr. Halleok, of New York city, perfectly unhurt, but unable to extricate himself from the wreck. In calm accents and perfectly collected tones he told us to get an ax and try to cut an opening in the side of the car. We searched aronnd and obtained one from a house by the roadside, but it was so blunt that we could do nothing with it. We worked and strove to liberate the unfortunate gentleman, who sat there, sound in limb, watching the approach of the angry flames. Nearer and nearer they came until his hair began to crisp and burn and his skin crack; then, when we found the heat in like manner unbearable, we reluctantly fled, compelled to leave this poor gentleman with eight fellow sufferers to their terrible fate. We moved off until all was over. Nine persons were thus burned to death, and the others injured more or less severely. Another passenger says: I heard the little children scream for their mothers, and the passengers who were in the ruins call for help and groaning with pain; no ax was got and one or two were actually chopped out of their imprisonment. Most of the passengers in this car were killed and their bodies consumed or injured. I should think there were sixteen or seventeen persons in the front end of this car, and I think but two were taken out. I do not think a person was killed by the smash, but all the deaths were from burning."

NEW YORK, July 21.—The arch of the new Catholic church, at Hudson City, fell to-day, killing three persons.

CUBA.

HAVANA, July 20.—The American steamers Albany, Gettysburg and Cahaur are at Santiago de Cuba.

Sixty Spanish troops had a sharp engagement with the Cubans near Manzanillo. Twenty Cubans were killed and twelve captured. Spanish loss not given.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—The Philadelphia Inquirer says recently a vessel left Baltimore with twenty-four thousand stands of arms and one hundred and seventy thousand pounds of ammunition for Cuba. She got off without trouble, professing to be loaded with hay, and reached her destination successfully. It is understood that another vessel is likely to sail soon for the same port, similarly freighted.

EUROPE.

MADRID, July 21.—There is much excitement throughout Spain—many arrests have been made in Valladolid, Barcelona and Cordova, parties believed to be fomenting insurrection, including several generals and colonels. The authorities are taking great precautions to prevent outbreaks. The French government has ordered all conspirators from the frontier. A deep plot for the assassination of Serrano, Prim and Ribera has been discovered here. A sharp fight has occurred at Cuidad Real, between the civil authorities and a band of insurrectionists. Nine insurrectionists and several of the troops were wounded, when the insurrectionists retreated. The leaders escaped.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RICHMOND, July 21.—The official returns show that the vote for Walker fell two thousand six hundred short of the white registration, and that for Wells eighteen thousand short of the colored registration. The objectionable clauses in the constitution were defeated by forty thousand.

There seems to have been an entirely new deal in politics, as only six members elected to the Legislature have ever been there before.

Thomas R. Bowden, State Attorney General, resigned to-day.

There are from fifty to one hundred arrivals daily at the White Sulphur Springs.

CLEVELAND, O., July 21.—General Breckinridge arrived here to-day from Lake Superior, and leaves for home this evening.

THE little island of St. Pierre, on which one end of the French telegraphic cable has just been landed, is made by that event to assume an importance to which it was never before entitled. It, with the two small adjacent islands, known as Great and Little Miquelon, constitute the last remnants of French territorial possession on our Atlantic seaboard. They were conceded under special provisions and disabilities in the treaty with Great Britain, under which France abandoned and surrendered all the rest of the territory previously held by her in Canada, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. In her previous maritime experience France had discovered that her possessions in North America were chiefly valuable for their fisheries and as nurseries for seamen, and when adverse fortune obliged her to abandon all the rest, she still clung with unyielding pertinacity to these little islands of St. Pierre et Miquelon as a point d'appui for the prosecution of her fisheries. Louisburg and Quebec were gone forever, but St. Pierre remained.

The three islands lie in latitude 47 deg. 4 min., N., longitude 56 deg. 20 min., W., and form together an area of 85 square miles. This is on the southern side of Newfoundland, just opposite to the mouth of Fortune Bay. We have seen a fleet of two hundred sail of French fishing vessels at St. Pierre, ranging from seventy to three hundred tons in burden. These vessels cast anchor on the banks, a hundred miles or so from shore, and fish on the deep sea plan, with set lines, known as the bulton system. When a sufficient quantity is caught, the fish are carried to the islands and cured on the pebbly beach, or on stones spread over the ground, like our cobble stone pavements.

The summer population of St. Pierre is considerable, but on the return of the fishing fleet in the fall most of those engaged, directly or indirectly, in the trade, go back to France, leaving but a thousand or so to maintain occupancy and possession.

The island is ruled by a Governor, who has under him a few gen d'armes for police purposes, but according to the treaty stipulations between Great Britain and France no fortifications of any kind are to be erected. This stipulation has been violated, though to but an inconsiderable extent, by the establishment of a Place d'Armes, on which two or three small salute guns are mounted. The police regulations of St. Pierre are, or were twenty years ago, extremely rigid. At nine o'clock P. M. a drum was beaten and any person found outside of doors after that hour was subject to arrest and imprisonment till morning.

There is a fine lighthouse on the island, a hospital, a convent and several churches. We presume that St. Pierre will now take a higher commercial position than she ever did before, and that the number of her permanent inhabitants will be greatly increased. She is joined to France by a new tie, which, we trust, may prove as ever-during as the rocks on which she stands.—New Orleans Times.

THE English Churchman is afraid that the passage of the Irish Church bill will cause England to "degenerate into a republic." Sad prospect!

THE estimated value of the site given by the city of London for the statue of George Peabody is £10,000 ($50,000.)

EVERETT AND CHOATE.

HOW THEY PREPARED AND DELIVERED THEIR PUBLIC ADDRESSES.

A correspondent who had a conversation with the late Edward Everett, of Massachusetts, while on a journey from Cleveland to Buffalo, says:

He gave me an interesting page from his history, connected with his addresses. He said that from the earliest start he had been accustomed to commit to memory his speeches. In writing an address, he wrote a page and then committed it. If he was about to visit a place where there was the least probability of his making an address, or speaking, he would search for some historic event or matter of local interest, write and commit. If he was called to speak unawares, he put his thoughts down immediately after his return home, and wrote out a speech such as he would have liked to have delivered. When he was settled in Brattle street church, Boston, he was a mere strippling. He resolved to read nothing, but to prepare his sermons with great care and commit them. Some of the elder members of his flock were made nervous by his temerity. Seeing a mere lad stand up in the pulpit without a scrap of paper before him, filled them with alarm lest he should break down, and thus destroy all their enjoyment. Mr. Everett was requested to take notes with him into the pulpit. Wishing to accommodate his friends, and resolute in his purpose not to read his sermons, he compromised the matter. He took into the pulpit a sermon he was not preaching, and occasionally turning over the leaves quieted the nerves of his anxious friends. Under this constant and severe discipline his memory became as tenacious, as supple, and as obedient as the fingers of a well-trained organist. The reading of a lecture or sermon twice enabled him to commit it perfectly. He regarded the time when he gave his celebrated Phi Beta oration in the presence of Lafayette as that when he stood on the summit of success as an orator.

The strength of Mr. Choate's memory was one of the most remarkable things about that remarkable man. He could not only read everything, but he remembered everything that he read. He knew where the book was in which the desired information could be found, the very page, and the precise location of the book in the library where it happened to be. While trying the celebrated sewing machine case before Judge Woodbury, I heard him request a friend to go to the Athenæum and get him a volume of a set published by Chambers. The article he wanted was on the manufacture of silk. He described the set, the room in which it was kept, and the very spot in the library where it could be found. He wrote down nearly everything in a case that he could. The act of writing fastened the thing in his memory and it was ready for instant use. In the trial of a cause he kept two sets of notes—one the testimony, the other a digest and the argument. He was ready to argue a case the moment the testimony closed. His memory enabled him to talk on any subject introduced. He was at home on the Black Letter Law, knew familiarly the intricate English law of entail, and could discuss the laws of any nation as intelligibly as he could a common act of assault and battery. I walked with him from the court house on Saturday previous to the delivery of his celebrated eulogy on Webster, before Dartmouth College. He had been all the week before the United States Court conducting an intricate trial, the heat like that of a tropical climate. We went into the barber's shop under the Bromfield House, for he said: "I must be shampooed daily, or I should die." The eulogy on Webster, I think, was to be delivered on Tuesday. This was on Saturday, and the intervening Monday was to be consumed in the journey to Hanover. I said to him, "Of course your eulogy on Webster is completed." He drew himself up to his full height, and laying his hand gently on my shoulder, he said, "Mr. ——, as I live, not a word of that eulogy is written." Yet it was delivered as announced—delivered without notes, fully written out and committed in the writing. I knew one instance in which he completed his lecture at the office a short time before the train started that was to carry him to his appointment. He left the manuscript on his desk, and gave the lecture, he said, as near verbatim as he desired to, and that without a scrap before him. He was very careful of the wording of his motions before the higher courts. His phraseology was always peculiar. Having written his motion on a scrap of paper, he usually crumpled it in his hand and threw it on the floor as he arose to address the bench. I have frequently picked up these jottings, and some of them I have to this day.

EARLY TIME-MEASURES.

Many of the appliances of our daily life are so common that we fail to realize the importance of the mission they perform, or the many perplexities which would result on our being deprived of them. "The timepiece may be almost said to be the mainspring of civilization. It is so intimately connected with all our wants, it is so completely the regulator of all our occupations, that we have become, as it were, its slaves, and we can no more imagine a state of social existence without it than we can imagine birds flying without wings." A writer in All the Year Round gives a history of horology, and a sketch of the various steps which have been taken in the invention of time-measures, from the first water clock of the Assyrians to the finished watch and clock of modern times.

The water clock existed before the overthrow of the first Assyrian Empire in the year 759 B. C., and we find, by the tradition of early Persian authors, that the use of it was general in Nineveh under the reign of Sardanapalus II., the first monarch of the Second Empire.

"This water clock was nothing more than a brass vessel of cylindrical shape, holding several gallons of water. A very small hole was bored in one of its sides, through which the liquid was allowed to trickle; and it was calculated that the vessel could empty itself about five or six times in a day. Under the reign of Phul, the royal palace of Nineveh, and each of the principal districts of the city, possessed a water clock of the same shape and capacity. They were filled together, or as nearly as possible together, at the signal of a watchman stationed aloft on a tower to proclaim the rising of the sun, and they remained all day in the keeping of officials, whose business it was to fill them as soon as they became empty. There was a regular staff of criers employed in connection with each of the time offices, and as often as the water clocks were replenished they sped through the streets shouting out the fact for the benefit of the townspeople. In this way a sort of rough computation of the flight of time was held. The intervals between the filling and emptying of the vessels were called 'watches,' and were, probably, of two hours' or two hours and a half's duration. But it is hard to suppose that the water clocks kept very steady pace with each other; the difficulty of making hand vessels of the same size, of drilling them with holes of precisely the same diameter, and of supplying them with water of just the same density, must have given rise to considerable irregularity in the working of these machines."

The first improvement made in the clepsydra, as this water clock was called, was in the year 558 B. C.

"About that time an Egyptian of Memphis added a dial with a hand to the clepsydra. The hand revolved on a pivot, and communicated with a string which was fastened to a float. As the water leaked out, the float fell with it, and the tension of the string caused the hand to move round with slight spasmodic jerks, something like those of the second hand on a watch of inferior make. This reform, meritorious enough in theory, proved somewhat deficient in practice; for the old difficulty about getting the clocks to keep step was doubled or trebled when the system became complicated with dial, needle, string and float. To insure simultaneous acting, the strings or wire of the different clocks ought to have been of the same length and force; the needles also ought to have been of a size and set on pivots exactly similar in point of height and circumference. And when all this had been obtained, there was still the question as to how to make float and string, string and needle act, in perfect unison. * * * * But, notwithstanding its drawbacks, the improvement was a very valuable one, if for no other reason than that it prepared the way for further changes, and led to the perfecting of the clepsydra by the substitution of a system of dented wheels for that already in use. The wheels were set at work on the water mill principle, and the addition of a second needle to the dial allowed the clock to mark the fractions of the different 'watches.' This was the ne plus ultra as far as the clepsydra was concerned; it dates from two hundred and fifty years before Christ, and Egypt, which had become the great mart of the new timepieces, exported them to the different countries of the East as rare curiosities and at fabulous prices."

WALKING WITH GOD.—Dr. H Bonar remarked in the late Evangelical Conference held in Stirling, Scotland, that he had been reading with interest the life of the Rev. M. Malan, late of France. He says:

"The main feature of his character was his close walk with God; and the foundation of that walk, as his biographer remarks, was 'an absolute personal assurance of the love of God' to himself.

"Two men in Scripture are said to have walked with God—Enoch and Noah; and the one was carried up that he should not see death, the other was carried over the waves of the flood. They walked by faith. All the different parts of man's natural life and movements are used by the Spirit to symbolize the spiritual. 'My foot standeth in an even place.' 'I will not sit with the wicked.' 'I will lay me down in peace.' 'Run with patience the race set before you.' 'I have leaped over a wall.' These are exceptional; the movement of a man's daily life is his walking. His whole life, in all its movements, small and great, are comprehended in this.

"This walk on earth is through storms and trials; but there is another walk when this is ended; and when the Lord comes 'they shall walk with me in white'—the walk of peace, and triumph, and glory—when the Lamb shall lead us to the living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes."

HOW TO GO TO JESUS.—Bishop Beveridge says: Once I went to Jesus, like a coxcomb, and gave myself fine airs, fancying if He was something, so was I; if He had merit, so had I; and used Him as a healthy man will use a walking staff, lean an ounce upon it or vapor with it in the air. But now He is my whole crutch; no foot can stir a step without Him. He is my all, as He ought to be, if He will become my Saviour; and He bids me cast not some but all my cares upon Him.

My heart can have no rest unless it leans upon Him wholly, and then it feels His peace. But I am apt to leave my resting place, and when I ramble from it my heart will quickly brew up mischief. Some evil temper now begins to boil, or some care would fain perplex me, or some idle wants to please me, or some deadness or some lightness creeps upon my spirit, and communion with my Saviour is withdrawn. When these thorns stick in my flesh, I do not try, as heretofore, to pick them out with my own needle, but carry all complaints to Jesus, casting every care upon Him. His office is to save, and mine to look for help.

If evil tempers rise, I go to Him as some demoniac; if deadness creeps upon me, I go a paralytic; if dissipation comes, I go a lunatic; if darkness clouds my peace, I go a Bartimeus; and when I pray, I always go a leper, crying, as Isaiah did, Unclean! unclean!

THE crops still continue to promise a heavy yield. No caterpillars as yet, and the season all that could be desired, with the exception of want of rain in certain localities.

Everything in St. Landry is beginning to look up. During the past week several parties from abroad have been among us, looking for lands; and two of our largest sugar plantations are about changing hands.

We reiterate that no better field is now presented for capital and enterprise than St. Landry. A moderate investment of capital in St. Landry lands now will secure a fortune in a few years hence.

Lands that will yield two hogsheads of sugar per acre, well improved, can be bought for a mere song. This is the time to invest, as the price of lands must increase very greatly in a few months.—Opelousas Journal, July 17.

FITS.—Perhaps it is not as generally known as it should be that salt put in the mouth will instantly relieve the convulsive movements in fits either of children or animals.

IT IS said that Berthold Auerbach will receive sixty thousand thalers clear from the copyright of his Villa on the Rhine.

GUARD AGAINST VULGAR LANGUAGE. There is as much connection between the words and the thoughts as there is between the thoughts and actions. The latter are not only the expression of the former, but they have a power to react upon the soul, and leave the stain of corruption there. A young man who allows himself to use one vulgar or profane word has not only shown that there is a foul spot upon his mind, but by the utterance of that word he extends that spot, and inflames it, till, by indulgence, it will pollute and ruin the soul. Be careful of your words and your thoughts.

If you can control the tongue that no improper words are pronounced by it, you will soon be able also to control the mind, and save it from corruption. You extinguish the fire by smothering it, or by preventing bad thoughts from bursting into language. Never utter a word anywhere which you would be ashamed to speak in the presence of the most refined female, or the most religious man. Try this practice a little while, and you will soon have command of yourself.

TRUE SCIENCE AND RELIGION.—Few men have attained a higher position in the walks of science than the late Michael Faraday. His reputation as a scholar, and especially as a chemist, was world wide. But not less was he marked as a disciple, and a humble follower of Christ. In various ways he maintained the walk and discharged the duties of a Christian with the utmost steadfastness, simplicity and propriety. In prayer he was singularly gifted, and usually in the quiet place of worship which he attended he was very fervent and effective. Disclaiming all merit in himself and ever ascribing all the glory to God, by whose grace he would often say, "I am what I am," he was a pattern of humility and Christian worth, and at the same time an example (which should abash the self-conceited and the proud who are often but tyros in real knowledge) of the fact that true science and true religion, like twin sisters, go in connection really and are inseparable. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him."—Christian Instructor.

IF YOU PLEASE, MAKE ME A CHRISTIAN.—I well recollect, in the course of my labors, a poor Hindoo youth, who followed me about the garden at the school, asking me to make him a Christian. I said, "It is impossible, my boy; if it is possible at all, it is possible only through the Lord Jesus Christ to make you a Christian. Pray to Him." How well I recollect the sweet voice of that boy when he soon after came to me and said, "The Lord Jesus Christ has taken His place in my heart." I asked, "How is that?" He replied, "I prayed, and said, 'O Lord Jesus Christ, if you please, make me a Christian!' And He was so kind that He came down from heaven, and has lived in my heart ever since." How simple and how touching! "Lord Jesus Christ, if you please, make me a Christian!" Can you say that you have made a similar appeal in your spirit as this poor Hindoo boy? And can you say, my young friends, that Jesus Christ has come down from heaven to live in your hearts?—Rev. Dr. Boaz.

THOUGHTS OF GOD.—Suppose two persons equally desirous to gain your affections—one far distant and not expecting to see you for a long time; the other always present with you, and at liberty to use all means to win your love, able to flatter and gratify you in a thousand ways. Still you prefer the absent one; and that you may keep him in remembrance you often retire by yourself to think of his love to you, and view again and again the mementoes of his affection, to read his letters, and pour out your heart in return. Such is now your case: the world is always before you, to flatter, promise and please. But if you really prefer to love God, you will fix your thoughts on Him, often retire for meditation and prayer, and recount the pleasant gifts of His providence, and especially His infinite mercy to your soul; you will read frequently His Holy Word, which is the letter He has sent you as really as if it were directed to you by name.—Payson.

THE Boston Transcript says: "Evidently the young gentlemen of Cambridge University (England) are not posted in modern geography, as they directed their answer to the challenge of the Harvard boys thus: 'Cambridge Univ., Harvard, Mass., U. S. A.' Our bright officials sent it up among the Shakers."

MY FIELD.

BY S. M. I. HENRY.

I turned the turf of a pasture old,
And sowed, upon the fragrant mold,
My hoarded grains of wheaten gold.

The little field grew fair and green,
And smiled in the autumnal sheen,
A summer dream, the hills between.

But those who saw it could not see
How beautiful it was to me,
Or what I hoped its fruit would be.

They did not know the toil and pain
That was the price of every grain;
They only saw the greening plain.

They said, "This wheat looks very fair,
But yet we think 'twill hardly bear
The winter cold." O heart of prayer

That broke within me as I heard!
How all my faith and hope were stirred,
Responding to each doubting word.

And as I laid me down to sleep
I said, the while I could not weep,
"In faith I sowed—I needs must reap."

But while I slept, all through the night,
The snow came down, with footstep light,
And hid the green field from my sight.

The morning sunlight, as it shone
Between white hills, looked down upon
A spreading plain of white alone.

All through the winter, closely sealed
To passers by, my little field
Its secret kept, still unrevealed.

The winter long! the winter cold!
When snows were gathered fold on fold—
Alas for green! alas for gold!

Alas for me! how could I know
My wheat would live beneath the snow?
Doubt, at my ear, kept whispering, "No."

Faith, like the snow birds, often came
And sweetly chirruped o'er the plain,
But, like them, ever went again.

Until at last, wearied, I thought,
"With honest purpose I have wrought,
So yield me much or yield me naught.

"O hidden field! my Master knows
The secret covered by the snows;
I wait the love that shall disclose."

Sketch of a Plain and Pointed Sermon.

MR. EDITOR: James F——s was a man of more than ordinary mind. He had not the advantages of an early classical education, nor of any education beyond rudimental. Yet he had peculiar gifts, studied for improvement, and was very useful as a preacher. His exegesis of Scripture was original, and so full of thought that persons remembered, thought of and talked of them. His sermons were original and peculiar. His sermons on the Great Wonder in Heaven, the Barren Fig Tree, and the Ants Rebuking the Sluggard, have not been forgotten by persons who heard them thirty or thirty-five years ago. His eloquence was powerful. He could move and sway a congregation seemingly at will. Now they weep, then they groan as if in agony, then they laugh, then they leap up as by one impulse, then they shout aloud for joy. Those who, for some reason or other, entertained strong prejudice against him, have been irresistibly carried on by his eloquence with the willing multitude.

He could reprove and rebuke sharply and "with authority."—While the parties felt it, they could not object to the time or manner of doing it. They would admit that it was righteous.

Wishing to rebuke and cure those who offered lame sacrifices to God, he had for his text: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain." Abel and Cain were representative men, and in their principles, faith and actions they represented the two classes of men that have been in the world ever since.—Every man is a follower of the one or the other.

Abel and Cain were going up to the place of worship. Their mode of worship required the offering of sacrifices, and there was some consultation as to what they would take to offer to God. Abel said he would take the best and fattest lamb in his flock; it was an offering to God, and the best he had was but a small return to Him from whom all blessings came. As it was to foreshadow the atonement for sin, it ought to be the best that could be found. Cain said he thought it would be very unwise to offer of the youngest and fattest; it is to be burned; why not offer an old sheep or an old cow? They would burn just as well. It would be getting rid of the old stock too. The young were needed, and ought to be preserved for future use. As for my part, I shall offer that pile of rotten corn. It will burn just as well, if not better, than sound corn; and we shall need all the sound corn to help us along.

So they felt and believed and acted. But God had respect unto Abel's offering, and blessed him; while Cain was rejected and cursed for his unbelief and dishonorable act.

Each of these men has his followers in this day, and they are known by their actions. The Conference sends a preacher to an appointment to labor for the good of the souls there. To enable him to do this promptly, constantly, cheerfully and faithfully, he and his family must be supported. He ought to receive such a support as would enable him to give his whole time to the work. For this support the followers of Abel come up with willing offerings of the best they have in money, provisions, milch cows and house, if necessary. Let him have a good house, or have a good parsonage, or give him good boarding. They want him to feel that his calling and talents and labors are appreciated by them. They wish to encourage him in this good work. They wish to relieve him of the burden and care of "providing for tables," so that when he goes out to work his spirits may not be depressed, and his dreams be of half-fed and half-clothed wife and children. They are whole-souled people, every one of them. They honor God with their substance, and God honors and blesses them.

But the followers of Cain, while they wish to be regarded as the friends of the church and ministry, have nothing good to give. They come to the stewards' meeting or to the quarterly conference with downcast looks. They are sorry they have no money to give the preacher, by which we understand they have nothing but gold or silver on hand—no depreciated bank bills to give him now, to be estimated at the full value of the figures on their face when the stewards have their final settlement with the preacher. The only house they have for the preacher is an old, dilapidated one at the back side of some large plantation, away from any road or any neighbors, and no way out to church that can be traveled with safety, so that if the preacher lets them put his family there they may not get to the church or Sunday school during the year. True, the roof leaks and the windows are free from sash, so that wind and rain and cold come in without obstruction. But then it's only the preacher and his family, and they are poor and get their living off of other people, and ought not to be choice—ought to be glad to get any place to stay. They could certainly stand it one year in that house. The rent, it is insisted, is not high. The owner asks but one-half what other people ask for houses. The preacher too, at odd times, could patch and mend the roof so as to stop the leaks; he could put sash in the windows and relay the hearths, and make the house quite comfortable.

So this is the sort of house and place they want to put their preacher in! Miserable souls!

As for the support of the preacher and family, one is willing to give a few bushels of corn if the brother will come or send for it; another would give a few pounds of bacon or lard if sent for; another would give a few chickens if the brother would bring his buggy next time he comes; another thinks the brother ought to have a cow to give milk, and if he will come or send for her he will let him have one. He cannot do much, but is willing to do what he can; and if they will all do their parts the preacher can be easily supported. Should the preacher get that cow he will find her to be old, poor and diseased, and will not give milk enough to pay for one-half the food that is necessary to winter her. The man sent her just to get rid of feeding her that winter, believing she would die before spring came. He did not send her to help or benefit the preacher, but to relieve himself of a burden in the old cow. And thus, to keep from spending a little gold or silver for the support of the preacher and his family, these Cain men are ready to put on the preacher old, dilapidated houses, old and diseased cows, and put him to immense trouble in going or sending for small parcels of corn, meat, lard, etc., to as many places as possible, when a little money of the right sort, at the right time, would enable him to get more and of better quality, with one-fifth of the trouble in sending or going for it. And they blow about what they have done for the preacher and his family!

If the preacher needs a horse these Cain men have just the horse for him—cheap as any man's horse. He would not take so little for him if he did not have so many on hand. If the money is raised you need not look any further. I have just the horse you want—answer every purpose. You can ride him—work him anywhere, from a plow to a gin; anybody, from a child to a man; real lady's horse. But if the preacher gets that horse you may set it down that he is cheated. Some defect, or that man would not be so willing to sell him. You will find him diseased or tricky.

If a collection for the preacher or for missions is taken up, and these Cain men have a counterfeit bill, or a bill on a broken bank, or bills under par, they are sure to go into the hat with a flourish. Thus all their offerings are lame, unsound and rotten!—What they do for the church and ministry is of no real advantage, but rather disadvantage to both.

To get back all, and more, from the preacher, they manage, in making a journey, to call and spend one or more nights—family, servants and horses, all—with the preacher, thus saving a tavern bill of $10 to $15. Or if the preacher lives in the county town, and they have to spend a week at court as juror or witness, as they cannot sleep well where there is so much noise and so much passing about, and as they are unfit for business when they do not sleep well, they stay with the preacher. They do so love to hear him pray, and sister has everything so neat! Everything is so quiet there! The secret moving was to save his tavern bill, and to get back from the preacher what he gave in that old cow and that depreciated bank bill!

I have been told that that sermon made a very deep impression on the minds of some persons. Some showed signs of having acted as the Cain men, but it was hoped a very decided reformation would take place with them. I wonder if some do not need such a sermon now.

It is asserted that the grasshoppers are so thick in Utah that they stop trains of cars, and that passengers sometimes have to get out and sand the track that the train may pass over the rails. The hoppers have eaten the field crops, and are now going for the peaches.

Le Nord quotes statistics showing that the deaths from drunkenness in England amount to 50,000 a year, of which 12,000 are females; in Germany to 40,000 a year; in Russia to 10,000; in Belgium to 4,000; and in France to 1,500.

The Methodist Episcopal Church North in the South.

Upon what Christian and scriptural ground does the Methodist Episcopal Church North expect to succeed in the South? We cannot and will not entertain nor discuss the possibility of a professed branch of the Christian church succeeding on any other than Christian principles. It is historic and notorious that the Methodist Episcopal Church North did by military violence seize and hold the churches of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, holding some of them still, and only giving up any under the stress of a peremptory order from the President. This act of ecclesiastical piracy was in open violation of the eighth and tenth commandments—"Thou shalt not steal," "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor anything that is thy neighbor's." If it is a robbery of God to withhold "tithes and offerings," surely it cannot be less so to seize and hold "houses" built for the worship of God. These commandments were written on stone to symbolize their perpetuity and everlasting obligation. Christ came not to destroy them, and He declared, "Whosoever break one of these least commandments shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven."

The Methodist Episcopal Church North did "rob" and "covet," but they have manifested, have "brought forth no fruits meet for repentance." So far from this, they have "gloried in their shame," have boasted of the success of their violent policy, and announce that they mean to "disintegrate and absorb," and obliterate from being a people whom they acknowledge to be the people of God, and a part of His visible church. How can such violence and such inconsistency prosper or claim the blessing of God?

"But they took the churches as a war measure." Is the Methodist Episcopal Church North a political State, a body politic? Can she make war with carnal weapons and adopt war measures? If this be so, does she not vitiate her title and claims to belong to Christ's kingdom, which "is not of this world," nor fights with "carnal weapons?"

It is patent to all the world that the Methodist Episcopal Church North did take the churches of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in New Orleans and elsewhere by the sword. When Bishop Ames came to New Orleans to take our churches he called together the official members of the Carondelet street church—the largest Methodist church in the city—and demanded that our churches should be surrendered to him. The official members objected "that he, as an officer of another church, had no jurisdiction over them." He replied that he claimed "no ecclesiastical jurisdiction over them, any more than over the Catholic or Episcopal churches, but that he came with an order from the United States Secretary of War, and by that authority he demanded the surrender of the churches." The official members replied "that as they held the property in trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church South they could not legally voluntarily give up that trust, and if they did so it must be under the stress of a compulsion they had no power, civil or otherwise, to resist; that the bishop must compel them." Whereupon the bishop appealed to the military, and the churches were taken precisely by the same authority and upon the same principles that Vicksburg and Richmond were taken.

This flagrant act was perpetrated, we are told, as a "war measure." This involves the corollary that the Methodist Episcopal Church North made war upon the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and as such claimed belligerent rights to capture and hold the property of the enemy in perpetuity, or until formally given up under treaty stipulations. That the Church North intended to make the capture complete, and the alienation of the property from the Church South perpetual, there can be no doubt from the fact that her representatives set forth a series of elaborate arguments against the restoration of the church edifices to the Church South. Now this ecclesiastical organization comes among us and claims to be a "branch of the true vine"—a part of the spiritual kingdom of Christ. Do her representatives suppose her antecedents and her belligerent attitude can ever be forgotten, or ever will or ever ought to be forgiven until she brings "forth fruits meet for repentance?" How can her representatives exhort those who may hear them "to love mercy, do justly, and walk humbly with God," when they themselves are guilty of covetousness and robbery? Can they prosper? We insist, from the lights and facts before us, that the Methodist Episcopal Church North must be either a body politic, and therefore has political rights—the right to declare war upon any organization, ecclesiastical or otherwise, that may by its acts justify such a declaration, and may claim all belligerent rights—or else she is but an ecclesiastical organization, and has no right to appeal to the sword as against a sister church, and in doing so has palpably stultified herself. Now in making these plain remarks upon the history of the events under consideration, we have not meant to say that all the ministers and members of her organization approved of these violent and anti-Christian proceedings.—We hope hundreds of her ministers and tens of thousands of her laity are far too Christian to approve of the measures of Bishops Ames and Simpson, and their appointees.

Rev. Dr. P. P. Neely and Thomas M. Johnston.

ACTION OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, JULY, 1869.

REV. P. P. NEELY, D. D., was born in Rutherford county, Tennessee, September 9, 1819, and died in Mobile, Alabama, November 9, 1868.

As a member of the Board of Trustees of the Southern University, our lamented brother was ever at the post of duty, seeking with fidelity and diligence to secure prosperity to the institution. Regarding the vigorous existence of the University as intimately allied to the intellectual and moral improvement of the youth of the South, the warm sympathies of his heart and the capabilities of his mind were offered as willing and efficient tributaries to the success of this noble institution of learning. Who of us present at the last meeting of the board can forget the ardent zeal manifested by our beloved brother in assisting the trustees and friends of the University to elevate her to that position of eminence and power to which she is justly entitled? By an appropriate resolution, offered by him and adopted by the board, all the presiding elders of the Mobile Conference were made trustees ex officio. The stirring and powerful oration delivered by him at the commencement of 1868 doubtless still lingers in the memory of many of the hearers.

Your committee submit the following preamble and resolutions for the action of the board:

WHEREAS, God in His providence has seen fit to take out of this world the soul of our deceased brother, Rev. P. P. Neely, D. D.;

AND WHEREAS, We cherish for his memory sentiments of fraternal and Christian esteem, and deeply sympathize with his bereaved family; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we endeavor to bow in humble submission and resignation to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we convey to his smitten household assurances of our remembrance of them in their deep and sore bereavement.

J. BANCROFT,
A. A. COLEMAN,
Committee.

THOMAS M. JOHNSTON was born in Orange county, North Carolina, February 19, 1802, and died in Greensboro, Alabama, March 25, 1869.

It is doubtless the impression of all who have associated with our deceased brother in the annual labors of this Board of Trustees that the Southern University has seldom if ever had a more devoted or efficient friend than T. M. Johnston. His time, talents and pecuniary aid were willingly contributed to secure ever-increasing prosperity to this institution, and the vacuum made by his death is deeply felt. Being remarkably cautious in devising and accepting measures, he was eminently qualified to give safe, sage and well matured counsel.

But those lips which have so often uttered words of sober and wise counsel are closed, and it becomes us to bow in humble and adoring submission to Him whose wisdom never errs, and whose actions are always right.

We recommend the adoption of the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, An inscrutable and all-wise Providence has removed by death from our midst our beloved and lamented brother, T. M. Johnston; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we cherish sentiments of submission and resignation under this afflictive dispensation of Divine Providence.

Resolved, That as a Board of Trustees we communicate to his sorrowing and bereaved family assurances of tender regard and sympathy.

J. BANCROFT,
A. A. COLEMAN,
Committee.

Division of the Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: It is known that the last Mississippi Conference appointed a committee on the subject of dividing its territory into two Conferences, and to report on that subject at the next session. The committee stands in the minutes as follows: "R. Abbey, J. A. Godfrey, R. J. Jones, Jr., John G. Jones, J. L. Forsyth, L. K. Barber, Stephen Johnson and J. E. Watts." It was thought best not to call this committee together until late in the year, as it would be too much labor and expense to have more than one meeting before Conference, because there were similar committees in the Memphis and Tennessee Conferences, whose action would be likely to influence ours. I have therefore been observing the actions of those committees, and corresponding with some of them. The subject is also being looked into by some of the brethren in the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences.

I was glad to see it recommended by the joint meeting of the Tennessee and Memphis Conferences that those Conferences, and also the Mississippi, Lonisiana, Mobile and Montgomery Conferences, appoint each a committee, to meet in Memphis just before the General Conference, to mature a harmonious plan of Conference lines, for those Conferences, for the action of the General Conference. A mutual and harmonious plan among those Conferences is obviously necessary.

If our committee meets before our Conference, as I presume it should, it will meet in Jackson, and probably in the month of October. Meanwhile, I would be glad to hear from my fellow-committee men any suggestion or information they may have to communicate on this subject. And it will also be regarded a favor if any one else, either in this or the adjoining Conferences, being interested in the general subject, place in my hands any suggestion or information they may wish the committee to consider.

I might add here that I am glad to see a disposition manifested to use State boundary lines for Conference lines to a greater extent than it is now done. So far as this can be conveniently done, it will obviously relieve us all from some inconveniences we now suffer.

This subject is important just now, because it is probable that the large increase in our numbers, by lay membership, will be considered a general reason for reducing the extent of Conference territory, and that the next General Conference, to sit next year, will likely rearrange the Conference lines of the Conferences above named, or some of them, to some considerable extent. These lines ought to be fixed, not for the advantage of any one Conference, but for the mutual benefit of all.

WOODVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY.

WOODVILLE, July 14, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The examination which closed the last session of the Woodville Female Seminary was commenced June 28, and was continued through three days. The pupils were examined in the primary branches in several departments of natural science, in mathematics, Latin and French. The Latin readings were properly done and justly translated. The French compositions were correct in structure, and the reading accurate in emphasis and accent.

Prizes were awarded for merit in several departments. The presentation of these prizes was intrusted to Mr. G. T. McGehee, who gracefully performed this delicate service in an address elevated in tone, earnest in manner, and vigorous and elegant in diction. The concert on the evening of the second day attested the careful teaching and artistic attainments of the pupils.

The instruction in music has been much fuller and more thorough than the performances of a single evening can express. An examination does not fully reveal the diligence and attainments of pupils, nor the faithfulness and competency of teachers. Specialness of occasion disturbs the self-poise of pupils, and the constraint of full dress and shrinking from public scrutiny prevent full play of faculty. People on trial are rarely easy. The worth and work of teachers cannot be told by the readiness and exactness of pupils in answering questions, nor indeed by anything which the ordinary examination can present. The true teacher helps the pupil to a higher and firmer intellectual and moral tone, to a wider reach of mind and a better method of thinking. The teacher helps the pupil to be true as well as correct, and educates as well as instructs. The examination days can show but little of this work. It must appear in the school life of the subject and in the life after school days. The ladies who have served in this school are real women, grown to womanhood through obedience to the truth and developed into teachers by providential appointment.

The principal is known to the members of the Mississippi Conference, and to many others, as a good scholar, a competent teacher, a man of much executive ability, and an earnest Christian. In this school the government is regulative, and not merely restrictive. The table is liberally served and the lodging arrangements such as minister to individual separateness and personal comfort. The curriculum is full and the instruction thorough. The religious teaching is wise and careful, and illustrated by consistent example. It is not said that this school is faultless, but it is no overstatement to say it is one of the best. The school is commended because it does its work honestly and well.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The following note from Rev. J. M. Franklin brings gratifying accounts of the good work on the Pleasant Hill and Manny circuit, Louisiana Conference:

"We have plenty of rain. The corn crop is safe, and the prospect for a large yield of cotton is truly flattering at present. It rejoices us still more to say that showers of divine grace continue to descend on this circuit. We have taken seventy-four members into the church to date, and I suppose there has been that number or more conversions, including backsliders reclaimed."

DOINGS OF DRINK.—The warden of the Massachusetts and other State prisons says: "During my eleven years' connection with the State prison, twenty-one persons were imprisoned for killing their wives, two for killing fathers, and one for killing his mother; and all but one were habitual drunkards, and were drunk when the crimes were committed. These men," he adds, "were not bad men, except when under the influence of liquor."

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Died, at his residence near Woodville, June 22, 1869, Colonel DANIEL HOARD.

His was a long life of worth and work, right in tone, abundant in activity, successful in detail and victorious in issue.

He was born in March, 1787, in Westminster, Massachusetts, and lived a little more than eighty-two years. He commenced life under conditions requiring right principles, firm purpose and hard work. These requirements he fulfilled, and won the manliness which God awards to well-doing.

He had hardly passed boyhood when his father died, leaving unsettled claims against himself. In manly honesty, true filial reverence and brotherly kindness Mr. Hoard resolved that his bereavement should not work pecuniary loss to others, that none should have cause to doubt the honor or question the business ability of the departed, and that no burden which he could remove should oppress his family. He went vigorously to work, earned wages and paid the debts. By this self denying labor he became truer, and secured to his brothers that nameless wealth possessed only by those who are not burdened by the substance nor touched by the shadow of debt.

Of the man who did this it could have been safely said: He was near the kingdom of heaven, and there would have been but little risk in predicting he would find it.

His rectitude and aptness for business commended him to an agent of the house of Hope & Co., of Amsterdam, and by this agent he was employed to superintend the surveying, sale and settlement of land in western New York.

He served with credit in the war declared against England in 1812, and bore a colonel's commission from Daniel D. Thompkins, the then governor of New York. He aided in building the Welland Canal, and in 1834, while superintending the construction of a railroad at Sidney Mines, in the Island of Cape Breton, he resolved to be a Christian. He was thoroughly penitent, surrendered himself to Christ and became a redeemed, saved man. He joined a Wesleyan society at Sidney Mines, and in less than two years afterward removed to New Orleans and became a member of Poydras street church, then served by Rev. Mr. Travess. While in New Orleans Mr. Hoard was a steadfast worker in his church, and faithfully served it as steward.

In 1839 he settled in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, and there remained until his death. The energy of former days was still in him, and declared itself in helping to complete the West Feliciana Railroad, and in directing the work known as the Raccourci Cut-off, by which the channel of the Mississippi river was directed and the travel around a long peninsula avoided.

While in Wilkinson county he held his membership in the Methodist church at Woodville, of which he was for many years a steward. His Christian life was a healthy, working, growing life, unobtrusive and quietly honest. I have seen autograph records of his inner life, which tell of earnest communion with God, and in which are fervent supplications, devout thanksgiving and solemn dedications of himself to his Lord. These documents are superscribed "Holiness to the Lord," and bear various dates. They were written in the truest and most real moments, and furnish glimpses of a spirit alone with God, made reverent by the felt presence of the Everlasting and purified by the touch of the Infinite. The man who thus sought God and communed with Him would not be unreal afterward.

Men are seen fullest in domestic retirement. The wrappage of conventionality is cast off and the man is seen in undress. By those who thus saw Mr. Hoard he was believed to be tender, considerate and unselfish. The best men of the community in which he lived believed in his worth, and trusted and honored him.

In his Christian life there was no startle, no flash, but steadfast performance of duty as he knew it. He was not a smooth talker, but an honest worker; not a fine sayer, but a useful doer.

Loss and sorrow came to him, and he meekly bore them. His last son was called from earth eight months before the summons came to him, and these were months of silent sadness, but of humble submission to God's will.

The woe and the weary waiting are ended. His work is done.—Peace to his memory, and the blessing of the God of the lonely rest upon his widow and bereaved kindred.

WOODVILLE, July 10, 1869.

Reasons Why the Cup is Forbidden to the Laity in the Church of Rome.

The Council of Constance—memorable for the murder of John Huss—was the first Ecumenical Synod which forbid the cup of the eucharist to the laity. This was in the years 1414-15. The occasion of its determination arose from the fact that Jacobel of Prague advocated the communion in both kinds, which custom had long fallen into desuetude.

"According to St. Augustine," said the fathers of the council, "Christ left the communion quite undecided as to the time; whilst, as to manner, a great miracle could be adduced in favor of communion in one kind. Some monks wished to take the communion in both kinds. The priest having broken the bread, it came to pass that the communion plate was filled with blood; and when the priest afterward put together the two pieces of the sacramental wafer, the blood immediately returned to it, and not a drop remained in the plate. The celebrated Alexander Hales verified the truth of this miracle, and the question of holding back the cup was thus decided." But these holy fathers were not content to rest the matter solely upon this irrefragable proof. They adduced their strongest arguments. Gerson, the illustrious chancellor of the University of Paris, the master spirit of the council, and the first man of his age, "discussed the matter in a double point of view, of the Scriptures and the Tradition; and enumerated the inconveniences which would arise from allowing all believers to participate in the cup. 'There are various dangers of different kinds, said he, likely to arise from this practice, which ought to be guarded against: 1. The danger of the wine being spilt in taking it from place to place; 2. The danger of its being frozen, or insufficient in quantity; 3. The danger of its turning sour, in which case the pure blood of Jesus Christ would not be there; 4 The danger of being spoiled, or of flies being gendered in it by heat; 5 The danger of some of it adhering to the long beards of the laity; 6 Where could vessels be found in sufficient abundance for the communion of twenty thousand persons? 7. The laity would suppose that they were of equal dignity with the priests.' Besides all this, Gerson asserted 'that the learned men, doctors and prelates, who had inculcated a contrary practice, had falsified the Scriptures, and were damned; that the virtue of this sacrament does not reside more in the consecration than in the participation; and that, finally, the Roman Church, and the general and particular councils, had been mistaken." Doubtless the seventh seemed to Gerson, as it does to us, the strongest argument for this violation of our blessed Lord's commands.

The chancellor carried the day, and on June 15, 1415, the council decreed this wonderful canon: "The sacred council wishing to provide for the safety of the faithful, after mature deliberation, declares and decides that, although Jesus Christ instituted and administered to His apostles the venerable sacrament in two kinds, of bread and wine, nevertheless (!) the laudable authority of the sacred canons, and the practice countenanced by the church, have held and still hold that this sacrament ought to be received only when fasting, unless in case of malady, or some other necessity admitted by the law of the church—a custom which has reasonably been introduced in order to avoid certain perils and scandal. In the same way, although in the primitive church this sacrament was received by the faithful in both kinds, yet it can be proved clearly that afterward it was received in that mode only by the officiating priest, and was offered to the laity under the form of bread alone, because it must be believed, without hesitation or doubt, that the whole body and blood of Jesus Christ are truly contained in the bread as well as in the wine. Wherefore," etc.

Such are the arguments used to establish this dogma, and this the decree which then authoritatively forbade the cup, and now forbids the priest to obey Christ's commands; a decree which has given birth to innumerable volumes, and caused oceans of blood to be shed. The obstinacy of the Romanists, on this secondary point of doctrine, contributed, under God, in no small degree to the success of the Reformation. If the council, which declared itself infallible, had been endowed with second sight, it may be doubted whether it would have acted so as to separate from Romanism one-half of Christian Europe, not in order to maintain the integrity of tradition, or the tenets of the church, but merely to preserve a uniformity of practice.

In the decree we see that this corrupt church can, when it sees fit, not only disregard the primitive antiquity, but even the injunctions of the Saviour himself. Being infallible, of course what she decrees at one time can never be doubted or nullified, and this, and her thousand other abominations, must stick to her like a Nessus shirt, until she is destroyed, or until she retracts and acknowledges her manifold errors, both of doctrine and practice.—Southern Churchman.

CAST A LINE FOR YOURSELF.—A young man stood listlessly watching some anglers on a bridge. He was poor and dejected. At last approaching a basket filled with wholesome looking fish, he sighed:

"If, now, I had these, I would be happy. I could sell them at a fair price, and buy my food and lodging."

"I will give you just as many and just as good fish," said the owner, who chanced to overhear his words, "if you will do me a trifling favor."

"And what is that?" asked the other eagerly.

"Only to tend this line till I come back. I wish to go on a short errand."

The proposal was gladly accepted. The old fisherman was gone so long that the young man began to be impatient. Meanwhile the hungry fish snapped greedily at the baited hook, and the young man lost all his depression in the excitement of pulling them in; and when the owner of the line returned, he had caught a large number. Counting out from them as many as were in the basket, and presenting them to the young man, the old fisherman said:

"I fulfill my promise from the fish you have caught to teach you, whenever you see others earning what you need, to waste no time in fruitless wishing, but to cast a line for yourself."—Home Monthly.

ABSENT MEN.—We are inclined to believe, from the manner in which it first reached us, the anecdote of Sir Thomas Strange, the Indian judge, who found, on paying a visit, that his friend was not in, and that he had forgotten his own name. 'I'll call again; never mind my name.' 'That's strange, sir.' 'So it is, my man; you've hit it!'—and he went away, leaving the servant quite in the dark. Robert Simson used to sit at his open window on the ground floor as deep in geometry as a Robert Simson ought to be. There he would be accosted by a beggar; he would rouse himself, hear a few words of the story, make his donation, and dive. Some wags one day stopped a mendicant on his way to the window with, 'Now do as we tell you, and you will get something from that gentleman, and a shilling from us besides. He will ask you who you are, and you will say, Robert Simson, son of John Simson, of Kirtonhill.' The man did as he was told. Simson gave him a coin, and dropped off. He soon roused himself, and said, 'Robert Simson! son of John Simson of Kirtonhill! why, that is myself! That man must be an imposter!' Lord Brougham gives this anecdote.—Advertiser.

CHAFFING MATCH BETWEEN WELLINGTON AND BROUGHAM.—One day, when his lordship had driven to the House in the vehicle of his own invention, which Robinson, the coachmaker, had christened after him, he was met in the robing room by the Duke of Wellington, who, after a few how, accosted him, 'I have always hitherto lived under the impression that your lordship will go down to posterity as the great apostle of education, the emancipator of the negro, the restorer of abused charities, the reformer of the law; but no—you will hereafter be known only as the inventor of a carriage.' 'And I, my Lord Duke, have always been under the delusion that your grace would be remembered as the hero of a hundred battles, the liberator of Europe, the conqueror of Napoleon; but no—your grace will be known as the inventor of a pair of boots.' 'O, the boots,' said the Duke, 'I had forgotten them. You have the best of it.'

THE son of the late King Theodorus of Abyssinia, who has been at school in England, will be sent to India, as the climate of England proves unfavorable to his health.

How to Select a Saddle Horse.

R. H Dyer, a well known English veterinary surgeon, gives the following directions about saddle horses:

"It has been asserted that an oblique shoulder is indispensable in a riding horse, and anything approaching to straightness is considered objectionable. These remarks may be well received, but they do not convey all that is necessary to know. It may be asked how or in what manner, speaking mechanically of course, an oblique shoulder is superior to a straight one. In order to explain this fully and satisfactorily the reader's attention must be directed for a moment to a steelyard—a contrivance made of iron, which is capable of testing the weight of hay, straw and other commodities. The small weight, used as a balancing power, is placed at some given point, so as to indicate the value of that which is weighed. If placed at the extreme point of the "yard" it will exert as much influence, although weighing but four ounces, as fifty-six pounds of hay or other matter would at the other end. This weight becomes less and less as it approaches the opposite end of the steelyard, so that when placed at one end it, as it were, weighs nothing, and when placed at the opposite end it will be found equal to fifty-six pounds in weight. The same may be shown by placing a stone (fourteen pounds) weight upon a walking stick. If the stone weight be held upon the stick, close to the hand, which holds it horizontally, of course it is easily held; let it be carried or move gradually toward the point of the stick, and it will soon occur to the operator that he must throw it down, as it is impossible for him to hold it many moments in that position. Another example, for the sake of illustration, may be mentioned. Take an ordinary kitchen poker, hold it by the knob (horizontally, of course) for some minutes, and then hold it in the centre, and it will be learned that in the former mode it will be retained scarcely more than five minutes, while in the latter it may be retained and held an indefinite time. Now we will endeavor to apply these remarks to a horse and his rider.

"A horse with a straight shoulder, supposed to be up to fourteen or fifteen stone with fox hounds, is often placed in difficulties. For example—presuming that the rider's weight should be placed immediately over the hindermost dorsal bones, and a portion of the lumbar bones, that weight will be in such a position as to admit of all his movements to be carried on with ease to himself and his rider; but if the rider is compelled to sit close to the neck, as he would have to do upon a straight-shouldered horse, then his weight would materially interfere with the motion of the front limbs. There would be a corresponding influence upon his movements that we found in the position of the weight of the steelyard.—Doubtless fourteen stone placed near to the neck will have as much influence as eighteen or twenty stone has when placed in the centre of the back, and this will be apparent in ordinary motion. How much more, then, will it be apparent in leaping? If we take this for granted, we may readily believe how difficult it is for an animal to carry a fourteen-stone man over a large fence. Unless his hind quarters are proportionably strong he is likely to fail in carrying him safely over the jump. Again, if a horse with a defective or straight shoulder is ridden down a steep hill, the entire weight is thrown upon the front limbs and neck, which must of necessity impede their action, in addition to which the rider is rendered uncomfortable and occasionally subject to falls. Further, in taking a deep drop, if the animal is overweighted at the shoulders, he generally drops upon his knees, or falls altogether in coming to the ground, unless the rider has the power of keeping himself well back, which he cannot possibly do in the same manner he would if he were sitting in a proper position, with sufficient obliquity of shoulder. It is generally believed if a horse possesses strong hind quarters it is a compensation for a defective forehand. This is an error. A horse has propelling power, so to speak, in the front as well as in the hindmost limbs. I do not say that a powerful hind quarter will not, in some measure, make up for deficiency before, but not to the extent imagined by some persons. It may be accepted as truth that every quarter of an inch nearer to the cervical vertebra a rider is obliged to sit is an insuperable objection. The only way to get over this difficulty as regards the position of the rider is to have recourse to the obsolete crupper. Although it is old-fashioned, it tends to prove that our forefathers had good and sufficient reasons for using it. Many other illustrations might be adduced to prove the truth of these observations, were it necessary. This reminds me of a conversation which took place some time since with an eminent horse painter. He showed me his portfolios of celebrated horses, and in speaking of a straight-shouldered animal, he employed the hackneyed phrase, 'The scapula has not room to play.' I interrogated him as to his meaning, but he could afford no explanation. After explaining to him my views pretty much in the same language as I have used here, he acknowledged it was novel to him, and, looking at it mechanically, it must be correct."

THE NAMBY-PAMBY CHRISTIAN.

The essence of religious namby-pamby is to evade being anything in particular, from a misty idea that it is very Christian to be nothing in particular; that Christianity consists in watering liberally every definite state of mind with its opposite, saying that you love dearly the people you are going to rebuke, that you see much to rebuke in the people whom you love dearly, that the sword of the Spirit is a capital thing to brandish in the air, but should never be really used—as if "the whole creation travailed until now" with such exquisite anguish that it becomes a Christian to administer and conform to it and soothe its pangs.

The idea that it is a Christian sort of thing to be gelatinous and without distinctly marked characteristics, that twaddle with a pious sound is a great deal more pious than strong convictions which anybody with a head must either accept or reject, and cannot get confused about, rests, we suppose, if on anything but weakness of character, on that language of our Lord's about God's having hid from the wise and prudent what He had revealed unto babes, and St. Paul's about "milk for babes," and God's having caused the foolish things of this world to confound the wise. But really nothing can be more distinct than the milk of babes and the farinaceous messes of namby-pamby religion. If anything is clear in the world, it is that Christianity—which means Christ—separated in the sharpest way the good and evil, the true and false, the bitter and sweet elements which were fermenting together, and gave the world new principles of discrimination and combination. There was nothing of the modern namby-pamby either in the 'Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!' or in the rebuke of St. Peter, 'Get thee behind me, Satan; for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.' There was nothing of the modern namby-pamby in St. Paul's avowal that he had withstood Peter to the face, and had never ceded a single iota of his own authority to those that seemed 'to be pillars;' nor in the denunciation of the Laodiceans for being neither hot nor cold, nor indeed in any single clause of any single verse in the New Testament. The perfect simplicity and energy of the Gospel are its greatest characteristics. Absence of simplicity and energy, composite indistinctness, and faintly beating pulses, are the chief characteristics of modern religious namby-pambyism. If there be modesty and lowliness in mixing up everything together, and, therefore, mastering no one Christian conviction or emotion distinctly, then the jargon which talks so much of speaking 'the truth in love' and such like phrases may be modest and lowly; but such modesty and lowliness is just the opposite of what is child-like. Nothing is less child-like than to fringe the expressions of direct feelings and thoughts with phrases of ornamental piety which effectually disguise the want of explicitness in those feelings and thoughts. It is in the wisdom of the heart that Christianity is child-like, and nothing is less like the wisdom of the heart than this elaborate religiousness in all aspects of your subject which are not uppermost, and which demand no clear language, by way of excusing yourself from the need for giving vigorous and lucid expression to that side of faith which is uppermost, and does demand clear language. It is one of the greatest faults of the bishops of our English Church that, more than any other religious leaders, they indulge in these flabby excuses for not leading—more than Roman Catholic bishops, more than eminent dissenters, either heterodox or orthodox. Compare Mr. Dale's powerful address to the Congregationalists, or Mr. Martineau's to the Unitarians with most of our episcopal charges, and we shall see at once how large the element of mere syrup is in the latter. It is a fatal mistake. When we read Bishop Butler we find the only evidence that he speaks the truth 'in love' in the self-evident fact that he loves the truth with his whole heart, and lets us see it. Our modern bishops are too apt to prepare syrup of truth, which is not truth at all, and, what is worse, is not sweet after the first honey flavor—for it is sure to turn sour on the stomach.—Spectator, London.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE STAUNTON, VIRGINIA, WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE.—This college is under the direction of Rev. William A. Harris, and is under the patronage of the Baltimore Conference, South. To those of our friends who send their children for education to that part of the South we can commend it most heartily. See advertisement.

THE MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE, ABINGDON, VIRGINIA.—The Rev. Dr. Arbogast is the president, and the Rev. W. G E. Cunnyngham one of its professors. No greater commendation is necessary, unless it be the health and cheapness of that southwest corner of Virginia where the college is located. See advertisement.

READVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY, AT BATON ROUGE.—This is one of the oldest institutions in the State. Its graduates are, many of them, to be found filling the highest sphere of woman and the noblest in earth. Its terms are fully set forth in advertisement on seventh page. We have had occasion often to commend it to the notice of our people who have daughters to be educated.

MR G. W. W. GOODWYN, No. 62 Camp street, dealer in stoves and manufacturer of tinware, presents to the public a calm statement of his articles on sale, and we can as calmly confirm all that he says. See advertisement.

TO THE MOBILE CONFERENCE.

Resolved, That all the ministers of the Mobile Conference be requested to preach on the subject of denominational schools and education, and that the claims of the Southern University and Centenary Institute be brought before their several congregations between this date and the first Sunday in August next; and that this resolution be published in the Nashville and New Orleans Advocates.

THE Bishop of London stated recently that five thousand curates are employed throughout England, who receive £500,000 for their support. The average salaries, then, are but £100, or $500 in gold.

IT WAS no disgrace to Christianity that Peter denied his Master, and that Judas betrayed Him; but if the Evangelist had attempted to hide these facts, the Gospel would then have sustained a real injury.

THE CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

On the 15th instant the Board of Trustees of this venerable institution met at Jackson, Louisiana. The State of Louisiana founded this college in 1825. In 1845 it was sold to Edward McGehee and others for the sum of $10,000. These gentlemen bought it for the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and with it all its rights, privileges and immunities. The name of the institution was then changed to the present style—Centenary College of Louisiana. A Board of Trustees and Visitors, consisting equally of laymen and ministers, was then appointed by the Mississippi Conference, and all the interests of the Conference college which had been under the conduct of Dr. Thornton, at Brandon, were merged in this one at Jackson.

When the Mississippi Conference was divided into the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences the college became equally the charge of both; and up to 1860 it had gradually, under this fostering care, grown to be one of the most useful and popular institutions of learning in the Southwest. The Conferences built a central building, at a cost of say $70,000—one of the most imposing and admirably planned structures for college purposes in the whole country. They also raised for the endowment of this institution some $70,000. When the war broke out its halls were well filled, and its graduates were to be seen in the Legislatures of Mississippi and Louisiana, in their courts, pulpits, and in every department of professional, industrial and commercial life. Few colleges have effected so much good, or occupy a stronger place in the affections of our people.

The war made havoc of the endowment fund; and since the war certain defects in the ornate parts of the central building have come to light. These defects affect mainly the cornice and the capitals of the columns. We published last week that the building was unsafe. After a careful examination we believe this statement to have been an exaggeration. The real building—that is, its walls, rooms, etc.—is as strong and serviceable as ever. A few thousand dollars will be required to put slate or flag stones in the cornice and the capitals, and the whole will be as good as ever. Our friends were unnecessarily alarmed, and our notice was based upon their views.

The Board of Trustees have determined that this college shall be fully repaired, manned and endowed And if position, importance to the South of an institution of high grade, a large number of strong friends, and the patronage of two Annual Conferences are worth anything, it will be a work not difficult to accomplish. If we do not greatly mistake the planters and merchants of the South, they will have their sons educated at home, rather than in Europe or New England. There is no other guarantee for the maintenance of right, political or religious, but an education, the most liberal, of the youth of a State. This is the element that must at last be relied upon for obtaining an equal share in the control of the government, or of the economical wealth of the country, not to say of the world. Whatever amount of mere money our children may have, without disciplined brains, scientific knowledge and the art of speaking concisely, exactly, and with some felicity of expression, they will assuredly fall behind in the race of nations and centuries.

It is a part of morality to develope and perfect every power which God has given us for good. Pure religion and sound principles are not defeated in their influence or checked in their force by polished and thorough scholarship. It was not intended that these should be divorced, which together are so mighty for the ennobling a man or the guiding a people. We want mental training and sound knowledge on the farm, in the foundry, in the factory, in commerce, in mining, in the machine shop, as well as in medicine, at the bar or in the pulpit. We need this mental cultivation to fully unlock the immense material resources of this rich Southern country. Yet without mental power combined with mechanical skill and scientific knowledge, the richer we are the greater prey we shall be to the surrounding States and nations.—Colleges are the fountain of schools; teachers go before scholars.

All this Methodist Conferences have ever appreciated. They have been foremost to start schools and to found universities. The Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences will therefore make an appeal, through the president of the Board of Trustees, to the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and to the friends of education in the South, in the behalf of Centenary College, which they cannot doubt will meet with a hearty and prompt response.

PASTORAL VISITING.

Preaching and visiting are the two hemispheres of the pastorate. It is one-sided and incomplete without both. The leading duty may be in the pulpit, but generally that will be a barren ministry which is not attended with stated and diligent visiting from house to house. These two branches of pastoral activity should be developed harmoniously and with regard to their relative importance. If preaching is the main business, visiting should not so engross the time and strength as to prevent habitual study and adequate preparation. At least half of the working time, which should always be the earliest and freshest hours, is needed for the study.—There is a difference in men in this respect, and differences arising from age and educational advantages. Some are gifted with natural impromptu eloquence, and some are so well stored with the materials of instruction that they can give more time to personal intercourse with the people. The amount of visiting must depend in some measure upon the pastoral charge, the extent of territory and numbers, and the condition and circumstances of the membership.

The pastor will sometimes feel compelled to make a compromise between his studies and out-door labors, and to sacrifice something in mental cultivation and pulpit preparation for the sake of going about to do good. The most useful minister is not always the most eminent preacher. Even where the preaching is most attractive and excellent, the entire lack of visiting is always a calamity. A man who is called to preach, and not to visit, certainly has no business in a pastoral charge, and it is a gross injustice to the church to put him there. The measure of the duty varies with the man and the circumstances of his charge. He must preach and study, but he must also visit. After fairly providing for his own mental and spiritual growth, and the efficiency of the pulpit, the pastor must visit as much as he can. Inadequate support and feeble health may hinder in many cases; but faithful and frequent intercourse with the people is often a remedy for both of these evils. Many a sickly and half-supported preacher would find almost certain relief by stirring about among his flock, and by coming in personal and social contact with his hearers.

Pastoral visiting is to many preachers the most disagreeable, as it is to all the most laborious, part of their work. The heaviest cross is in this inexorable round of social religious intercourse. It is also exhausting to mind and body, and burdensome in the last degree, to some sensitive organizations. There are those who are by nature better qualified for this duty than others, and who seem to be eminently called to be pastors. Without being particularly eminent in the pulpit, they stand unrivaled here. They have the conversational powers, the social temperament, and that inimitable art of sympathy which disarms prejudice and secures the good will of all. With them visiting is a pleasure and an enjoyment of the highest order, and is the field of their achievements and triumphs.

By painstaking, however, every preacher may become at least a tolerable adept, and we see no reason why this part of his work should not be made as much the subject of study and prayer as his preparations for the pulpit. It may be that labor for which he is least adapted, and that which is most onerous and repulsive, but those circumstances do not excuse neglect. He is required to take up this, his peculiar burden and cross, resolutely and with a single eye. In this department, as in the pulpit, many must resign themselves to mediocrity; but if they do their best they will be accounted good and faithful servants. The horrible affectation of being a great preacher and no pastor is to be shunned as the worst and most fatal of clerical conceits. It must be very great preaching indeed which shall in any measure atone for negligence in visiting. A greatness that is inconsistent with this duty, whether in the elaborateness of preparation or indisposition to social converse, is a misfortune to its possessor and to the church Wesley and Asbury, amid all their great offices and affairs, spent much time in the visitation both of classes and families. The great preacher, other things being at all equal, is most generally the faithful pastor. Visiting contributes largely to the point and interest of the sermon, and he who does none of it lacks a most important means of preparation for his Sunday services.

Unreasonable demands, however, are often made upon the pastor's time and strength. In a membership of from two to four hundred, widely scattered in city or country, the most industrious can scarcely afford to visit each family oftener than from two to four times a year. Here and there an inconsiderate brother or sister regards it as a case of evident neglect if the stated visit is not much more frequent than this. They forget that sermons do not grow on trees, and that the sick, the afflicted, the weak and erring require particular attention. Whether from an affectionate desire, from a fault-finding spirit, or from ignorance of the preacher's whole work, this over-exaction is made, the pastor must judge for himself, seek the golden mean, and do his duty in the fear of God.

A little consideration on the part of the heads of families will contribute greatly to the benefit of the pastor's visit, and often relieve him of much embarrassment. It is not only a social, but it is a religious visit. Religious conversation and prayer are the main purpose. Then it must generally be a brief interview. The Bible, at such times, should not be out of place, so as to require a good long hunt to find it, and where at all convenient the whole family, the children especially, should be present. It is never out of place to invite your pastor to read the Scriptures and pray with the family. This he desires to do if he is about his Master's work, and an intimation that it is expected and agreeable will relieve his diffidence and make the occasion one of pleasure as well as of spiritual profit. In many ways the people can kindly assist their preachers in this duty of visiting, and by thoughtful considerateness they can smooth many of the rougher aspects of a duty which is severely trying to the most devoted and conscientious ministers of the Gospel.

SUPPORT OF THE BISHOPS.

As the sessions of the Annual Conferences are fast approaching, I deem it proper to invite the attention of the church to the importance of meeting, immediately, the apportionments for the support of our bishops

At the General Conference of 1866 their salaries were duly fixed, and distributed among the several Annual Conferences, according to the ability of each.

Without any well-matured plan for collecting the amount necessary for their support, they entered on the duties assigned them, and with an energy commensurate with the demands of the church, they pronounced the work in every direction Their zeal has known no bounds but their wasting strength, while the sacrifices they have endured in protracted absence from home, demanded by the importance of their ministry in fields remote, have brought the church under obligations to minister to their temporal wants

The current fiscal year commenced with the 1st of June, and the money necessary to be collected for their support must be raised previous to the Annual Conferences. While each preacher, having charge of a circuit or station, is expected to collect the amount apportioned to his field of labor, yet by common consent, not only is the proper distribution of the several amounts to be made among the charges by the presiding elder, but to him is especially intrusted the duty of seeing that no deficiency occurs in the district over which he presides.

Many of the presiding elders are now entering upon their fourth round of quarterly meetings. We beg each one to charge himself fully with his duty to the chief pastors of the church in this regard, and not to leave any quarterly meeting until the collection for the support of the bishops is taken up. With no other source of support than the voluntary contributions of a grateful church, they must not be forgotten.—A. H. Redford, agent, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE LATE REV. DR. DORMAN.

Dr. Dorman, whose death we announced in our last issue, was one of our most devoted and successful pastors. We have known him well for many years. Our acquaintance with him began in 1835 or 1836. We were then traveling on Augusta circuit (Virginia,) Baltimore Conference. We had a special meeting at Mount Sidney, when our departed brother, who was then removing with his family from Virginia to Alabama, was detained a day or two by an accident He was then a local preacher—he made himself known to us, and took part in our services. In 1843 we met again—he was then stationed at Greensboro, Alabama. We labored together at a camp meeting in Perry county, near the residence of the late venerable L. Q. C. De Vampert, who had a tent on the ground Dr. Lovick Pierce was present, but unable to preach, because of temporary indisposition. The next year, having been transferred from the Texas to the Alabama Conference, we went down to Livingston, to assist Brother Dorman in a glorious meeting, which he was holding at that place, which was then in his circuit. In 1846 he was stationed in Franklin street, and we in St. Francis street, Mobile—so that we were then together very frequently, and very pleasant was our intercourse. We met annually (one sad year excepted) at the sessions of the Alabama Conference, of which he was the faithful and honored secretary for some twenty years. We met also at the sessions of the General Conference, of which he was several times a member We found him to be of a most genial spirit, kind, ardent in his friendship, popular in his manners, successful in his pulpit labors, a most diligent and devoted pastor, a man greatly beloved by the people whom he served, as well as by his brethren in the ministry. We are deeply affected with the thought that we shall never again see his beaming countenance, hear his cheerful voice, or feel the cordial grasp of his hand, at our annual convocations. His wife and several of his children preceded him to paradise; but others still remain to mourn his removal and to share our sympathies. Of course, his end was peaceful. The Rev. A. S. Andrews, pastor of St. Francis street church, Mobile, writes us, Mobile, July 5: "Our friend and brother in Christ, Rev. Thomas W. Dorman, D. D., is no more. His health has been declining rapidly since Conference. Two weeks ago he perceived that his end was near, he called his physician to him and asked him for a candid expression of his opinion in reference to his approaching dissolution, and when informed that he might die at any moment, he calmly said: 'It is all right—I am ready to go.' He continued to grow worse until the night of the 2d instant, when, at ten o'clock, he fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle or a sigh. His remains were follow to the tomb, on the next even from the St Francis street Method Episcopal Church, by a large course of mourning friends."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

MR. EDITOR: Some weeks since the writer observed an article in ADVOCATE over the signature of presiding elder, which, it is hoped may be followed by similar productions. There is one portion of district, however—and that, perhaps may become the most important point at no far distant period—referred to. I allude to the town Rodney, which numbers about thousand inhabitants—the town vicinity. Two very destructive have occurred in the town since writer has known this place. first was many years since, and stroyed more than $100,000 of property. The second was the first day of last April, and stroyed $150,000 worth of prop Notwithstanding these disas perhaps there is not a more flour ing town (in all save religion its size in the South. In it are schools, two of which are for children of freedmen, and are un by Miss Hall, of Massachusetts Miss Darrow, of Illinois. The a private school for colored dren, taught by Rev. Swan merly a slave. Of the other s four are taught by Protestants two by Roman Catholics. The son I mention so particularly schools is, that if the children properly trained under God need be no fears entertained the future of the church and uation. In 1848, when I first to this place, while a student medicine, I regularly preached instructed the children. I practicing physic here, from 18 1853, I removed to Louisiana, w I resided until three years l Hease and contents were consu by fire on Sicily Island. Our members of this place are few feeble. We have no house of ship, but depend upon the Bap and Presbyterian friends for a sanctuary. The Odd Fellows have session of the building form owned by us. Our old trust Frank Jones, Dr. S. McCall Brother Layton, have joined church above. A committee appointed by Fayette quarterly ference to look into the papers taining to the property of the M odist church of this place, but not yet reported, notwithstand their appointment more than years since, when Brother W Watkins was presiding elder am ready to officiate as a min on any and every occasion, and embrace every opportunity for good. Last month, by invitation the Presbyterians, I had the pl ure of addressing and conduc the singing for the little ones picnic held in this vicinity Friday after a similar one was by the Baptists. Thus it may seen that we, Protestants of section, move together har niously, but, sad to relate, the little Methodist hand occupies insignificant position as reg number and influence.

Some time since an effort made by the writer to obtain necessary Bibles, Testaments tracts to somewhat enlighten make better the ignorant and b ed. The Bible agent of New leans informed me it would be essary to organize a Bible soc There being one for the county ated at Fayette, sixteen miles tant, application was made to Presbyterian minister of that p agent of the Bible Society, for bo but without success. The Pres rian minister of this place, in sultation with some of his fri thought it expedient to defer formation of a Bible society next autumn, when more money expected in the country from co In the meanwhile the Roman C lics, as elsewhere, taking advan of the supineness of Protest have erected a handsome ed support a priest, have two sch and are so adroit that they in ate prayers to their various on little slips on papers con through the office to Protest

Is it not time to be stirring? If this is not to be a Protestant country it will be either Roman Catholic or infidel. May God help us.

ROENO.

THE AVITOR.

We have at last a description of the aerial steam carriage in San Francisco, of which we have heard so much by telegraph. The San Francisco Times describes it as follows:

The carriage, which is merely a large working model, is a balloon, shaped like a cigar, both ends coming to a point. It is thirty-seven feet long, eleven feet from top to bottom, and eight feet in width. These are the measurements at the centre of the balloon, from which point it gradually tapers off toward either end. Around the balloon lengthwise, and a little below the centre, is a light framework of wood and cane, strongly wired together and braced. Attached to this frame, and standing up as they approach the front of the carriage, are two wings, one on either side. They are each five feet wide at a little back of the centre of the carriage, and do not commence to narrow down until they approach the front, where they come to a point. These wings are made of white cloth fastened to a light framework, which is braced securely by wires. The main frame is secured in place by means of strong ribbons, which go over the balloon and are attached to corresponding portions of the frame on the other side. To the frame on the other side of the carriage is attached a rudder or steering gear, which is exactly the shape of the paper used in pin darts, four plans at right angles. This, when raised or lowered, elevates or depresses the head of the carriage when in motion; and when turned from side to side guides the carriage as a rudder does a boat. At the centre and bottom of the balloon is an indentation or space, left in the material of which it is built, in which the engine and machinery are placed on framework. The engine and boiler are very diminutive specimens, but they do their work handsomely. The boiler and furnace are together only a little over a foot long, four inches wide, and five or six inches in height. Steam is generated by spirit lamps. The cylinder is two inches in diameter, and has a three-inch stroke. The crank connects by means of cogwheels with tumbling rods, which lead out to the propellers, one on either side of the carriage. The propellers are each two-bladed, four feet in diameter, and are placed in the framework of the wings. The boiler is made to carry eight pounds of steam. When not inflated, the carriage weighs eighty-four pounds. The balloon has a capacity of one thousand three hundred and sixty feet of gas. When inflated and ready for a flight, it is calculated to have the carriage weigh from four to ten pounds.

An engineer's private trial trip was first made in the presence of the constructing engineers, several of the shareholders of the Aerial Steam Navigation Company, and a number of the employees and residents in the neighborhood. The morning was beautiful and still, scarcely a breath of air stirring.—The conditions were favorable to success. The gasometer was fully inflated and the model was floated out of the building. In six minutes steam was got up, the rudder set to give a slight curve to the course of the vessel, and the valves opened. With the first turn of the propeller she rose slowly into the air, gradually increasing her speed until the rate of five miles an hour was attained. The position of the rudder caused her to describe a great circle, around which she passed twice, occupying about five minutes each time. Lines had been fastened to both bow and stern, which were held by two men, who followed her track, and had sufficient ado to keep up with her at a "dog trot." As she completed describing the second circle, a pull given to the head line, unintentionally, caused the rudder to shift to a fore and aft position, when the model pursued a straight flight about a quarter of a mile; she was then turned round and retraced her flight to the point of departure, whence, being guided, they entered the building. The fires were drawn, and the first extensive flight of a vessel for aerial navigation was accomplished. The total distance traversed was a little over a mile. The appearance of the vessel in the air was really beautiful. As seen in the building she looks cumbrous and awkward. The change of appearance, as she is circling gracefully through the air, is equal to that of a ship when first seen in the water. The moment of opening the steam valve was one of suspense. As the vessel rose and forced slowly ahead the suspense was scarcely dissipated; but in a very few seconds her speed increased, in obedience to the rudder she commenced to swing round the curve, the men at the guys broke into a trot, and cheer upon cheer rose from the little group of anxious spectators.

The public exhibition was attended by some slight accidents, but elicited much enthusiasm from the audience, which had assembled in a hall where the trial was made. The wind was so violent and irregular without that it was considered unsafe to risk the model beyond the shelter. The carriage mounted nearly to the roof with a firmness and steadiness equal to the movements of an ocean steamer on smooth water. The guests cheered long and loud, and many fairly danced with delight at the success. The trip back and forth across the hall was performed several times with success.

Within a few weeks the first large vessel will be completed by the Aerial Steam Navigation Company—one calculated to carry four persons—and the principles involved in its construction will then fully be tested. The projectors consider that the model carriage has developed two facts of the greatest importance. First, the effective power developed by the propellers is greater than the estimated power according to the formulæ of hydrodynamics; and second, the atmospheric resistance encountered by the vessel was less than had been calculated. Consequently, the speed attained was higher than was estimated, and at the next trial, when the effective heating surface of the boiler will be increased, a further considerable increase of speed will be attained. Some doubt had been entertained as to the facility of steering the vessel.—That is shown to be the easiest part of the business. She obeys the deflections of the rudder with extreme sensitiveness, and is under the most complete control.

INSTANTANEOUS CONVERSION.—How long does it take for Jesus to save a penitent soul? This question was asked and answered in the Minna street pulpit last Sunday morning. The doctrine of instantaneous conversion was strikingly, almost startlingly presented, fortified by Scripture proofs and illustrated by Scripture examples. The Saviour is glorified and the sinner is encouraged by this doctrine. It brings the great question of personal salvation to an immediate issue, concentrates the mind upon the only Redeemer of men. This was the pentecostal type of conversions. This is the type that obtains in all great revivals. When the pulpit shrinks from the announciation of the doctrine of instantaneous conversion, when the church ceases to hold and illustrate it, it indicates a feeble faith and a low standard of piety. How long does it take for Jesus to save a penitent soul? The very question carries its own answers in the suggestion of glorious results to a lost race. We trust this question will be answered in the happy experience of a multitude of converted souls before the Conference year ends.—San Francisco Spectator.

BEAUTIFUL DEATH SCENE.—When one of Martin Luther's children lay on her death bed, the great man approached her and said to her, 'My dear little daughter, my beloved Margaret, you would willingly remain with your earthly parents; but if God calls you, you will go with your heavenly Father!' 'Yes, dear father, it is as God pleases.' 'Dear little girl!' he exclaimed, 'O, how I love you! The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak.' He then took the Bible and read to her the passage, 'Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead.' He then said, 'My daughter, enter thou into thy resting place in peace.' She turned her eyes toward him and said, with touching simplicity, 'Yes, father.'

CAMP MEETING.

There will be a camp meeting, on the primitive Methodist style, at Beulah church, Pleasant Hill and Manny circuit, Shreveport district, commencing September 16. Everybody is invited, and ministers specially. The latter will find ample accommodation, gratuitous, by friends encamped on the ground. Ministers wishing to bring their families are advised to make the arrangement for their accommodation in due time, as we are not prepared to say to what extent entire families can be accommodated.

THE IMPERIALISTS.—A New York paper has a story that a secret society has been formed, having branches in the principal cities of the Union, for carrying the country over to Imperialism. Its members are sworn to promote and support what is termed a "Free Empire." It is proposed to establish an aristocracy, with executive powers in the hands of a council, with one man at the head, who shall hold the position for life and be designated Consul of the Free Empire of the United States, the title of Consul to be thrown away for that of Emperor as soon as the public sentiment will bear the change. The man for this position has already been selected by the leaders of the movement.

OBITUARIES.

Died, at her residence in Greene county, Mississippi, in May last, Mrs. ELIZABETH DANTZLER, aged seventy-seven years.

This announcement sends a pang of grief to the hearts of a large family of children, and numerous relatives and friends scattered all over this land. She was the mother of ten children, only one of whom has been called to pass through the ordeal of mortal dissolution, and he was killed on the field of battle.

Although for years she was confined to her room from physical weakness, yet her children who were separated from her, far and near, all felt and knew that every pulsation of her heart was for them—that her every care and thought had reference to their welfare; for if there ever was a mother whose solicitude for her children was greater than another, it must have been my mother. But she is gone. On that beautiful Sabbath morning, when all nature was robed in brightness and beauty—when quiet stillness reigned supreme—the messenger came and bid her depart in peace and be at rest. To be called at such a time, on a beautiful Sabbath day, I have ever felt was ominous of a favorable reception. Her father and mother, her brother and sisters one by one had passed away, until she stood the only representative of a former generation.

Fondly did our thoughts and affections cling around that venerable form, and earnestly did we treasure the words which fell from her lips. But every year added to her feebleness, the last sparks of life were gradually going out, the golden bowl was about to be broken, until all of those images of extreme frailty so glowingly pictured by Solomon were visible upon her.

How appropriate that touching petition of David: "Cast me not off in the time of my old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth." Though she had passed through the scenes and vicissitudes, had endured the toils and trials, and had borne the cares and troubles incident to a long and eventful life, yet it was permitted her to leave the bourne of time quietly and easily, with her head pillowed upon the bosom of her Saviour and borne upon the wings of angels. She has gone to meet those who have gone before her, and to await the coming of those who, one by one, are to follow her. And oh! may there be no disappointment. May her family, now scattered and broken up, all be reunited above in one unbroken union, there to remain forever, where parting will be no more.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

DOING GOOD.

A little child I am indeed,
And little do I know;
Much care and help I yet shall need,
That I may wiser grow—
If I would ever hope to do
Things good and great, and useful too.

But even now I ought to try
To do what good I may;
God never meant that such as I
Should only live to play,
And talk and laugh, and eat and drink,
And sleep and wake, and never think.

One gentle word that I may speak,
Or one kind, loving deed,
May, though a trifle poor and weak,
Prove like tiny seed;
And who can tell what good may spring
From a very little thing?

Then let me try, each day and hour,
To act upon this plan—
What little good is in my power,
To do it while I can;
If to be useful thus I try,
I may do better by and by.

GLEAMS OF SUNSHINE.

A STORY FOR CHILDREN.

From away back among the years gone forever, floats down to me the memory of a morning dark and cloudy in the outer world—dark, too, in our home world, for we watched with anxious hearts our first-born, in the crisis of a disease dangerous to childhood. She had slept far into the dreary morning; but as we watched, the black clouds rolled away and left the blue sky smiling, and the sunshine danced in delight to enfold the flowers in its passionate embrace again. As it poured a flood of radiance in at the window, our little darling awoke, and in her face we read that the danger had passed; and so the sunshine of happiness flooded our hearts once more. A few days, and she was again around the house, but pale and weak, and, as the days went by, with scarcely any increase of strength. We interested her in the flower garden, and through all the early summer months she passed a large portion of her time there.

One morning, as she was gathering bouquets for the house, she saw a poor, pale boy leaning over the fence, eyeing the flowers with a longing look. Winding a few long grasses about those she held in her hand, she gave them to him and asked if he loved flowers.

"Oh, yes!" he said, and clasping the blossoms over his face, he burst into tears.

Little May had a tender heart, and she asked him no questions, waiting until his sobs should cease; but her little face grew sad, and her blue eyes misty with tears.

"Little girl," said he through his tears, "my mother loved roses. She had so many, and she is dead now."

May asked him where he lived, and he said, "Nowhere." He had traveled from Boston since his mother had died, sometimes finding lodgings, oftener lying on the damp ground all night. "I was just wanting to die," said he; "I was so tired and hungry; then I saw the roses, and they made me think of my mother," and again his tears shut out the flowers from his sight.

May called a family council, and the boy was offered a home with us for a short time, entirely through May's intercession, for mamma's sister Emily thought it very foolish to encourage strolling children, and mamma began to think so too. Aunt Emily talked so positively, but May put her arms around her papa's neck and said, "Oh, papa! his father is dead, and his mother, too. How lonesome he is!" and then she burst out crying. So papa told the boy he could stay a few days, and help May take care of the flowers.

What happy days they were, for May had no brothers or sisters old enough to play with her, and this boy seemed to forget that there might be sad days in store for him, he was so very happy. They fastened up the roses and twined the vines that the wind had thrown down, again around the arbor.

At last May's papa told the boy one morning that he had found a good place for him in the city; so they parted with promises to remember each other forever.

We heard from him frequently, and May's papa brought him home with him to spend Christmas. And again they met in the city one day, when May accompanied her father. By and by the gentleman he lived with moved to Philadelphia, and then we ceased to hear from him.

Years rolled on, and he was forgotten, save in some backward glance to the year of May's sickness. She was a beautiful girl now, and loved by hosts of friends. At last, amid half sad, half joyful preparation, she contemplated leaving the old home and old friends for the protection of one every way worthy of her affection. The morning came, and she was receiving many little tokens of affection and pretty bridal gifts, when a ponderous package, bearing a foreign postmark, was brought in. Full of eager wonder we undid it, and disclosed a beautiful painting, and attached to it the card of an artist in Rome whose fame had spread throughout all Europe and the United States. We looked at the painting—a garden of flowers, a little girl in their midst, a low fence, and over it leaned a poor, haggard child. We scarcely comprehended it; but May sprang forward with a low cry and bent over it. It was a masterpiece. We almost breathed the perfume of the roses, and the little girl was the exact counterpart of May as she had played among the flowers that happy summer. She took the card, and turning it over, read: "Little May; I never have forgotten or lost trace of you. Your words of sympathy—your kind deed in the past—proved the turning point in my life, which led me on to fame and happiness. May your wedded life be fair as the roses you gave the heart-broken orphan long ago. God bless you!" And then she read the name we had known him by in those brief days of his stay with us. How happy May was. An added blessing seemed to rest upon her through the day. How joyously she told him who was in a few hours to be her husband the little history connected with the beautiful painting.

As I look upon my writing I see the painting through the open door into the parlor, and May's children come romping into the room.

Little bright faces cluster around my knee, and what I have said to them many times, I now write to you, dear children. The sunshine seems to gild only the external things of this world, and make them bright and pleasant, but its warm rays reach far down into the dark earth, and give life and strength to the germs of flowers, and they in turn become beautiful. Kind words make one appear bright and attractive; they also, like the sunshine, may sink down into some dark, sad heart and nourish to life dormant principles and germs of action that may result in a noble life. They may, at least, bring comfort to some lonely one. Gentle words are easy words.—Max, in Arthur's Home Magazine.

THE SWALLOWS AND THE PHEBE

A few years ago, under the eaves of a barn, in Charlotte, Vermont, there had been built about twenty nests of the barn swallow. On their return to their old domiciles the following year, in exercising the right of search, they found one of their nests partly demolished and in possession of a Phebe bird. This the swallows appeared to consider an unwarrantable intrusion, and the pair which laid especial claim to the nest commenced a suit of ejectment.

The fluttering and twittering of the swallows not having the desired effect, the owner of the barn took up their side of the dispute, and with a fish pole endeavored to drive off the intruder, but without success.

About noon the swallows collected en masse, evidently with the intention of having a regular palaver, and hovered around the ridge of the barn on which the trespassing Phebe bird had taken up her position. The swallows wheeled round and round, now mounting upward, now coming down with a swoop, as though they intended to drive Phebe from her moorings. She stretched herself as it were on tip toe, ready to repel the expected attack, while they kept up such a jabbering and twittering as to show that no common subject was under discussion. After nearly an hour had been spent in this feathery negotiation, the swallows dispersed, and Phebe retired to her purloined homestead.

Soon after the swallows were busily engaged, with mud from an adjoining spring, in building a partition wall through the nest, allowing sufficient room for the intruder to attend to her own domestic concerns. They carried up the wall, restored the dilapidated covering, and extended it in a direction opposite to its former one with so much alacrity that before evening several inches of the new wall were visible. This had been done without disturbing Madam Phebe, although the builders were in close contact with her ladyship's plumage, and probably splashed a little of the mud in her face. But there she sat, apparently regarding the inconvenience she had occasioned with sullen indifference.

The "right of search" had been bravely and pertinaciously insisted on, and although Phebe could show no "good papers," nor any other than a "robber's right" to the nest, yet rather than go to the extremities in open war, the swallow allowed her to retain possession of a part, and thus the "boundary question" was settled. Whether she took any comfort in sitting where she was not welcome, or how the indulgent swallows estimated her want of good breeding, I am not informed.

The readers of this incident may be reminded of one lesson, that however much we may consider ourselves injured by the trespasses of others, it is always "better to suffer wrong than to do wrong." And if young and grown up children would scrupulously observe this rule, what a marvelous change would be brought about in the family circle, and in the various relations of mankind.—Our Dumb Animals

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE BUTTER QUESTION.

"Will some writer of receipts inform us the exact weight of a 'small piece' of butter, which we so often see enumerated as one of the ingredients in published receipts? As butter is scarce at present, it appears very large to the

"INQUIRER."

The above letter we have received from one of our contributors of domestic receipts, and we leave the question opened to be answered by any of our readers who may happen to be posted.

Meantime we will give our own views on the subject. The "small piece" of butter, at present prices—ranging from sixty to seventy-five cents per pound—is extremely apt, in our household, to find itself metamorphosed, in many cases, into clean, sweet lard or dripping. For plain pastry the latter are nearly if not quite as good—for frying, better. In cake-making we prefer them to the strong, rancid butter which many obtain, on account of its cheapness, for cooking purposes. Our rule in cooking has always been, good butter or none. Any one can detect strong butter in any form of cookery; vegetables are, to our thinking, completely spoiled by it, and had better be without entirely.

One does not know, until she has tried, to what infinitesimal proportions the "small piece" can be reduced. To be sure there must be some substitute. We remember being complimented last summer on the excellence of a dish of corn and beans we had prepared, in which there was not one particle of butter, only some sweet milk and a little lard, the compliment coming from a person who believed butter to be an indispensable in the cooking of vegetables, and who had no suspicion of the actual state of the case until, after the unsolicited praise, we confessed the fact. Vegetables of this class, if well seasoned and carefully prepared otherwise, may be easily made to challenge any one to tell whether butter is used or not. Potatoes may be mashed, with a plentiful supply of salt, a little milk or cream and lard, and we think no one will discover the straits you have been put to. Squashes cannot be made tempting without butter, and in preparing them the "small piece" must be just as large as conscience will permit; the more butter the better the squash. Turnips require the same as squashes, only the "piece" may be allowed to shrink in dimensions a little. Tomatoes, which, as ordinarily prepared, require a liberal share of the costly material, can be made a fit subject of experiment—gradually lessening the quantity each day until the minimum is reached. The fat fried from slices of salt pork will do well in tomatoes instead of butter—you may possibly think it an improvement.

When lard is used it must be perfectly free from all taint or lardy taste—simply a substance that enriches, without imparting any flavor.

The only answer we can give to the question at the beginning of this article is, that the size of the "small piece" must be regulated by the habits, tastes and lengths of purse of the one who cooks, and those who are cooked for. It may be possible that the consumers may object to the idea of lard instead of butter. In that case they must be served like the man, with whom we are acquainted, who is certain he cannot eat anything with milk or eggs in it, and yet who does do it every day, and never suspects it. Try your experiments, but keep your own counsel, when you will be altogether more certain as to results.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

WHEN board fences become old, and the boards begin to come off, nail upward-facing strips upon them against each post, and the boards will be held to their place, and the fence will last several years longer.

IN SETTING out young orchards always register the varieties immediately in a book, where they may be referred to in a few years, when the trees commence bearing, and the labels are lost and names forgotten.

ALWAYS set a post fence over a ditch or near a good drainage, and the post remains dry, and will last many years longer than those standing in wet subsoil.—Rural Gentleman.

IN LAYING a garden for fruits and vegetables, place everything in drills or rows, so that they may be cultivated by a horse, and thus save the expense of hand labor.

Howling Dervishes of Scutari.

Entering the court yard at the left of the street I saw before me a fountain in the form of a tomb, and at my right hand a black little hole, which my guide informed me was a cafe, and that we should wait within until the hour for the howling commenced. This place was crowded with a filthy-looking set of Turks and dervishes who were sipping coffee and eating crisp little pies which were dampened with cherry water. I neutralized the taste of one by a sip or a bite at the other while an officious black was taking off my boots and substituting a pair of slippers for service in the tekke.

Seated near by me was a fool. The Turks venerate these men (who are often more knavish than silly) as saints. The Orientals have a sort of simple faith that God inhabits their empty brains and pardons them all sins, as He would those committed by little children who know not what they do. This one was seated on a stone, rocking his head and mumbling prayers of the Islam formula, rolling a chapter between his hands, and following with his idiot eyes some vague hallucination that made him smile. Once in a while he broke his kief to search very intelligently and methodically for vermin, and when found he deliberately placed his prey upon the clothes of an old Turk seated by him, who, instead of resenting this nuisance, puffed away at his pipe and accepted the fleas as a blessing of God.

Some devotees, newly arrived, piously embraced this disgusting personage, who received their hugs with the stolidity of a Japanese idol; as to me I was glad when I was summoned from this hole to enter the tekke, although my movements were followed with evil eyes by the Mohammedans around.

This hall, instead of being brightly tinted and circular, like that of the Turners in Constantinople, is gloomy, dark and a parallelogram divested of all architectural character. It might have stood for the torture-chamber of an inquisition, for the walls were ferociously decorated with darts of iron terminated by balls of lead, chains, masses of arms, pincers, all sorts of instruments of barbarous forms, for an incomprehensible but frightful usage which would tear, burn and lacerate the flesh according to the most cruel desires.

Seated in a circle around this hall were the dervishes in their sacramental poses, repeating in a chorus a species of litany. They were led by a large negro, with the breast of Hercules, the neck of a bull, lungs of iron and a stentorian voice. At each verse they threw their heads backward and forward, touching their foreheads nearly to the ground in front, and their crowns to the walls behind them, all of which finished by giving me a sympathetic vertigo. Sometimes they were joined by Turks from the audience; then their shouts grew louder and louder, and culminated in exhausted whines. Among them were children and negroes, eunuchs and beggars, in all sorts of costumes, and the mixture of heavy basses and weak tenors, cracked baritones and feeble falsettos, gave me a lesson in harmony and thorough bass I shall never forget.

"Allah hou!" "Allah hou!" "Allah-il-Allah!"

The inspiration and excitement arrived little by little; their eyes burned like those of savage beasts in the bottom of a cavern; an epileptic froth covered their mouths, and their visages became decomposed, shining lividly under the sweat; the lines became broken and excited; the contortions were fearful; and why some of those delicate lungs did not break from their bony cages by such abnormal efforts is a marvel to me to this day.

"Allah hou!" "Allah hou!"

They were no longer human beings. Their howlings had become frantic shrieks, and the masks convulsive and epileptic took the place of human features.

The iman hero was a younger man than his brother of the dervishes of Pera, and he marched among the groups encouraging and joining in the worship, and at times a part of the company would rise and advance toward him to kiss abjectly his feet, his hands, his forehead. Soon two fanatics varied the performance by advancing to the centre, seizing two iron darts from the walls, brandishing them savagely in their hands, and commencing a savage sort of a dance to the time of the terrible vocal accompaniments of their fellows. In place of avoiding the points of each other's weapons, they rushed upon them, wounding themselves until the blood ran from the spot, when they rolled to the earth amid wilder cries of "Allah hou!"

From this terrible spectacle I was glad to withdraw, noticing, however, as I passed from the courtyard, that nearly every dervish had some awful scars and healed wounds on face, arms and legs.—Letters of a Sentimental Idler.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

Letter from Major J. T. Hester, of Alabama:

AUBURN, ALA., April 4, 1869.

MESSRS JOHN DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents.: I have received so much benefit from "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid" that I feel it my duty to let you know it. I had an attack of Typhoid Fever, and with it a most stubborn case of Erysipelas, and was confined to my bed near two months, suffering the most intense pain all the time from Erysipelas; and after exhausting the many prescriptions of my physician, he, finally commenced the use of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, and soon found that I was being improved by its use, and continued to use it, and am nearly well. I consider it the most valuable medicine for the diseases and purposes for which it is made that is sold. I also used it most successfully on my little son, who was severely burned, and I do assure you that it was from this medicine alone that I could get any relief from my distressing attack of Erysipelas.

I do not write you this as a certificate for publication, but as a duty that I feel I owe to Professor Darby and his invaluable medicine.

I shall never be without it again if I can by any possible means get it.

I hope you are succeeding, and will make a fortune.

Very truly yours,
J. T. HESTER.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market is without any improvement. From most branches of the wholesale trade we hear complaints of increasing dullness. The sales of sugar and molasses have been mostly confined to the current receipts, which have been limited. Operations in Western produce have been restricted by scant supplies, under which flour has been firm at the previous improvement, and corn has further advanced, commanding $1 17½ to $1 20 per bush., furnishing another forcible inducement to Southern planters to give special attention to their corn crops and prepare for more extensive culture next year.

The weather has been clear and warm, and our accounts from the country are still more encouraging than last week.—The crops are rapidly recovering from the bad effects of the unpropitious spring, and there is now a fair prospect that there will be a sufficiently liberal yield to fully test the capacity of our labor force in the picking season. We find a great many disposed to raise their crop estimates, which have been hitherto from 2,500,000 to 2,600,000 bales. The same views prevailed last year, but we hope that this time they will not be equally disappointed. It is manifest that the Texas floods will materially curtail the yield in that State.

The river remains about the same, being three feet nine inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 16th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	287
Lake.....	1
Mobile.....	424
Florida.....	2
Total.....	714

On Saturday there was rather more inquiry, but at lower prices, and in order to effect sales factors were compelled to make some slight concessions, in consequence of which the business comprised 375 bales, taken mostly on the basis of 30½c. for low middling, but with a portion of the business at 30 and 30¼c. On Monday only two buyers came forward, one of whom could not find the kinds he wanted, while the other bought 125 bales at about Saturday's figures, the ruling rates for low middling being 30¼ to 30½c. On Tuesday the market showed rather more vitality, and although one or two buyers had to withdraw in consequence of not finding the kinds they wanted, unless at prices above their views, yet the sales embraced 528 bales, the most of which was for the North, only a limited amount being taken for Liverpool. Small lots of low middling can be bought at 30 to 30½c., but the few desirable lots on sale of strict classification cannot be had under 31c. Good ordinary was neglected, and could not have been forced off unless at some concessions.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,028 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 793,695 bales, against 586,700 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 84,233 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 22,567 bales to France, and of 5,717 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 248,780 to Great Britain.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary.....	25	to —
Good ordinary.....	29	to 29½
Low middling.....	30	to 31
Middling.....	—	to 32½
Strict middling.....	—	to —

SUGAR.—We have no change to notice since our last review. The movement is still on a limited scale, and receipts have been very light. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 100 hogsheads, at 12½c. per pound for fair, 12¾c. for fully fair, and 14½ to 15c. for yellow clarified.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—J. M. Lemus, the Cuban envoy, authorizes the flat contradiction of the report by telegraph, from here yesterday, of his removal by the Cuban Junta, and says he is the only person in the United States who officially represents the Cespedes government. The Junta was created by Lemus himself, and is not officially known in Cuba, and of course can have no power over his conduct. Lemus denies ever having had any conversation with Senator Sumner, and has never expressed or felt any doubt of the ultimate success of the Cuban Republic.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Thomas Layton, president of the Southern Bank of New Orleans, is at New York, negotiating $805,000 city 6s, to pay the police, and $600,000 toward liquidation of the floating debt.

It is stated that Mr. Layton was offered 82½ for these bonds in New Orleans.

Hon. Anthony Sambola has been here several days, and is now at Philadelphia, in the interests of the Knights of Pythias and S. W. M.

To a remark of ex-Governor Hahn, of Louisiana, that the sugar frauds at New Orleans were a great injury to honest importers and the sugar planters of his State, and should be severely punished, but that the people of New Orleans did not believe that the investigations would be prosecuted and the criminals brought to justice, on account of the high position of some of the officials implicated, Secretary Boutwell said that the parties will be tried and the evidence presented to the country. No compromise will be accepted, even if more is offered than is due the government. That the suits, civil and criminal, will be pressed with vigor and determination, and the guilty parties exposed. That Mr. Banfield, Solicitor of the Treasury, has been sent to New Orleans to aid in the legal proceedings, and that if there is no conviction it will be owing to the corruption of the judge or jury.

In view of a partially incorrect dispatch telegraphed at noon today, Rev. Mr. Lynch, colored, desires the transmission of the following:

Mr. Lynch has arranged for an interview with Judge Dent and General Grant on Thursday next. Lynch declares that all further efforts at reconstruction should be based on universal suffrage and universal amnesty. That the white people of Mississippi have as thoroughly abandoned resistance to the doctrines of the Republican party as they did to the government when the armies of General Lee surrendered. That they do not feel an interest in common with the National Democratic party, and that when the Southern white man concedes to the colored man equal political rights, there is no issue between them, and to excite one will be a curse to both races.

Lynch has conferred with many of the leading Radicals.

Delano decides that stamped signatures of collectors on liquor stamps are unauthorized, and hereafter actual signatures will be required.

Ex-Governor Sharkey, of Mississippi, leaves this evening for the North. He represents the condition of affairs in his State very hopeful. He says there is great anxiety among all classes to have the State back in the Union. The Conservative Republican Convention of that State meets in September. He thinks there is no doubt about Judge Dent receiving the nomination.

CUBA.

HAVANA, July 17.—The atrocities which have been committed by the Spaniards in this island are horrible. One man alone, called Durante, captain of a volunteer troop called the Chapelgorris, or Red Caps, (the Bonnets rouges of the French Revolution!) in the district of Colon, boasts of having shot, say rather "murdered," two hundred and nine defenseless victims, among them the poor English lad Robinson. It is to be hoped that our present Captain General, who appears to mean well, will be able to put a stop to these shameful and deplorable acts, although it is very questionable whether he has the power to punish such ruffians as Durante, or in fact any volunteer.

The system of confiscation continues, and the Gazette is filled with the names of all the wealthiest and most influential men of Puerto Principe, Villa Clara, etc. The most remarkable sequestrations at Havana are those of Aldama's, Bachiller's and Mallen's properties. The result must be a decided impetus to the revolution, for every Cuban will join in ridding his country of the robbers who are sapping its resources and heart's blood.—New York Sun.

HAVANA, July 23.—A report is in circulation that the government contemplates embargoing the properties of Jese Baro, a wealthy Catalan, who is at present absent from the Island.

Seven plantations, situated in the midst of the insurrectionary district, are unhurt. The owners of them are suspected of giving money to the rebels to save them from destruction.

Several skirmishes had recently taken place between the troops and insurgents. The latter had attacked a number of garrisoned plantations.

The steamer Majori, which arrived at Havana to day, brought one hundred and fifty-six sick troops.

General Jordan is in the country between Santiago de Cuba and Bayamo. His forces have been joined to those of Ruslan.

Advices from Kingston to the 6th instant have been received. Four hundred railroad employees had quelled a negro rising at Old Harbor.

The owners of the plantations within the jurisdiction of Cienfuegos are arming companies to defend themselves.

Rebel guerrillas have cut the railroad near Santo Espiritu.

EUROPE.

VIENNA, July 27.—Baron Von Beust, receiving a Hungarian delegation, said Austria and France were on the best possible terms, and that the interests of the two countries were identical. Regarding the Eastern question, Beust would not insist upon the programme of 1867, but would leave concessions to the Christians optional with the Sultan.

Beust declared he had honestly striven to establish more cordial relations with Prussia; but his efforts had not been met in a similar spirit, and he had been unsuccessful.

His speech was received with great satisfaction.

LONDON, July 27.—Gladstone is unwell.

Parliament will be prorogued on the 15th of August.

A fault has been discovered in the cable of 1866, which has been located one hundred and thirty miles from Valentia.

LONDON, July 27.—Advices from Yokohama, via Hong Kong, confirm the reports via San Francisco, of the loss of the Tallahassee with several Europeans on board.

MADRID, July 29.—A party of Carlists were defeated by volunteers at Taraseon. Offers to put down the rebellion come from all quarters of Spain. Espartero offers his services.

FRANCE.—A political revolution of a remarkable character is in progress in France. Since the coup d'etat the Emperor has governed the country in person, the ministry being responsible only to himself, and the Senate and Corps Legislatif mere appendages to his system. The recent elections exhibited an enormous minority vote, and the opposition have been emboldened, in consequence thereof, to demand of the government several political reforms; among them, the abandonment of arbitrary personal power, the selection of the ministry from the Corps Legislatif, and the responsibility of the ministry to that body.

The Emperor has decided to accede to these demands, though he asserts that he does so from a sense of the justice of them, and that he does not consent to compromise the dignity of the government. He is willing to select his ministers from the Tiers Parti, or third party, which is composed neither of ultra imperialists nor ultra radicals, but of members who are for the empire, but who insist on responsible ministers, or parliamentary government the same as in England.

In accordance with this change of policy the ministry resigned on Friday. On receiving their portfolios the Emperor said: "There are some of the deputies, gentlemen, who are pushing you very hard, but are you sure the country is with you? I am ready to sacrifice personal legislative power; but there is a question of dignity which will not yield to any pressure.

The Paris Pays of Thursday says that the Emperor has written a letter, from which it quotes the following declaration in regard to the Corps Legislatif:

"On the 19th of January I committed a great fault by acting without previous concert with the majority. I caused it to regard with suspicion my sentiment toward it. All my efforts should tend to regain its confidence."

La France newspaper denies the story of the contemplated evacuation of Rome by the French troops.

A rumor has been current that Spain had applied to France, requesting her to advise the government of the United States to preserve strict neutrality in the case of Cuba, but it is utterly unfounded, and may be considered as simply a canard.

Senator Ramsey, of Minnesota, arrived in Paris on Friday.

The Emperor on Monday definitely yielded his assent to the demands of the legislative body. Throughout the whole crisis the Emperor has exhibited his peculiar tact and shrewdness. He invited nearly all the deputies in the Corps Legislatif to a dinner and soiree at St. Cloud last week. He has chatted playfully with many of them of all different shades of opinion, giving expression to many of those piquant sayings so attractive to Frenchmen. For instance, to one by whom he had been taken by the buttonhole he said: "Ah, Monsieur Buffet, you mean to take hold of my coat for fear I may pull back." To a group of several with whom he was conversing on the situation, he said: "You began to treat me like the old lion in the fable, trying to cut my nails and take out my teeth, and leave me nothing but my mane, which is quite harmless." To others he said: "The elections prove clearly that I must choose between empire and revolution. Between neither system can individuals be set up." To others he said: "I will give full satisfaction to the liberal aspirations of all parties, but have decided to cease concessions at the boundaries prescribed in the constitution." While the Emperor's conduct for the past few days is regarded as adroit, it is not considered as likely to stop agitation for further concessions and reforms.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHICAGO, July 25.—Bishop Cummins, of Kentucky, notwithstanding the demand of Bishop Whitehouse, of this diocese, that he should not do so, preached in Trinity church this morning and evening in the presence of audiences that filled the church to its utmost capacity, which is from twelve to fifteen hundred.

Bishop Cummins publishes in the Tribune, this morning, a letter explaining his course in regard to the difficulty between himself and Bishop Whitehouse, to which is appended a letter from Bishop Whitehouse to himself. The letter is bitter in its tone. After recapitulating what he calls past aggressions on the part of Cummins, he says that is no excuse. It has generated incidents which subject you to the imputation of malevolent feeling as well as of the disregard of what is gentlemanly and courteous. The principles which are involved in this interference and aggressions I mean to submit, as you are aware, for such adjudication by our peers as they may deem to be equivalent. I have averted, as far as in me lay, pursuing the issues through any personal altercation, and shall under no circumstances resort to any penal charges now satisfied soever, and may be that reasonable cause for the same may exist, and must content myself in the name of God and His church with entering my solemn protest against acts and tempers so derogatory to the dignity of our affairs, our confiding brothers and the peace of the church, and the well-being of the part of it committed by the great Head to my unworthy charge. I, therefore, hereby, as far as I can do so, give it lawful and moral might, violating no trust, no past claim of fraternal courtesy in the painful exigency so pertinaciously thrust upon me, do protest against you visiting my diocese to officiate in any manner within its bounds.

MEMPHIS, July 28.—Dispatches from Clarksville, Tennessee, say the express train from Louisville, which left there at three o'clock, yesterday afternoon, ran through the trestle work at Budd's Creek about ten o'clock this morning, and taking fire, the whole train, except the New Orleans sleeping car, including the express mail and baggage, was destroyed. The engineer, fireman and two passengers were killed, and twenty-five or thirty wounded. The express messenger, Dugan, was jammed in the wreck and fatally injured.

The following is a list of casualties: Killed, engineer Eugene Riley, and passengers Thomas Shields and Hugh McColl, of New Orleans.

The following passengers were badly wounded: Mrs. H. McColl, and Judge Conklin and wife, of New Orleans; Joseph Nutt, H. B. Michael, Colonel Stover, of Eufaula, Alabama; John Burt, of Columbus, Mississippi; J. Jay Buck, of Clarksville, Tennessee; Lethe Henderson, of Memphis, and the following trainmen:

C. A. Brown, baggage master, John C. Dugan, express messenger.

The following are slightly wounded: William McColl, New Orleans; Mr. Peterson and wife, of Baton Rouge, Louisiana; J. C. Hannah, of Coffeeville, Mississippi; J. C. Levy, Holly Springs; Miss Hattie Michael, Lauderville, Mississippi; W. E. Shepherd and two children of Judge Conklin, of New Orleans; sleeping car conductor W. D. Ray, mail agent Ed. Boone, and brakeman C. B. Webb.

DUXBURY, Mass., July 28.—The French cable is perfect. Its present capacity is eighteen words per minute, direct, and twenty-five words by repeating at St. Pierre.

STIRRING UP A LARGE AMOUNT OF RASCALITY IN TEXAS.—It will be remembered that about six months since Judge Watrous, of the United States Court for the Eastern District of Texas, while presiding in Texas, was suddenly stricken with paralysis. The court was adjourned from day to day in expectation of his early recovery, but upon the advice of his physician as to the impossibility of a resumption of his duties, it was found necessary to order Judge Duval, of the Western District, to conclude the term.—Judge Duval, upon opening the court, finds that the marshal had summoned a new grand jury, and entirely ignored the old venire, headed by E. B. Settle. Whereat Mr. Settle comes out in a letter to the judge and makes some bold statements regarding the corruption existing in government affairs in that State. He charges that the jurors of which he was foreman had found over two hundred bills of indictment, including divers ones against Stencil, register in bankruptcy, and Harris, assignee. Also, serious charges are brought against District Attorney Baldwin, accusing him of complicity with a large number of Jews and Gentiles, in allowing nolle pros. in cases where indictments had been regularly found against them for defrauding the revenue. Settle also sent a copy of the letter to Attorney General Evarts, and the matter has recently been brought to the attention of Mr. Hoar.

THE SITUATION OF LOPEZ.—Official advices from South America have been received here, giving information regarding the situation of affairs in Paraguay, from which it appears that the condition of Lopez and his adherents is not as critical as reported. It seems that Lopez has retreated into the passes of the Cordilleras, where he is able to maintain a successful opposition to the allies, and at the same time keep up the commissariat of his armies from the agricultural region in his rear, while from Bolivia and other sympathizing republics he receives ammunition and other purely military supplies in sufficient quantities to prolong the war interminably.

CROPS IN LOUISIANA.

The Iberville South, of July 20, says:

Some planters complain of too much rain—a few say that they have not had enough. As a general thing, however, the season has been favorable to the crops. The cane crop is the only one of which the planters can at all complain, and that only because it is backward. It is growing well now and may yet turn out better than is now anticipated. The corn crop is fine and will yield in abundance. The cotton is doing finely in general, wherever it has been properly worked.

We have again, says the Alexandria Democrat, of the 21st, to report our crops of cotton and cane as doing well, remarkably well, and the corn crop, now considered made, as an average half one. Some places fodder pulling has commenced. Last, though not least, no sign or trace of the dreaded caterpillars.

Crops in parts of Bienville are sorely in want of rain. Some are considered past redemption.

We have most cheering reports from Tensas.

Franklin parish has at length been blessed with copious rains, but they came too late to save the corn in some places. Cotton is doing well.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

The first public act done under the new constitution of Spain as it affects matters of religious difference is of a most interesting kind to men of three countries, and through those to men of all countries. A Swedish gentleman, resident in Cadiz, died there. Had he died before the proclamation of the constitution, or at all events before the change of government, either he must have been buried without any religious ceremony, or a Roman Catholic priest must have officiated. As he and his family were Protestant, it was natural in them to desire the services of a Protestant clergyman on the occasion. Such a one was found in the chaplain and naval instructor of her majesty's ship Pallas, the Rev. Frederick Davies, of St. John's College, to whom thus fell the happy distinction of reading the service of his church at the gravesido in the public cemetery for the first time in the history of Cadiz. The novelty of the occurrence, and the respect in which the deceased gentleman was held, occasioned a crowded attendance.

An interesting case of conversion from popery to Protestantism comes from Vienna. The story is that an unnamed theological student in the university of the Austrian capital, designed for the Romish priesthood, took it into his head to translate the Bible into the Slavonic, his native dialect. The result is that, although he passed into the Roman Catholic seminary, he found himself constrained by the new light which close attention to Scripture had thrown into his mind to quit that institution, and avow himself a student for the Protestant ministry. From what is said in the Vienna newspapers it may be inferred that his vision of the inspired writings is complete or nearly so, for it is characterized as good, and its publication under the auspices of the British and Foreign Bible Society is spoken of as likely. In 1816 Dr. Pinkerton made fruitless attempts to form a national Bible society for Austria. Even in 1850 Mr. Millard's endeavors to renew our own society's long-suspended work in that empire were at first tolerated, if not encouraged, by the government; but in the midst of his efforts, for which there was a large demand among the three principal races, the priestly influence was exerted against him, and that with such force that he and his Bibles and presses were actually driven out by main force. The contents of his three depositories, at Guns, Pesth and Vienna, were huddled together, and "under the charge of a detachment of gens d'armes conveyed beyond the frontiers of the Austrian territory!" This was the state of things up to 1859. But those were the days when the Concordat flourished, and under better advice Francis Joseph has changed all or much of that. The society has according to opportunity produced and circulated the whole or part of the Scriptures in in such languages and dialects as the Lithuanian, Samogitian, Polish, Wendish, upper and lower, Bohemian, Hungarian and Slavonic; but that which is now announced as made within the walls of Vienna and in the seclusion of its university by a native undergraduate appears to be entirely new and additional.

The Irish Church bill is in the House of Lords. It has been read a second time. It has not yet passed, and it is very doubtful whether it will ever pass. As it stands it has small chance of success. And the chief arguments against its passing are not to be found in the speeches of the peers who opposed it, but in those of the Archbishop of Canterbury, (Dr. Tait,) the Marquis of Salisbury and the Earl of Carnarvon, who avowed their determination to vote for the second reading. Every conservative peer and every prelate who consented to the second reading did so on the distinct understanding that the bill must be largely altered before he could consent to its final adoption. Whenever, therefore, it comes before a committee of the House of Lords, in which the clauses will have to be considered, each by itself, it will suffer considerable alterations.—What then will be its fate when it is handed back, thus altered, to the House of Commons? The Maynooth clause will be largely modified. Will Mr. Gladstone consent to these modifications? Will Dr. Cullen allow him so to consent? No.

The speeches of the bishops in the recent debate are extolled by the principal newspapers at the expense of those of the lay peers, and it seems especially fashionable to say that the ministers spoke very badly, but this is a misrepresentation. The bishops of Derby and Peterborough spoke brilliantly, but the effect of their speeches was attributable to the quantity of gas or fixed air they contained. Read quietly, they are found to contain very little logic, and in Dr. Magee's oration, as printed, it is quite impossible to discover the qualities which brought down such plaudits and extracted such encomiums from those who listened to it. Clearly it must have been the manner, the passion and the humorous gesture with which it was accompanied that made it such a success. No speech made on the opposition benches can compare with the Lord Chancellor's for powerful reasoning and dignity, and the deep religious [illegible] distinguished it from every other speech addressed to the House. It was delivered, too, with a vivacity and point which surprised many who had but a poor idea of Lord Hatherley's qualities as a debater. Very appropriately he followed Lord Westbury, and keen as were that "eminent Christian's" taunts no one could doubt that Mr. Gladstone had made the best choice, and put the right man on the woolsack. The Duke of Argyll's was a good and soundly reasoned speech, and we still maintain that Lord Granville imparted real dignity to the debate, though most critics describe his performance as feeble. Earl Russell's address too was vigorous—historical of course, but his reminiscences were interesting; and in this, as well as in the tenacity of purpose which the speech exhibited, it was very characteristic of the man.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

WINONA, MISS., July 26, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The meeting at Columbiana, Winona circuit, resulted in an accession of twenty-one members to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

An excellent religious influence pervades the community, and many now seeking will, I trust, obtain salvation.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

A GRAND RUSH FOR GOLD.—Letters from Elko, Nevada, to the California papers report a grand rush to some gold mines, both quartz and placer, which have been discovered eighty three miles distant from Carlin. They are situated in the northern part of Elko county, on the north slope of the divide between the waters of the Owyhee and north fork of the Humboldt river. The specimens brought into Elko are said to be the richest ever found in the State. White Pinors declare that some of the specimens are just like the ores of White Pine, and the colors of gold panned out in the creeks of the new El Dorado have set old California placer miners on the go. Every man in Elko who is able to get a horse leaves for the new diggings, and it is thought the rush will equal that to White Pine.

LENGTH OF SERMONS.—The question is asked, How long ought a sermon to be? Well, that depends on its thickness. We have heard some sermons so thick through with solid thought that the preacher ought not to stop under two hours. We have heard others so thin that if the preacher had ceased talking at the end of fifteen minutes it would have been of proper proportions; so well proportioned, indeed, that it would not have been remembered otherwise than as a very good sermon. The general run of sermons should be cut off at the end of about thirty minutes. If a man takes an hour, or an hour and a half, he ought to be sure he has got a thick sermon.

A STORY is circulated in Dublin to the effect that when they were removing the body of O'Connell the other day, and the priests were saying masses to shorten his time in purgatory, one of the crowd cried out, "An' is that all ye can do for the sowl of the great liberathur? Shure, then, I might as well be a Protesthaut, and go to heaven at once!"

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.—The following is reported as a sure cure for hydrophobia: The bite must be bathed as soon as possible with warm vinegar and water, and when this has dried, a few drops of muriatic acid poured upon the wound will destroy the poison of the saliva, and relieve the patient from all present and future danger.

CONVENTION WITH PERU.—An official proclamation is made of a recent convention between the United States and Peru for the adjustment of claims of citizens of either country against the other. They are to sit at Lima.

A PRAYER.

BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Thou, who dost dwell alone;
Thou, who dost know thine own;
Thou, to whom all are known,
From the cradle to the grave—
Save, O save!
From the world's temptations,
From tribulations,
From that fierce anguish
Wherein we languish,
From that torpor deep,
Wherein we lie asleep,
Heavy as death, cold as the grave—
Save, O save!
When the soul, growing clearer,
Sees God no nearer;
When the soul, mounting higher,
To God comes no nigher;
But the arch fiend, Pride,
Mounts at her side,
Foiling her high emprise,
Sealing her eagle eyes,
And when she fain would soar,
Makes idols to adore;
Changing the pure emotion
Of her high devotion
To a skin-deep sense
Of her own eloquence;
Strong to deceive, strong to enslave—
Save, O save!
From the ingrained fashion
Of this earthly nature,
That mars thy creature;
From grief, that is but passion;
From mirth, that is but feigning;
From tears, that bring no healing;
From wild and weak complaining;
Thine old strength revealing—
Save, O save!
From doubt, where all is double,
Where wise men are not strong,
Where comfort turns to trouble,
Where just men suffer wrong,
Where sorrow treads on joy,
Where sweet things soonest cloy,
Where faiths are built on dust,
Where love is half mistrust,
Hungry and barren, and sharp as the sea—
O set us free!
O let the false dream fly,
Where our sick souls do lie
Tossing continually.
O where thy voice doth come,
Let all doubts be dumb;
Let all words be mild,
All strifes reconciled,
All pains beguiled.
Light brings no blindness,
Love no unkindness,
Knowledge no ruin;
Fear no undoing;
From the cradle to the grave,
Save, O save!

CHANGE NOT ALWAYS PROGRESS

Mr. Editor: All changes in government or usage made by the church which more nearly confirms its ministers and members to Christ is real Christian progress. That church which is instrumental in bringing most souls to Christ is the greatest in the kingdom of God, let its government and usages be what they may.

The strongest argument generally used by the agitators of change is that this is the age of enlightenment and progress; and so it is in many respects; but has not every preceding age been one of progress, and will not every coming generation, in their own estimation, be wise and great? One of the vital mistakes which the church has always fallen into has been an effort to conform to the culture and political change of every generation, failing to recognize the important truth that the very object of the Gospel is to conform the heart and life of the world to its own precepts.

There can be no progress in the Gospel, in the sense of improvement, from the plain fact that it came perfect from the hand of its Author. Thy "word is truth." Moses was commanded not to change, but to do all things after the pattern shown in the mount. The apostles were commanded to preach and teach the Gospel, not legislate for the Gospel. There has been no change in the plan of salvation or change in the mode of its operations since the day of Pentecost. Wherever the Gospel was received it developed its own government, suited to its own spiritual nature and power to propagate itself.

The Methodist Church was a spark struck from the divine mind, kept alive and flaming by the power of the Holy Spirit, like the apostolic church, and without any intention or invention of man's wisdom, naturally clothed itself with government and usage suited to its high spiritual life and progress. It is evident to the mind familiar with the history of the Methodist Church that all legislation which has not grown directly out of the spiritual life of the church itself has only been as so many weights to arrest its progress. We have watched the many changes made within the last twenty years, called the most of them, by the ignorant progress. There has scarcely been a single change, during that whole time, which has not been simply to adopt more or less of the old rubbish used by other Protestant churches for ages, and many of them those more aggressive churches have been trying to modify or get rid of for the last half century. Not one single change has been effected proposing to make the church more humble or spiritual. We are fully of the opinion that nearly all the changes have been simply the result of an increased worldly and backsliding state of mind already existing in the church. The effect certainly has been, in most of the changes, to make the church less spiritual and aggressive. My experience and general observations are that the more pious we are the less friction we find in the primitive usages of Methodism. There is a peculiar fitness in the government and usages of old Methodism to a high progressive spiritual life in the soul, and I am the more confirmed in this view from the fact that I have not seen a single minister or member of acknowledged piety who does not from the heart deplore this constant agitation about change.

We are not opposed to real Christian progress, but we are opposed to burdening our holy spiritual, progressive Christianity with the rubbish of other churches, and then calling it Methodist progress. Some of us feel humiliated to be compelled to use the old, fossilized and tasteless forms of by-gone ages in Methodist worship.

We cannot trust ourselves to pursue the subject in this direction any further. We are in favor of progress, and we think we know what real Christian progress means; and that we may reach this much desired result, we propose a few changes. First. We propose that the next General Conference restore the old rule on class meetings, and add, as a condition of membership, prayer meetings and sacraments. Second. That all the statutes of the church now in the Preachers' Manual be restored to the Discipline, and that the Discipline then be administered in the church. My only hope now for the life—I mean the spiritual life—of the church in the future is in the judicious administration of discipline.

If drunkards, grog-shop keepers, dishonest bankrupts, to say nothing about the most worldly and fashionable neglecters of all the means of grace, and the thousands who without remorse visit unsanctified places of amusement—now if all these are to be recognized as members in good standing in the church, and endorsed by keeping them in its communion, what Christian man, who is not blind to all history and experience, can entertain a reasonable hope for the future prosperity of our Zion? The bishops have appointed another week of prayer. We honestly believe they should have appointed another week of judgment to clean out the temple. Another important change, and that is to wake up the church from its indolence. If only the next General Conference could adopt some change by which more energy could be infused into some of our more cultivated and progressive brethren!

We need effort, real, manly, independent, Methodistic effort, all over the church. We are standing still in many places, and almost dying out in others, for want of zeal for Christ and the salvation of men.

S. P. Richardson.

Summerfield, Alabama.

MOREAU STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

ITEMS FROM A CHURCH.

New Orleans, July 21, 1869.

Mr. Editor: We of the Crescent City are now in the midst of the sultry summer, conjecturing and philosophizing on the probabilities of a visit from that fell destroyer, yellow fever. It is said:

"Distance lends enchantment to the view."

So we often realize that nearness to danger arms one against its approach. We have no yellow fever yet, and we cannot conjecture that we will have. We feel as secure as at almost any point we ever lived. The best medical skill and experienced nurses are an important item in any sickness, but more so in yellow fever, perhaps, than any other disease. The city seems quite healthy.

Multitudes of the people have migrated north and to the watering places to build up their wasted energies, and recuperate from the anxieties and toils of business. Our congregations feel this depletion, and I have no progressive movement to announce, only we have secured to the church that which every church ought to have—a parsonage. It is a good and improving property, valuable as an auxiliary to the church. It is located on a wide avenue and in good distance from the church. I consider it no small forward movement, and a refreshing "sign of the times." A home for the itinerant! How comfortable that thought! One generous sister furnished $1,000 for five years, without interest, to make a cash payment; one generous brother finished and completed the building at a cost of over $700—it was a new, unfinished house; besides, others laid to their help. May heaven reward these generous lovers of the church and her ministers! What grateful incense aspired to heaven when the first "evening sacrifice" was offered up! Thank God, one purpose of my heart is accomplished! I consider that no greater compliment to me as a pastor could be paid than that my efforts have been successful in this enterprise. Now we breathe freely, and are gathering up our strength to meet the very easy and reasonable obligations as they fall due in one or two years. We will be a unit in this. And as Moreau street church has heretofore shown her "faith by her works," we confidently expect, by the system and method adopted and used, to meet these forthcoming notes as they fall due, and nobody hurt. We do not wish help from abroad. We expect the generous, large-hearted Methodists of New Orleans will come to the rescue. We know what we say and of whom we speak, and shall attest this knowledge in due time.

We are still "gathering up the crumbs"—collecting missionary money—although Dr. Munsey has been gone several months. I have $15 50 additional to send him, which will swell our missionary collection at this church to about $260. "Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost."

Centralization is what we need largely as a church, but we need that our outposts should be strengthened and fortified also. Methodism is aggressive. Its purpose is to build up and sustain itself where planted, and by its own force go into the regions beyond. Every well ordered and well disciplined and prosperous church in a city sustains measurably all other churches. We are a unit. The success of Methodism in New Orleans is in its unity. Vitality is what we want—a living, moving, active, operative, sympathizing church. Such is a power.

We are working in a noble cause, and our success depends on our fidelity. May the great Spirit breathe upon us!

Affectionately,

T. B. White.

Camden Dist., Montgomery Conference.

Pineville, July 12, 1869.

Mr. Editor: The fourth session of the Camden district meeting, Montgomery Conference, was held at Camden, Alabama, July 1-4. As no bishop was present, Rev. A. West, presiding elder, occupied the chair with dignity and officiency. All the works were represented except one. I notice the proceedings of most interest.

The members of the meeting, with a few exceptions, were decidedly opposed to union Sunday schools, under all circumstances.

The reports of pastors and the report of the Committee on the Spiritual State of the Work represent the district generally in a low and sad state spiritually. The only encouraging feature is that the congregations are good and increasing. After some stirring speeches on the subject, Brother Gillis called for all who were resolved to seek a deeper work of grace, and to pray every day for a revival of God's work in the district, to pledge the same by coming forward and giving him the hand. Many visitors were present, and all were deeply moved, and rushed forward with streaming tears to give the pledge. Then all bowed, and Brother Rutledge led in prayer, and the Spirit was there in power. It was a melting time—the grand culmination of the meeting—which those present will not soon forget.

A new impetus was given to the cause of missions, and seven-eighths of the amount assessed the district for missions was pledged by four works, though the assessment was double the amount raised last year on the district. The meeting then resolved to make every exertion to raise three times as much as was raised last year.

It appeared from the report on finance that only a little over $1,200 had been paid to the eleven preachers on the district, including the presiding elder. One work had paid more than one-third of this amount. One had paid the preacher $13, the presiding elder $3, and another work had paid its preacher, who has a wife and one child, $22, and the presiding elder nothing. There are only five months before the next Conference. Have you any idea, Mr. Editor, how the preachers live on this "Post Oak district?"

After the report on education was read, and the female colleges at Tuskegee and Summerfield were favorably noticed, and the preachers and laymen had resolved to use their best exertions to raise an average of fifty cents per member of the church on the district for the East Alabama Male College, Brother Rutledge, the agent of the college, made an interesting and telling speech, and received from the audience more than $100 in cash and subscriptions. The agent has done far better for the college in this section than he expected, and better than he has done in some of the richer and more favored portions of the Conference. I hope his success is an earnest of better times financially for the preachers and the benevolent enterprises of the church in this portion of the Conference. The meeting recommended the presiding elder to preach on the support of the ministry on all the works in the district.

The attendance on preaching was very good, and there were indications of more than usual interest among the members of the church and the people at Camden.

The love-feast on Sunday morning was "a feast of fat things and wine on the lees." More than twenty brethren and sisters told, in moving words, the story of their second birth. Sweet and stirring stanzas were sung, anon with spirit, and anon arose shouts of joy and triumph, amid joyous tears. O! it was good to be there.

I have attended five district meetings in the last four years. All were good, but this one at Camden was by far the best and in many respects the most interesting, and I trust will prove the most useful.

The elected delegates to the Conference are John Sampey, J. A. C. Horn, John Dudley and D. T. Sermon. Alternates: Rev. L. M. Bethea and W. A. Terry.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Healdsburg, Cal., July 9, 1869.

Mr. Editor: Though we are at the utmost verge of the great West, yet we are not so far away from the East as not to see occasional displays of energy and internal improvements, so common with you. Facilities for traveling are many—mostly by stage, sometimes by steamers and cars. Sacramento, Feather and San Joaquin rivers are navigable. Stockton is reached by a slough. Communication with Los Angelos is had by a line of coast steamers. Railroads are being completed in several parts of the State. The Los Angelos road is completed to Gilroy, eighty miles from San Francisco. This is intended to connect with the Southern Pacific. The Napa road has its terminus at Vallejo—is completed for a few miles, and intended only for the valley from which it takes its name. The Marysville road, which will be completed to Chico, in Butte county, by fall, is intended to extend into Oregon. The Western Pacific, when completed, will connect Sacramento City with San Francisco by way of Stockton and south of the bay. The Union Pacific extends to Vallejo, its proper terminus, instead of Sacramento. Others are in contemplation, but have not as yet taken any permanent form.

Merchandising must be profitable, as every town has a full supply of dry goods, plantation supplies, etc. The trade of the country is drawn to the nearest villages and towns, where the merchants offer sufficient inducements to secure their patronage. The system of purchasing everything through commission merchants does not prevail. The credit system is practiced in a limited degree. The Jew has found his way into every locality where money can be made by this pursuit, and monopolizes the trade to a great extent. The price of goods is no cheaper in his hands than in those of others.

On the other hand, everything raised from the soil finds a ready sale. A fair price can be had at any time. Nothing need be kept on hand until the losses will exceed the value. Quick sales and ready profits seems to be the motto. If one is already supplied another is not; so that neither the purchaser nor the seller finds any trouble in having their wishes gratified. This does not seem to arise so much from the numerous wants of the people as their habits of trading. The practice of selling vegetables, grapes, fruit, grain and flour by weight has been substituted for the old system of selling by measure. By this method the purchaser gets the worth of his money. What is wanting in measure is made up in weight.

The energies of the people have contributed largely in supplying their own demands. Every town of any note has one, if not more, flouring mills. Woolen factories are in active operation at Marysville, San Jose and San Francisco. The goods manufactured are of excellent quality. Shoes and boots of our own make have more character for quality and durability than those imported. Much of the woodwork for wagons, buggies and machinery is shipped from elsewhere, as the kind needed does not grow in this climate. The inventions in machinery are said to be numerous, and to display great genius. I mention one only—the machine for laying railroad track. Last fall I made some observations as to its practical utility. It does not lay the track, but facilitates it. Its runs by steam. The ties are placed behind on a platform, and transported over the machine to a platform in front, from which they are taken and placed in order. The front part, for half the length of the rail, is two feet narrower than the track, supported at the extreme front by two small wheels, which first roll on the ties before the rails are laid, and braces attached to two beams of wood running back from the platform to the main body of the machine, at an angle of forty-five degrees. On each side of the main body are pockets, consisting of rollers, extending out at right angles. These receive the rails; then the workmen slide them forward, place them in the pulley, swing them forward, and let them down at the proper place. With its assistance three or four miles of track ought to be laid down per day. It is a great invention, if it can be made available on any route.

The financial condition of our people is prosperous, and perhaps conducted on as safe a plan as the unsettled circumstances with which we are surrounded will permit. The credit system is practiced, but with great judgment. It is not so universal in its application, nor indulgence granted for so long a time, as it has been with you. There are many wealthy men, while the masses are poor. There are a great many renters in proportion to population. The demands of this class have run land rent up to $10 per acre in this locality. During the gold excitement immense numbers of poor people came here and did not return to the States, many of whom are as poor as when they came, while others have amassed fortunes; a third class, by care and economy, enjoy a competency. The masses dug the gold, but the speculators got it. The wealth of many consists in the increase in the value of their lands, for they have little else. The farms are small compared with the immense plantations of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. A large class of rich people are in moderate circumstances. The estimate of wealth is so much below anything I have been accustomed to that it sometimes seems like a burlesque to hear a friend speak of another's possessions. The prosperity of the country fully meets the expectations of an emigrant on his arrival.

Perhaps no country has acquired as extensive a commerce in so short a time. Besides the coast trade, access is had to all the Eastern States, Mexico, South America, China, Europe and the Sandwich Islands. The commercial centre is San Francisco. It is to the Pacific coast what New York is to the Atlantic, and what New Orleans is to the Southwest. The imports exceed the exports, though the latter are very great. There is nothing wanting in quantity, quality and variety. Every want may be met, from the largest demands to the most limited desires. As it ebbs and flows, so do all the other financial interests of the State. The life current of trade takes its rise at this fountain, and pervades and influences every locality.

The people are noted for their energy and industry. Men, women and children are constantly employed at something. The rich, as well as the poor, follow out the proverb: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." There are also many idlers and loafers, as well as industrious people. Women discharge the duties of the culinary and laundry departments; if they need anything, go down town after it; drive buggies, ride in spring and freight wagons, either to town or church, without blushes, and with an air of independence truly admirable. Avarice and necessity control their actions more than inclination. Energy is the secret of great success.

Labor is so high that very few are able to hire house servants.—Chinamen are the cheapest, but not so cleanly as the Irish. Laborers in the harvest field get $2 per day for binding, $1 to $2 for reaping, $3 to $5 for driving team and feeding the thrasher; by the month or year, $1 to $1 50 per day.

Lord Palmerston was always very particular to write nothing rashly. He wrote at a standing desk, and kept his inkstand at the other end of the room, so that he had the time occupied in crossing the room twice to reflect upon what he intended to say. His own excuse for this habit was that he obtained necessary exercise by it.

AUBURN COLLEGE.—BY RAIL.

MR. EDITOR: It is a pleasant recreation to leave the slow locomotion of the saddle and buggy, and take a short trip by rail, drawn by the wonderful power of steam. John G. Saxe says this is pleasant,

"Riding on a rail."

The pleasure is heightened by the prospect of spending a few days in the halls of learning, and amid academic shades. How refreshing an occasional draught from the Pierian spring. It is at once a tonic and stimulant to fresh activity in the great field of intellectual effort. On Monday evening, 12th instant, we met at our depot Brother E. S. Smith, of the Lowndesboro station, who journeyed to the same destination, and were "somewhat filled with his company" until Auburn was announced. We were soon at the church, and greeted by the brethren, and heartily welcomed by President Dowdell. We give you brief notes of the occasion. We regretted we did not hear the commencement sermon, on Sunday, by Rev. O. R. Blue. Text, Matt. xxv, 25. It was pronounced able, clear, evangelical and impressive, as his sermons always are. Brother C. A. King, of Talladega station, preached on Sunday night. Subject, "In the Image of God Created He Them."

The Board of Trustees met on Monday, and continued in session, with little intermission, for three days.

Monday night, 12th instant.—Freshman declamation. Mr. J. B. Tarver, of Enon, Alabama, bore off the palms and the prize. We trust he, as well as the rest of his class, who all did well, have a bright history before them.

Tuesday night, 13th instant.—Sophomore declamation. This was more brilliant, as the contest was closer, and the young men had more experience. We had the pleasure of hearing most of them last year, and must say that their progress in this high art has been wonderful.

Mr. Williamson, of Oak Bowery, took the prize. There were several close competitors, and among them our young minister, Brother A. C. Baker, who was the fortunate one last year.

Rev. William Shapard delivered the prizes in a very handsome speech of twenty minutes, on striving for the mastery in the great moral and intellectual conflicts of the age.

Wednesday, July 14.—Commencement day. This was the great day of the intellectual feast. There was a crowd and a jam. Columbus, and other parts of Georgia, Opelika, Montgomery, Tuskegee and other towns, as well as the country, poured in their contributions of "fair women and brave men." The mercury aspired toward the boiling point.

Here is the programme: Action, R. C. Persons, Auburn, Alabama; Better than the Best, C. H. Lindsey, Opelika, Alabama; Heroic Actions, L. A. Dowdell, Auburn, Alabama; Decision of Character, L. G. Jackson, Auburn, Alabama; Effects of Science, J. J. Motley, Tuskegee, Alabama; Excelsior, J. D. Myrick, Midway, Georgia; No, A. G. Dowdell, Auburn, Alabama; Patriotism, A. S. Douglass, Louisville, Alabama. Mr. Douglass, the last-named, delivered the valedictory, and the degrees were conferred by the president, who addressed the class in a very brief but eloquent speech, giving them his parting counsel and blessing.

Two of the graduates are his sons, of whom any father might be proud.

The Hon. David Clopton addressed the societies. Subject, "Show Thyself a Man." An able, unique and interesting lecture on the power of the individual man, as opposed to societies, which have originated the mischievous and pestilent isms of the day.

Two members have been added to the board of instruction, viz.: Thomas C. Bragg, A. M., professor of mathematics, and A. R. Holcombe, professor of physical science. The election of two men so distinguished as scholars and teachers is a sure guarantee of success, and an augury of a bright future for the college. Prof. Holcombe is so well known at Summerfield, Mobile and Centenary College, we need say no more; while Prof. Bragg at Summerfield, at Central Institute, Lowndesboro and Montgomery, is well known as one of the ripest scholars and most successful teachers. Prof. Darby is elected emeritus professor of physical science.

Dr. Dowdell, we regret to see, is in feeble health, but we hope and pray he may long live to impress his character and influence upon the young men of the country.

The Board of Trustees had a long, but a most harmonious session. We have a prospect of extinguishing the debt, and of starting the college in a new career of prosperity.

B. B. R.

P. S.—We ought to have said in the body of this article that the young men of the graduating class all acquitted themselves with credit, reflecting high honor on themselves and the institution. We have never heard better speeches on such an occasion.

The levee on Wednesday night was so brilliant, the crowd so large, and there is floating through my vision such an array of beauty and intellect, and such a display of ornament that my pen falters, retires, stops for want of fitness for the task of description. Nothing transpired to mar the beauty and splendor of the scene.

A CHAPTER IN THE LIFE OF BISHOP SOULE.

BY BISHOP WIGHTMAN.

* * * In the latter part of August, 1833, Bishop Soule took the Shawnee and Delaware Indian mission stations en route to the session of the Missouri Conference. At these stations he spent ten days of active service, preaching, visiting, giving counsel and encouragement, and promoting by his personal influence the good work among the Indians. These missions, as well as a large part of the Arkansas Territory, belonged to the Missouri Conference at that time. Thomas Johnson had charge of the Shawnee mission and school, and his brother William, of the Delaware. Accompanied by these brothers and Andrew Monroe, presiding elder of the St. Louis district, the bishop set out on his journey. The route lay through a wilderness.

The outfit of the little party was as follows: Bishop Soule drove a light but strong carriage, drawn by a pair of fine bay horses—small, but of the first class in point of strength and powers of endurance. Stowed away in his carriage were some necessary camp fixtures and bedding, a small box of tools for purposes of occasional repair, and a box of provisions. The rest of the company had each an Indian pony that had been raised in the woods, and was accustomed to live on grass.

Setting out from the Shawnee mission, a few miles west of the Missouri State line, they reached by night the cabin of an adventurous settler, and were kindly entertained. The close of the next day found the party at the Old Harmony mission, which had been established some years before by the Presbyterians, and was then under the care of Rev. Mr. Jones. At this mission station they were quite comfortable. The next day our travelers left all the white settlements behind, and took their course through the pathless prairies for the Osage village on the Neosho, where they found quarters with Dr. Dodge—one of the earliest missionaries among the Osages. This excellent man had been there many years, and had spent much money for the improvement of the Indians, with but indifferent success, as he told Bishop Soule.

The following day was quite hot, and the prairie flies were exceedingly annoying; but our travelers pushed on, and just after sunset, without having seen a human habitation all day, reached a small water course, with stunted water shrubs growing on its banks. Here they halted. The tent was pitched; supper was cooked and eaten with keen appetite; and the little company enjoyed a quiet and refreshing night's rest. The next day's ride brought them into the Cherokee country, and they stopped at the Union mission, an old station, in charge of Rev. Mr. Vale, who received the bishop and his company with Christian hospitality, and gathered a congregation and had preaching. From this station they traveled down the Neosho to Fort Gibson, and thence up the Arkansas to the residence of Colonel Campbell, the agent for the Creek Indians. Here they rested and were kindly entertained for several days, until the time came for holding the Creek camp meeting. At this meeting, which was held a few miles south of the Arkansas river, Bishop Soule preached with great unction and power, and much to the delight and edification of those who heard him.

The remainder of the journey lay through the country occupied by the Cherokees. The Mountain Spring camp ground was the place where the Annual Conference convened. It was in the mountains of Arkansas, some three miles from any human habitation, and ten from the town of Fayette. The bishop and his party reached the camp ground in good time, and in fine health and spirits. The little band of preachers—the Conference then numbered only forty-four effective men—had come together at that remote point, through many hardships; and many were the outward discomforts of the meeting. The people who supported it were for the most part new settlers, living at considerable distances, and with limited means. The tents were low and crowded. It rained incessantly, and was very hot. The bedding became damp, the bread grew moldy, the meat spoiled. But Bishop Soule seemed to notice none of these things. He went deliberately on through the business of the Conference, his spirit as lofty and his face as serene and bright as though he were enjoying the magnificent hospitalities of a session in the city of Baltimore. The men around him could but feel the inspiring influence wielded by their fearless leader. They were there, on the outposts of civilized life, to concert plans for planting churches and preaching the Gospel in these mighty wildernesses of the West. At their head was the most heroic man of his time, whose grand spirit surveyed the whole continent, and longed to see it everywhere obedient to the faith. Never did the lofty and commanding features of his character shine more resplendent than at this camp meeting Conference, out there at the confines of civilization, with many a dusky Indian face wet with tears, turned to the rustic pulpit, where "Jesus and the resurrection" was proclaimed with power from on high.

After lasting a week the Conference adjourned, and the meeting closed. Bishop Soule, with several of the preachers, went to the house of a Brother Reece, a few miles from the camp ground, to repose for a night and make preparations for the return trip. The change from wet, disagreeable quarters to a pleasant dry house, was very refreshing. It would have been well had this venerable man, then in the thirty-fourth year of his active ministry, allowed himself a day or two of rest and relaxation; but urgent duties called him to other scenes of official service, and the next morning he left his parting prayer and blessing with the kind family, and set his face toward Boonville, Missouri, a distance of three hundred miles. Good Sister Reece furnished an ample supply for the provision box. The bishop's party now had an accession of two preachers, Brothers Green and Berryman. It was not long after setting out before the exposures at the camp meeting began to show their results. Bishop Soule had a chill, and became too sick to drive his carriage. In this emergency Brother Green, who was also very feeble, got into the carriage and took the reins. This road was exceedingly rough; and to add to the trouble, a violent thunder storm came up, accompanied with heavy rain, which drenched the men on horseback. Poor Green had a severe ague in the course of the day; but the bishop's fever had subsided sufficiently to allow him to resume the driver's seat. Thus the day wore away; and wet and weary they reached, at evening, the house of a Mr. Walker, and found comfortable quarters. All the following day they traveled in the rain, and at night brought up at a so-called house of entertainment. This was a log cabin, twelve by fourteen feet, with a stone floor. The only bed the house boasted of was on a scaffold of rough boards. The family occupying the shanty was large, and here was an addition of six men to be accommodated. The next house was fifteen miles farther on; and there was no help for it, the party must stop. So, hobbling their horses on the prairie, and kindling a good fire they warmed and dried themselves—none more cheerful or in better spirits than Bishop Soule. The hostess, it seemed, took frontier life easily; was very chatty, and entered into a lively conversation with her distinguished guest, much to the amusement of the whole party. The man of the house had been out hunting, and presently returned with several wild turkeys, one of which was speedily selected, dressed and cooked—I am sorry I cannot chronicle by which of the preachers—probably several lent a helping hand. The lady of the house was too much interested in her chat with the bishop to trouble herself with the cuisine. But it was in good hands; and in due time the turkey was on the table, accompanied with some of good Sister Reece's stores from the provision box. The supper was pronounced excellent on all hands. After family prayer the bishop and Brother Green had the bedstead assigned them; the rest of the company sought the softest place on the floor; and so got through the night the best way they could.

Resuming their journey the next morning, they halted at noon, made a fire and prepared some coffee, which the bishop enjoyed much. His friends began to hope that he would soon be well; but not long after starting a chill, succeeded by burning fever, came on; and he was quite ill when they reached the residence of Mrs. Robinson, the mother of one of the Missouri preachers. Here they stopped.—Medicine was administered to the bishop, and before the close of the night his fever had abated. Being better in the morning—which was Sunday—the travelers accompanied the family to church, several miles on their way; held divine service; and then pitched their tent and remained until next morning, on the ground where the town of Bolivar now stands. Early the next day the tent was struck and they got under way—Bishop Soule feeble but improving. In the course of the morning the Johnsons left the party, striking out through the broad and pathless prairies for the Shawnee mission, their point of destination. A rough and fatiguing ride brought the rest of the company to the house of a Mr. Williams, who had been with Clarke and Lewis over the Rocky mountains. Here they slept on the floor, and the bishop had a suffering, restless night. Next morning the woman of the house took an ague just as she was about getting breakfast. This devolved on our friend Monroe the task of preparing the meal. His hand was in. He had played hostler, doctor, nurse—"augur, medicus, magus"—and now he was cook; and succeeded in getting up a respectable breakfast. The bishop ate but little. His symptoms were no favorable. Nevertheless, the horses were harnessed, and hoping for the best, they took the road again.—Soon, however, his fever rose to an alarming height. They drove over an open prairie, destitute of water. The day soon became dreadfully hot, and the bishop's thirst was almost insupportable. After some hours a shower of rain filled the wagon ruts, out of which the coffee pot was supplied with water several times. This afforded partial relief. Reaching a rolling tract of country, they stopped, and the bishop's companions set out in search of water, but without success. Returning, they found that he had got ten out of the carriage, and was stretched on the ground, suffering intensely from thirst. It was some time before he could make the necessary exertion to set out again. They reached a house in a few hours, but the family were all sick. The bishop said he could go no farther. There was, however, in the house a clean spare bed, to which he was made heartily welcome. His fever was high, and he was flighty all the evening. In the morning, though he was much reduced in strength, his indomitable energy carried him on. He suffered less than on the day before; and a drive of five hours brought them to Brother Walker's, in Cooper county, twenty miles from Boonville. Here this eminent servant of God found not only desirable quarters with a kind family, well situated, who felt it a privilege to minister to his wants, but suitable medical attendance. Dr. Evans, formerly of Washington city, a Methodist gentleman well acquainted with Bishop Soule, was in the neighborhood. He was immediately sent for, and promptly took charge of the case. Bishop Soule had been pressing on in order to reach the session of the Illinois Conference. The doctor satisfied him that it was a hopeless endeavor. Quietly submitting to what was inevitable, and thankful that he was in the hands of a skillful medical adviser, and surrounded by friends whose attentions were unremitting, after some little time he became convalescent. * * * —Nashville Christian Advocate.

IT IS NOT hastily reading but seriously meditating upon holy and heavenly truths that makes them prove sweet and profitable to the soul.—It is not the bee's touching on the flowers that gathers honey, but her abiding for a time upon them, and drawing out the sweet. It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on divine truth that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.—Bishop Hall.

CELIBACY OF ITALIAN PRIESTS.

What shall the Roman Catholic Church do with her priests that marry? forms a question of no little interest for the coming Ecumenical Council. Already about forty persons formerly in priests' orders have contracted marriage in Italy, having first ceased to exercise sacerdotal functions. But in February of this year the Court of Appeals in Naples decided that a priest continuing in official connection with the Church of Rome was at liberty to marry. The history of the case resulting in this decision is briefly as follows: In the early part of last year Luigi Friglia, of the province of Salerno, went through the usual preliminary forms previous to a marriage, which he announced he desired to contract with Marianna Montefusco. His father opposed the application on the ground that his son was in priests' orders, had misunderstood the new law, and by marriage would be likely to offend the moral susceptibilities of the province. The case was argued before the judges of the Tribunal of Salerno on June 26, 1868, who decided "that the opposition of the father was valid, forbade the civil officers to proceed with the said marriage, and ordered that the promise already given should be struck out of the registers." From this the priest and the lady appealed, and the case, which excited intense interest, was heard, as we have already said.

The argument, pro and con, was briefly as follows: The advocate for the opposition said: 1. The priest was irrevocably bound to observe celibacy; 2. The code, making no mention of priests, left them in the same position in which they stood; 3. Silence does not exist, for since the canon makes the Catholic religion the religion of the State, its canons are binding; 4. The priests desirous of marrying should seek permission from the authority of the Councils and Vatican; 5. The advocate then said that the action of the church was beyond the reach of civil law, that the priest was under common and canon law. He then attempted to prove that from the time of Calixtus II to the Council of Trent the marriage of priests had been null and void. This was the course of argument pursued before the Court of Salerno, and repeated at Naples.

The judges admitted the force of the reasoning, deciding against the priests, and an appeal to Naples was the consequence. The court was composed of the president and five judges, all learned in the law. The proceedings were opened by the president, who made a lucid expose of the case. He was followed by the advocate of the appellant. The latter argued: "The civil code does not recognize canons, therefore the Church and State are separate. In the Italian code are enumerated all the impediments to marriage, but holy orders are not considered an impediment; holy orders are not laid down as a cause for the annulment of a marriage already contracted. A civil officer cannot refuse celebration of marriage except for a reason laid down in the law. Holy orders are not recognized as an impediment. The civil condition of the priest is unchanged by religious orders, and he is on the same level with other citizens, before the law. The State does not propose to use force for the promotion of the precepts of Catholicism, otherwise there would be no liberty of conscience."

The advocate adduced the example of Christ himself, who chose for his apostles and disciples men already married. He said: "When the pontiffs began to be rich and powerful; when they began to cherish an ambition for the dominion of the earth * * * and in their hands were seen the ring, the papal banner, the scepter, and the pastorate; when, in brief, arose the Stephens, the Gregories, and the Innocents; then, with a view of creating a powerful militia, which to the injury of society might blindly serve their unbridled ambition, there was conceived the idea of celibacy. Destroying the soul, the heart and the moral sentiment, it has well responded to the expectations entertained from it. * * * The law of the celibacy of the priesthood is not a divine dogma; it is a disciplinary law, purely ecclesiastical. * * * Hence the continued separation of the Greek Church from the Latin; hence the enormous scandals, the protests, the daily and ever-increasing immorality of the priests, until the necessity of ecclesiastical reform being asserted, the Council of Trent sanctioned the canon of celibacy for the whole Roman Catholic Church. Established then, as it is, as an incontestable principle that the law of the celibacy of the priests is not divine, but human, * * * who will declare that it is immutable, and that it must not, on the contrary, be subjected to the reformatory progress of society, and follow the course of universal legislation?"

The speech was listened to with intense attention, and interrupted with cries of "Bene," "Benissimo." The attorney general arose, recapitulated the arguments used on either side, and contended that "the marriage of priests was not only strictly legal, but that it was sanctioned by the law of nature and of God." * * * "Let Catholic ecclesiastics make what regulations for themselves they please—let them decorate their churches according to the caprices of taste—they shall be protected, as shall be those of all religions; but let them not dare to interfere with the civil laws of the country. The law is sovereign, and before that all are equal. It is probable that many will be offended at first by the marriage of a priest, but that feeling will pass away; and for himself, he would greatly prefer to take a priest by the hand who led not a concubine but a wife to his house." The speech of the attorney general has special significance from the fact that he is the legal representative of the King, and may be supposed to have expressed the deliberate opinion of the government. Henceforth, we may hope, the church cannot deprive its priests of their civil rights in Italy. The married priest continues to be a priest, for "once a priest always a priest," but the church will no doubt prohibit him from exercising priestly functions. Whether or no the matter will assume sufficient importance in the minds of the hierarchy to become a question before the great council in December, cannot at present be known. Certainly it is cause for joy that Italy, so long benighted, is seeing a great light, and is daring to approach it. If the last battle between the freedom of God's children and the bondage of Rome must be fought here in the United States, may God grant us courage and strength to strike as bravely as have these just emerged from Rome's dark dungeon.—Rev. C. R. Barnes in New York Christian Advocate.

THE SUNKEN LAKE.—The Sentinel, published at Jacksonville, Oregon, of the 12th of January, says:

Several of our citizens returned last week from a visit to the great sunken lake, situated in the Cascade mountains, about seventy-five miles northeast from Jacksonville. This lake is thought to average two thousand feet down to the water all around. The walls are almost perpendicular, running down into the water, and leaving no beach. The depth of the water is unknown, and its surface is smooth and unruffled, and it lies so far below the surface of the mountain that the air currents do not affect it. Its length is estimated at twelve miles, and its breadth at ten.

No living man ever has or probably ever will be able to reach the water's edge. It lies silent, still and mysterious in the bosom of the "everlasting hills," like a huge well scooped out by the hands of the giant genii of the mountain in unknown ages gone by. Around it the primeval forests watch and ward are keeping. The visiting party fired a rifle several times into the water, at an angle of forty-five degrees, and were able to note several seconds of time from the report of the gun until the ball struck the water. Such seems incredible, but it is vouched for by some of our most reliable citizens. The lake is certainly a most remarkable curiosity.

SMALL BED CHAMBERS.—There is reason to believe that more cases of dangerous and fatal diseases are gradually engendered annually by the habit of sleeping in small, unventilated rooms, than have occurred from cholera atmosphere in any year since it has made its appearance in this country. Very many persons sleep in eight-by-ten rooms—that is, in rooms the length and breadth of which multiplied again by ten, for the height of the chamber, would make just eight hundred cubic feet, while the cubic feet for each bed, according to the English apportionment for hospitals, is twenty-one hundred feet. But more, in order "to give the air in a sick-room the highest degree of freshness," the French hospitals contract for a complete renewal of the air of a room every hour, while the English assert that double the amount, or over four thousand feet an hour, is required.

Four thousand feet an hour! and yet there are multitudes who sleep with closed doors and windows in rooms which do not contain a thousand cubic feet of space, and that thousand feet is to last all night, at least eight hours.

CONDEMNED murderers in Utah have the privilege of choosing the manner of their death. They generally prefer shooting.

MORE QUARTERAGE.

A most worthy friend, whose brother is a local preacher in the pine regions back of Mobile, called at our house during the past week and left a couple of alligators "for the parson." One of them, we are sorry to say, the boys lost by "projecting" with him in the lake; the other is doing well. We have felt an unusual interest in the study of this composite creature ever since we learned that in its organization it is both mammal, bird, fish and reptile. It has a diaphragm like a mammal, its blood is oxydized by the air from its body outside of the lungs like a bird, it can separate air from water like a fish, and only one-half of the blood returning by the veins is fully oxydized, thus constituting all its lower parts cold blooded, like a reptile. On land it has only one-half the life that it has in the water, as only there does it receive a full supply of oxygen from water taken into the cavity of the stomach. Thus this ugly monster seems to have been made in the corner of four kingdoms, and has had lavished upon him unusual marks of the power and skill of the Creator. He is evidently no mean member of that police force so wisely placed in the prolific waters of the tropics to keep down the swarming myriads of fish that would otherwise oppress the deep. This we imagine to be his principal use, though out in the Calcasieu prairie hundreds of them are easily taken, and furnish a useful oil and a tolerable article of hide. They grow to a great size, and never stop growing. They are severe upon pigs and dogs, and Bishop Simpson says they sometimes pursue small negroes, "who only escape by running in a zigzag course." This last is a purely Texas item, collected by the bishop. Curious, interesting and suggestive they are physiologically, but as an item of ministerial support alligators are entirely without value. We will send the one we have to any subscriber who may apply for it and enclose express charges.

MRS. HARRIET FUQUA

We have just heard that this most estimable lady and mother in Israel is no more. She died in great peace, at Baton Rouge, on Monday, the 26th of July, about the time of the offering up of the evening sacrifice. She was about sixty five years of age, and had long been a member of the Methodist Church. A more extended notice will be given hereafter.

EXHORTERS AND CLASS LEADERS

These titles are purely Wesleyan, and represent offices and functions peculiar to Methodism. To dispense with them would signify a revolution in the church system of Wesley only to be equaled by the displacing its mobilized pastorate with a settled ministry, or the substituting its "itinerant general superintendency" with a diocesan episcopacy. Mr. Wesley regarded the use of the unordained preacher and the class leader in the light of a discovery as well as a providence. He was very careful to take none of the glory to himself of having first brought these great instrumentalities into action, but with much pains shows how they came providentially to be. No one can analyze the wonderful success of the Wesleys without marking how largely it was indebted to the godly labors of these two classes of evangelists.—An exhorter is a local preacher in embryo, requiring more or less time for full development. Without these valuable aids the Oxford students could never have followed up the awakenings which attended upon their preaching. The work multiplied so rapidly upon their hands that they must of necessity have suffered it to go to waste of its own luxuriance had not God raised up these efficient, humble laborers in numbers sufficient to protect and train the converts.—Through these co-workers the Wesleyan Church has had from its beginning the most efficient and well organized pastorate that can be imagined. The whole membership was divided into small squads, and over each of these squads was placed one man, who was expected to see weekly at the class room, or elsewhere, every individual member, to exhort, comfort, reprove and instruct. No other church of modern times has had any such comprehensive, all pervading and instant pastorate. Doubtless this pastor was not always wise, or polished, or tender, or even competent for so delicate an office. But still the work was done, if not in the very best style; and it was far better that it should be imperfectly accomplished than that it should go wholly unattempted. A sincere desire to do good will usually make up for any awkwardness in the method. This love of souls was the chief quality which Mr. Wesley found in his exhorter or leader, and it was a large compensation for many defects.

It may be doubted if Mr. Wesley himself could have reached thousands who were brought directly into his church through the class room, for their conviction began there. Long before he had any houses of worship under his control, Wesleyans could be numbered by the thousand. Prayer meetings and class meetings in "upper rooms" in every part of London, Bristol, Birmingham, and the hundred towns and hamlets of Great Britain, were doing a work that her cathedrals, elaborate minsters, and other venerable and costly piles, devoted to the service of God, had failed to accomplish. The imposing architecture, gorgeous ceremonials and swelling anthems of these sacred fanes did not attract the people; their aisles were empty, or only filled with the echoing intonations of some learned preacher, or the awe-inspiring vibrations of an organ swept, it may be, by the magic power of a Handel. The Spirit of God, if there, waited in vain for the congregation. And when, by the providence of God, John Wesley was driven out of these fretted temples to the tombstone of his father for a pulpit, he was then being sent by the Spirit in pursuit of the people. He found them in the fields and highways; there they were convicted of the truth, and a work of God began in them, which was to be finished in the parlor or workshop of some godly class leader, amid the prayers and hymns of a small circle of holy men and women.

It is easy to see that for penetrating all points of a city or kingdom at once nothing could surpass such an agency. Where every man attacks his neighbor "the slain of the Lord" must be many. Working people who could not, after the toil of the day, gather in clean attire at the parish church, might be reached in a prayer meeting within a few steps of home. The men who were selected to save others soon constituted the staple and chief support of the Wesleyan system. They themselves advanced in piety and recruited their own ranks on every side. The Holy Spirit honored with His presence these separate companies, and swelled with their rivalets that most glorious flood of the eighteenth century. It was a partisan system of warfare which multiplied opportunities and offered to every one an occasion for becoming a Christian hero. It virtually abolished the idea of suspending the salvation of ten thousand men upon the unaided, single labors of one finite man, no matter how gifted, and brought in helpers of all kinds, or even rough rocks, that they might hold up his arms until the Enemy could be overcome.

It would be profitable to consider how far Methodism still uses this agency. We are impressed with the fact that by a false estimate of true strength our quarterly conferences have refused to send out men who were unpolished sons of thunder simply because they had nothing but faith and zeal to recommend them. Grammar has been held in higher estimation than faith, and a pleasant manner has been in greater demand than any gracious endorsings of the Spirit. Official men have listened for other people rather than for themselves, and found the candidate wanting. They have advocated a higher standard of ministerial ability and fitness; they have refused to put men to work, until at length nobody offers to work. We have forgotten that this is a rough world, and a good deal of God's work has to be done without gloves—so that now in many places we have no exhorters, no men so immediately from the people as to know how to reach the people. We have guarded the pulpit and the altar until to some extent we have lost sight of the congregation. If these quarterly conferences and presiding elders and churches could be transported back to see one of John Wesley's class meetings and love feasts, and to hear one of his exhorters or leaders, the chances are they would be ashamed of the rock from whence they were hewn and the hole of the pit from whence they were digged

To add to these novelties—for what is there like "progress?"—we have officially discouraged, scattered and well nigh abolished classes and leaders. If there were no other use for the class meeting than to give a large body of men, who are capable of work, something to do in the church of God, who now, alas! are idle, it would be ground enough for reviving this part of our system. And we hope that the General Conference will soberly entertain the question: "What can be done to restore to Southern Methodism the institution of class meeting?"—a question vastly more important than Conference lines or the increase of our episcopacy. Having voted for the action which the last General Conference took in regard to classes, we feel at full liberty to confess the error, and stand ready to adopt any correction which the wisdom of our brethren may offer. We wish to bring into play again the wasted and wasting material of our membership. It is a great mistake to suppose that a common man may not by prayer and faith convert a sinner from the error of his way and save a soul from death.

CAMP MEETING.

There will be a camp meeting, on the primitive Methodist style, at Beulah church, Pleasant Hill and Manny circuit, Shreveport district, commencing September 16. Everybody is invited, and ministers specially. The latter will find ample accommodation, gratuitous, by friends encamped on the ground. Ministers wishing to bring their families are advised to make the arrangement for their accommodation in due time, as we are not prepared to say to what extent entire families can be accommodated.

JAS. M. FRANKLIN, P. C.

CAMP MEETINGS OF THE OLD STYLE.

A camp meeting is advertised for the 16th of September, at Beulah church, on Pleasant Hill and Manny circuit, Louisiana Conference; to be held, says the preacher in charge, "in primitive Methodist style." We wish that one hundred, in that same "style," were about to come off. The old style camp meeting is precisely what our church needs at this juncture in her affairs. It used to consist of a good camping ground—that is, a ground sufficiently rolling—with an abundance of shade, board timber, and sweet water; located on some central part of the circuit, yet far enough out of the way to discourage peddlers. Then there should be a goodly company of tenters, so that the congregation may present the important attraction of many strange faces. Better drive thirty miles to a meeting where one sees somebody after getting there, than ten miles to the mere assembling of a few neighborhoods. People need the isolating effect of a multitude of strangers to aid them in hearing the Gospel. New looks, voices, forms, and even styles of dress and entertainment, have a waking-up power; it sets the mind upon new trains of thought to see the most important of all new things—new men and new women. The preacher can now hope to be heard, for the congregation is awake of itself. The movement of any one part of his audience will be immediately distributed through the whole with increasing momentum. The awe and novelty of the occasion will attach to every word spoken; men will listen for themselves and others, and will in turn be affected by the manifest effect of the sermon upon strangers.

We were made for praising God in masses, so that holy anthems should swell upon the air "as the sound of many waters," and hosannas should peal through the lofty arches of the forest as the long-measured surf rolls upon the shore of the Pacific. It is amid the surroundings of an old style camp meeting, if in any spot this side of heaven, that such music is heard. It commands the attention of the angels; and if there is anything in the soul of the preacher it will then come out. The effect of the camp meeting upon the Methodist pulpit has never been estimated. The giants of the West were developed at the eleven o'clock service on Sabbath morning while in and about the "stand" of those camp meetings of Kentucky and Tennessee, which for power shook the earth. The girdings of that hour made the Bascombs, the McKendrys and the Lindseys of that day. The sea of unknown faces, the witnessing pines and oaks, the united strength and presence of many spirit-breathing churches, the inspiring hymns and songs pouring their melody down to the very moment of announcing the text—and more than all else, that cloud of the Holy Ghost, which hung in invisible but felt power over the encampment—these were the influences, natural and spiritual, which molded those men into "masters of assemblies," capable of driving the nail of truth into the ear of every hearer, and so making him its willing slave forever. The young "prophets," sitting about the altar, could not see the very horses and fire of those great flights of superhuman speech without hoping for a measure of the same spirit; and upon not a few of them the mantle did fall. No other school has produced such popular spiritual preachers as has the camp ground. No such "lectures" are anywhere else delivered for instruction in the divine art of preaching.

The hospitality of the old style camper was something: his long, rough table and out-door rack of smoking pots, the substantial meats and steaming pone, the milk and butter, and oven things which go beyond and appertain somewhat to a "second course"—all these lent their influence, and, as of yore, the generous overflow of a patriarchal impulse ministers to the entertainment of the friends of the Saviour; "strangers" sit down to the board, but just before they go turn into "angels." Let no ascetic come in here with his endless exhortations for cold victuals. What is the use of good food, if it may not be served up at such a time? Many a careless one has been arrested and won by the full measure and unaffected heartiness of such a table set before him in the wilderness. Surely people must be in earnest who take so much pains to sustain for one week so great a company, only that they may impart or receive good. And is it not so that one who consents to eat at your table may be supposed to be not wholly inaccessible to your conversation? It was then altogether proper and consistent that the preacher in the Beulah advertisement should say: "Everybody is invited."

Then, too, there was in those camp meetings of other days not only the best preaching, the sweetest singing, and the most abundant cheer, but tents full of prayer. At all hours could be heard the voice of those who were contending with the Angel for the mastery. The altar was everywhere, and mourners were led from the arbor to a smaller circle of interested friends, and there holped through the "creature" groanings of a deep repentance into the "glorious liberty of the sons of God." Far in the night shoutings, prayers and songs of praise alternated, and held earth to the atmosphere of heaven until the morning should break. Those were days when the fire ran all along the line; the holy sympathy touched every breast, every face shone, and no ordinary power of sin or unbelief could resist the tremendous accumulative faith of the encamped host. From this centre revivals were kindled in all parts of the surrounding country. Every man bore home with him a torch which had been lighted at the meeting.

Then, too, those old time preachers met in the Spirit, and wrought in the Spirit, and separated in the Spirit. How to awaken men from their deadly sleep, how to rescue their best earthly friends from the terrible fate that hung over them, how to lessen the depressing horrors of a life nearly spent and yet unprepared to cease, or how to check the mad flow of those fierce and base passions which then, as now, threatened to overflow the land—these were the thoughts that filled their godly minds. The struggle was a mighty one, but God lent them His help—"groanings which cannot be uttered"—and they prevailed. They were no mere idlers attending the services and the cheer, full of humor and empty of power, having many anecdotes and but few sermons. No; their prayers were like the wrestlings of Israel, their words searched like the trumpet of Sinai. The people trembled, and many fell to the earth His marchings might then be seen. The glory of God arose in full view of the assembly, and thousands shouted for joy.

Oh! for such a "primitive Methodist camp meeting" at Beulah! May the Lord make that 16th of September to that circuit the beginning of months! And we hope that every district meeting will entertain the subject of camp meetings, and not close until it has arranged for one of primitive breadth and power.

GOSPEL ACCESSORIES.

The Gospel, perhaps, ought to succeed on its own merits, and without the manifold appliances with which religious enterprise seeks to surround it. It is "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit," but, at the same time, our modern faith leans very much upon the visible means. Possibly the tendency is to go too far in this direction, and thus to make external methods and forms equally essential with the Holy Spirit. We may not tie the gifts of the Spirit to the sacraments, nor saving grace to a prelatical ceremony, but we may conceive of the work of God as depending, essentially, upon what is extrinsic in its character.

There is, at times, a state of unrest in churches when many are casting about for the cause and remedy of religious declension, and of general hardness and unbelief. There is a feeling of dissatisfaction, and, perhaps, a distrust of present plans. There is a clamor for changes in the economy of the church, and an eager desire to try some new expedients. It is a symptom of this disposition to attach almost saving value to mere plans and organizations. Then, again, we must have better music and finer architecture. There must be more elegance and finer refinement in the ministry and worship, and there must be obvious adaptations to meet an advanced social position and culture. Changes in economy are doubtless good occasionally, and the gratification of true taste and refinement in divine service is to be encouraged. Neither can too much care and thought be bestowed upon our Sunday schools and other religious associations.

The Gospel won its earliest and most wonderful triumphs when there were few of these aids. The great reformations and revivals display the work of the Spirit, with few attendant means beyond the written word and the living preacher. Is God unable and unwilling to work as in former times, by the simple means which have been attended with the greatest power? The Gospel is not likely to be preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, so long as our faith rests in outward expedients; nor are we approaching the baptism of fire when the church is looking to the devices of legislation for relief. What is more calculated to grieve the Holy Spirit than this disposition to place the mere accessories of the Gospel, if not above, yet nearly on an equality with Himself?

This is an aspect of unbelief in the churches at the present time. By some the Holy One is limited by the sacraments, and by others, who think themselves far from ritualism, He is made to wait upon improved methods and plans of Christian effort. By all means let our church economy be made as perfect as possible in every detail and particular, but let us still feel our complete dependence upon God. "I believe in the Holy Ghost" is an item in the creed which needs to be constantly affirmed and vindicated. The mere details of outward measures and forms are not of chief importance. Neither Christ nor His apostles seemed to think much of them. The Saviour was to be glorified by the Spirit, and Christ was "straitened" until His death opened this wonderful gift for men.

In the atmosphere of Pentecost it would seem absurd to attach much value to this, rather than that mode of ecclesiastical operation. There was a mighty power and an all-pervading life, and none could feel that there was any grand essential beyond the heavenly presence which rested upon the people. Have we traveled beyond the atmosphere of Pentecost, and so far beyond that we must rest upon some other ground of success?

This continual direction of thought to the outward means and expedients has, in some degree, called our attention away from the all-important want of the times. It is faith in the Holy Ghost, especially, that appears to be most needful. Till the church be endued with power from on high what can be done? Of what use is more change, more ecclesiastical machinery, more societies and organizations, without the Spirit? The God who "dwelleth between the cherubim must shine forth," and we shall be saved only when He causes His "face to shine upon us." There are some means, such as the class meetings and camp meetings, and the altar exercises of Methodism, which the Holy Spirit has signally blessed. His methods seem to harmonize with these simple and practical modes of devotion, and they have been chosen instrumentalities of good. The mercy seat without the Shekinah would be without comfort or attraction to the soul; and so would it be with these tried means of grace, if we could believe that they are to be disowned and abandoned by the divine Paraclete. We cling to the few and simple ordinances which have grown into use under the immediate baptism of the Spirit, but we do not regard their relation to His operations as essential. By the use of certain means we may cherish and court the Spirit's presence, but above all means, and in harmony with them, is our faith in this "promise of the Father." The tongue of fire will certainly fall upon us so soon as we reach the conviction that it is this which we need, and that the Gospel is nothing without it. *

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MR. P. WERLEIN, 80 Baronne st., can supply the best pianos in the market, and all varieties of music. His organs, violins, and an excellent assortment of all kinds of musical instruments, present an unusual attraction to purchasers, because he is known to be an experienced dealer and judge of this kind of merchandise, and is withal thoroughly reliable in his representations and engagements. See advertisement.

ATTENTION is particularly directed to the advertisement of Zable & Dalton. They deal in stoves, hardware, mantles, etc. The stove which is specially noticed in their card is worth the careful inspection of all who are about to refurnish their kitchens. We commend these gentlemen to the patronage of our friends, and wish them the success which their character and enterprise merit.

UNIVERSITY OF LOUISIANA—Medical Department.—The advertisement of this institution appears in the present number of our paper. We believe there is no better medical school anywhere, and for students who expect to practice in the South this is the very best. The practical advantages of the Charity Hospital cannot be overestimated, and the names of the eminent physicians who compose the faculty sufficiently guarantee thoroughness in the course of instruction.

CENTENARY MALE INSTITUTE, AT SUMMERFIELD, ALABAMA.—This is a Conference institute, and one of the best in the bounds of our church. We can recommend it to our people as in every way worthy of their patronage. The supervision of the Mobile Conference is a sufficient guarantee for its continued efficiency, and if anything more were needed it is to be found in the experienced and successful teacher now at its head—the Rev. John Massey.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, AT FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.—The Rev. R. K. Hargrove, formerly of the Mobile Conference, is the president. It is finely located and ably manned. We can endorse it because we can endorse its president to any extent. See advertisement.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

CHINESE LABOR QUESTION.

The following report was submitted to the Chamber of Commerce, the report adopted and copies ordered to be furnished to the press:

To the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Chamber—Your delegates, appointed to attend the Chinese Labor Convention held at Memphis, Tennessee, commencing 13th instant, report their attendance on said convention, which was of deep interest, and much good may reasonably be expected from the information obtained and discussions had during the three days of its session.

Citizens of large experience and deeply interested in the development of the agricultural resources of the country were in attendance as delegates from seven or eight States, and the business presented received more constant attention than is usual in so large a body—there being more than two hundred delegates.

The principal object of the convention, as indicated by the call, was to consider the practicability of obtaining immigrants from China, whose habits of life, the climate and productions of their own country, fitted them in an eminent degree for field labor in the production of cotton, sugar, rice and tobacco. In connection with this main question, committees were appointed and able reports made on transportation, finance and immigration generally. As the proceedings of this important convention will be published in form for general circulation, with full reports of committees and arguments, it is unnecessary to attempt a full statement in this report.

With a subject of this magnitude, comparatively new, before so large an assembly, it was not expected nor perhaps desirable that entire harmony of views should prevail. Discussion and argument developed the general idea of immigration, and particularly such as is wanted to increase the agricultural productions of the South and Southwest, while the able report on "immigration generally" shows that the subject is receiving such attention here as has resulted so much to the interest of the North, East and West.

Some arguments were made, particularly against immigration from China, as tending to demoralize our own citizens. These were entertained by a very small number only, and were evidently abandoned after the statements made by Mr. Tye Kim Orr, an intelligent native Chinaman, now a resident on the Lafourche. His statement of facts as to his country, his people, their habits of industry, endurance and frugality, as also the productions of that country, were listened to with marked attention.

Mr. Koopmanschap, from San Francisco, who has extensive commercial relations with China, gave much valuable information. Some thirty thousand emigrants from China arrived in California by his line of steamers, who have been employed on railroads, in mining, in agriculture, and as domestics, giving general satisfaction.

The lines of steamers from San Francisco to the ports in China, and the Pacific Railroad, open the way for this class of immigrants to reach the valley of the Mississippi in forty to fifty days, at an expense of about $100—nearly equally divided between the steamers and railroad.

The question of "finance," or "ways and means," to assist and encourage immigrants, was submitted in a full report and supported by able argument. The report was adopted by the convention, and books for subscription to a Joint Stock or Immigration Labor Company, located at Memphis, will be opened in the principal cities.

As this is a new subject, of great importance and magnitude, requiring investigation and reflection, your delegation declined committing themselves to any definite scheme of procedure, but report to this chamber and the citizens of Louisiana, at the same time approving in general the conclusions arrived at by the convention, and are unanimous in the opinion that much good must result from the proceedings of this convention.

Some one hundred thousand Chinamen are already in the United States, and profitably employed. The door to that hive of human beings is open, and whether emigration from China is encouraged, the industry of its millions employed to develop the agricultural, mineral, manufacturing and commercial wealth of the New World or not, we believe they will come, and in a few years exceed that from any other country, unless prohibitory laws prevent.

We commend the subject of immigration to this chamber and to the citizens of Louisiana, believing that much good may result to our State and the country if meetings are held, information obtained, organizations formed on a practical footing, similar to the "Commissioners of Immigration" in other States, with such alterations as may be deemed necessary—all such movements to be in accordance with the laws of our government—that the rich lands of this great valley, the Gulf and Atlantic States, may be cultivated, giving quiet and happy homes to the immigrants, with enterprise, prosperity and wealth to the entire nation.

The demands of commerce, the comfort, economy and safety of immigrants, may find other channels of communication than the one referred to above, but these matters are for your consideration and future action if deemed necessary.

We state with much pleasure that J. M. Davis, Esq., general passenger agent for the St. Louis and Pacific Railroad, publishes the entire proceedings of the convention gratis. He will also give a free ticket over that road to San Francisco and return, to any agent who may go to assist immigrants in reaching the valley of the Mississippi via the Union Pacific Railroad.

This report, having been unanimously approved by the delegation, is respectfully submitted,

MOSES GREENWOOD,
Chairman.

OBITUARIES.

Died, at his residence near Springville, Natchitoches parish, Louisiana, June 13, 1869, Mr. GRANVILLE FRANKLIN, aged forty-eight years.

With hearts full of sympathy for the mourning widow and fatherless children of our deceased friend, we tearfully record his lamented death. But two weeks have elapsed since he was called upon to consign to the earth the idol of his heart—his much loved and darling daughter Rosa. This heavy affliction, together with a cough and fever which immediately followed, soon began to tell upon the slender frame of the stricken father, and after a few days of intense suffering he meekly submitted his pale brow to the icy kiss of the mysterious death-angel whose chilling presence still lingers threateningly in the doomed abode of the bereaved and sorrow-stricken family.

Mr. Franklin was a native of Virginia. He came to Louisiana in 1847; married in 1849; and was one of our best and most worthy citizens. He was a kind husband, an affectionate father, a true friend and a good neighbor. He was for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and when dying his soul was filled with comfort and peace, and he joyfully exclaimed: "Thank God, I am ready to go!"

His crowning virtue was his religion, and his death was a complete triumph of the faith which he professed.

His body was sadly borne to its last resting place by his Masonic brethren, whose solemn and impressive ceremony above the remains of their deceased brother was witnessed by a large concourse of mourning friends and weeping relatives. R.

Died, May 28, 1869, at the residence of her parents, near Springville, Miss ROSA T. FRANKLIN, aged nineteen years.

The golden bowl is broken, the silver cord is loosed, and like a lily pure has passed away one of earth's brightest and most cherished forms. A mother's fondest hopes are crushed; a father's heart lies buried low in the grave of his darling child. Possessed of many noble and endearing traits of character, she leaves a multitude of warm and devoted friends to mourn her untimely death. Little did she think, a short time before her death, when standing in the midst of an admiring circle of friends and relatives to be crowned their chosen queen of beauteous May, that ere one short month should have passed away the cold and icy fingers of death would have placed his pale, sad signet upon her fair young brow, to crown her an angel fit for the paradise of God.

But alas! for all earthly hopes and human ties! We have naught left but her sweet memory to remind us of her bright but brief career.

Born in this world, where flowers of fairest hue
First fade away;
Herself a rose—she lived as roses do
But for a day. R.

Died, June 19, 1869, at the residence of his mother, near Springville, SUMTER FRANKLIN, aged fourteen years.

Again we are called upon to mourn the loss of a mother's most precious household treasure. One by one, in quick succession, have her cherished ones become worn and weary in their struggling ascent up the pathway of life, and with tired feet have lain down in the dust and fallen asleep; and now with pale hands meekly folded above pulseless breasts they calmly and sweetly rest, and patiently await our coming to join them in a better world, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more. TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus shewing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Letter from Major J. T. Hester, of Alabama:

AUBURN, ALA., April 4, 1869.

MESSRS JOHN DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents.: I have received no much benefit from "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid" that I feel it my duty to let you know it. I had an attack of Typhoid Fever, and with it a most stubborn case of Erysipelas, and was confined to my bed near two months, suffering the most intense pain all the time from Erysipelas; and after exhausting the many prescriptions of my physician, he finally commenced the use of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, and soon found that I was being improved by its use, and continued to use it, and am nearly well. I consider it the most valuable medicine for the diseases and purposes for which it is made that is sold. I also used it most successfully on my little son, who was severely burned, and I do assure you that it was from this medicine alone that I could get any relief from my distressing attack of Erysipelas.

I do not write you this as a certificate for publication, but as a duty that I feel I owe to Professor Darby and his invaluable medicine.

I shall never be without it again if I can by any possible means get it.

I hope you are succeeding, and will make a fortune.

Very truly yours,
J. T. HESTER.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

FEES.—The American Medical Association, at the meeting in May last at New Orleans, passed a resolution that no school charging less than $120, (while it favored by a large majority $140,) should be represented in that body, nor should graduates of such schools be recognized. Therefore the tickets for the full course of lectures is $140; Matriculating, $5; Dissecting, $10; Graduating $30.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.. ....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circular to

O. F. CAREY,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no improvement to notice in the general market during the past three days, but sugar and molasses have been in more active request, and all the receipts, as well as some small lots from second hands, have met a ready sale at firm prices. Very little has been done in Western produce, the supplies of which are too limited to admit of any movement for export. Corn continues to command $1 20 to $1 25 per bushel. Some samples have been received of choice Tennessee wheat of the new crop. We learn that after fully supplying the milling demand there will be a considerable surplus from Kentucky, Tennessee and North Alabama, most, if not all, of which will be sent to this market.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, and the accounts from the country continue encouraging, but by no means so universally flattering as is occasionally stated by the daily press. The present indications are that there will be an increase in both cotton and sugar, but to what extent cannot be safely predicted. Both crops are yet subject to contingencies which may disappoint the anticipations of parties who hastily jump to the conclusion of an unusually large yield, without making an allowance for the many causes which may curtail production. As we remarked in our last number, estimates at this early period are conjectural, and no practical man will offer them as entitled to any more weight. Parties who now find that last year's crop will probably be 600,000 bales less than they boldly estimated, and that our receipts at this port will fall short 200,000 bales of their predictions, ought to show some reserve in their guesses with regard to the incoming crop.

The river remains about the same, being three feet nine inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 23d instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	283
Mobile	121
Total	405

On Saturday the demand was extremely limited, and the sales were confined to 78 bales, taken in trifling lots at irregular prices, strict ordinary having sold at 26c., and strict good ordinary to low middling at 28¾c. On Monday there was some demand for Liverpool, and the movement being aided by favorable telegrams, a material advance in foreign exchange, and easier prices, the sales summed up 700 bales, mostly on the basis of 28 to 29c. for good ordinary, and 29½ to 30½c. for low middling, but with trifling lots at less than inside figures. On Tuesday there was again a moderate inquiry, but in consequence of being unable to find the kinds wanted, and the high prices asked, all the buyers withdrew but one, who got 100 bales at figures showing no marked variation.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 878 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 794,148 bales, against 586,812 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 81,317 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 22,567 bales to France, and of 5,728 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 248,206 to Great Britain.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	26 to 27
Good ordinary	28 to 29
Low middling	29½ to 30½
Middling	— to 32½
Strict middling	— to —

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—The following was transmitted over the French cable to-day:

PARIS, July 29, 8.45 A. M.

The Emperor of the French to the President of the United States, at Washington:

I am highly gratified to inaugurate the new line of telegraph, which unites France with the United States, by sending you the expression of my good wishes for you and the prosperity of the United States.

NAPOLEON.

REPLY OF THE PRESIDENT.

The President of the United States to the Emperor of the French:

I cordially reciprocate your good wishes, and trust that the liberal policy of the United States, pursuant to which this cable has been landed, may result in many such means of communication, especially between this country and its earliest allies. U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—The Cubans here have official advices to the 26th.

The Cubans, in recent engagements, have made quite a number of prisoners, which prevents immediate slaughter of captured Cubans and secures their proper treatment. The modification extends to captured filibusters.

Quesada has completely destroyed communication with Puerto Principe. Sickness in the city alone prevents its occupation. Several efforts of Latona to open communication have been disastrously defeated, the Spanish loss being treble that of the Cubans. Latona's effective force at Neevitas and in the entire district is about four thousand; Quesada's nearly nine thousand, well armed and disciplined men prepared to advance when the health of the coast permits. Jordan had several defensive fights, in all of which the Spaniards were repulsed with proportionately great loss.

At Villa Clara the Spaniards lost two hundred men, with arms, ammunition, wagons, ordnance and provision trains. Another expedition near Trinidad, to take possession of certain marked plantations, was nearly destroyed—eighty were killed and three hundred captured. The number of Spaniards engaged in this fight, one thousand three hundred; Cubans, seven hundred and sixty.

Jordan reports himself and troops in excellent condition, and asserts that his command is equal to three times the same number of those opposed to him. He says they are well organized, well drilled, and fight like demons. His force is daily increased by recruits. He expresses entire confidence in success.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The new tobacco stamps registered are ready. Unregistered will be ready in ten days.

Radicals here think that the test oath will be exacted from the Virginia Legislature.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The seizure of the Spanish gunboats is still attracting attention. It is understood that Marshal Barlow has stated his intention to rigidly obey the orders of the government for the suppression of fillibustering expeditions, whether by Cubans or Spaniards, and that the vessels are not to be released unless by orders from Washington.

The marshal is said to have had information that each vessel was to carry a one hundred pound swivel, and the manufacture of these and other necessary munitions of war had been contracted for. Measures have been taken to prevent their delivery to the Spanish authorities.

EUROPE.

MADRID, Aug. 3.—The Captain General of Madrid has addressed a letter to Regent Serrano and General Prim, in which he says: "I took part in the revolution hoping to see morality, law and justice succeed to former abuses. It is now ten months since the revolution was accomplished. My hopes have been deceived. Greater abuses, widespread immorality and deplorable anarchy prevail—disorders to which it is absolutely necessary to put an end. The constitution having proclaimed monarchy, the immediate choice of a King is indispensable. If the government does not shortly consider the question, I shall abandon all hopes as to the constitution of the revolution, and retire to private life."

This letter was read in the Council of Ministers and created a profound impression.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—The draft of the Senatus Consultum is completed. It gives the Emperor and the Corps Legislatif the initiative in making laws. The cabinet and ministers can be members of the Senate or Corps Legislatif.

Sittings of the Senate are to be in public. Each body is to make its own internal regulations. Members of both chambers have the right to address their interpellations to the government.

No amendment to a law is to be adopted unless previously referred to a committee charged with the duty of examining the project and communicating it to the government; if the latter does not accept it the Council of State will then pronounce definitely on the subject. The budget is to be submitted by chapters and articles. Modifications of the tariff and postal service by international treaties to be made obligatory only by laws enacted for that purpose.

In the opening session of the Senate yesterday Rouher made an address. He referred to the duty which devolved upon that body of examining proposed reforms, and said they should inquire whether they were popular enough to go hand in hand with liberty, and at the same time strong enough to resist anarchy. He was confident the Senate would enter upon this discussion with the firm intention of interpreting the will of the country, and that with the combined efforts of the government and the Senate more genuine harmony will be established between the powers of the State, and the institutions of the empire would acquire strength, lustre and popularity.

The Senatus Consultum was then read. In addition to the provisions already telegraphed, it prescribes that ministers are to depend only on the Emperor and will continue to deliberate in council under his presidency; they are, however, to be considered responsible for their acts, but can only be impeached by the Senate.

A minister, whether a member of the Senate or Corps Legislatif, has the right to be present at debates in either chamber.

The minister of justice made some explanations to the Senate, which were of very liberal character.

The Senate adjourned until Thursday next, when it will appoint a committee of ten to consider the Senatus Consultum.

DRESDEN, Aug. 3.—Three hundred people were killed outright by a colliery explosion in the mountains near this city.

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The Daily Telegraph says France has now entered on a career of national development unexampled at any previous stage of her national existence. The Emperor now assumes the character of a constitutional sovereign under circumstances which encourage us to hope for the success of an enterprise fraught with immense consequences, not for France only, but for the whole world.

In the Commons, Mr. Otway said the government was making every effort to obtain access to the Englishmen now captives in Paraguay.

MADRID, Aug. 4.—The government will shortly call out the reserves. Formidable Carlist uprisings are reported in Tortosa and Srevel. The shooting of two Carlist prisoners is contradicted.

BERLIN, Aug. 4.—The Borsen Zeitung, discussing the possibility of a tax on coupons of the United States bonds, expresses confidence that the Republicans will remain faithful to the programme in which they pronounce against repudiation.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 3.—Several pistol rows attend the election—none killed. The city has gone Democratic by six thousand, and the State probably fifty thousand. The Republicans claim fifteen to twenty members.

GREAT complaint begins to be made of the injury which our women are receiving from working sewing machines. The Scientific American says: "There are fortunately some women left whose constitutions have resisted the effects of wrong living to such an extent that they can sit half upright for a considerable time, without an excruciating pain in the small of the back. * * * Women of this kind can operate a sewing machine at intervals without discomfort." It is estimated that over a million of sewing machines are now at work in the United States, and it is claimed that this is producing injurious effects upon the health of women.

THANK GOD FOR THE JUDICIARY.

"MONROE, La., July 30.—The Supreme Court, in session here, decides in the case of Swann vs. Gayle that the jurisdiction of parish courts in succession matters does not extend to cases where the amounts in dispute exceed $500. Such cases must be tried in the district courts.

"In the cases of the State vs. Krieder, et als, of Jefferson City, the court decides that the Governor had no power of appointment, there being no vacancy in the offices of the city government; the relators to pay costs.

"In the case of Downes vs Townes, from Madison parish, involving the Governor's right of removal of plaintiff from the office of parish judge, on the ground that plaintiff had not filed with the Secretary of State the eligibility oath, and because of alleged disqualification under the fourteenth amendment, the court decides that the act of the Governor is without authority, and holds that the seventh section of the eligibility act, conferring the power of removal on him, is unconstitutional. Judges must be removed in pursuance of the mode pointed out in the constitution, and their eligibility must be determined judicially. Downes retains his office."

We have ever deprecated that intolerant spirit which condemns in advance the whole official life of a political opponent, and which is ready to impute to him the basest intentions before any act of his has transpired. Nor is it in the least degree just, because we conceive ourselves to be politically right, to imagine those who differ from us to be morally corrupt.

We have taken occasion, more than once, to say that the judges of the Supreme Court of this State have not yet given us reason to think lightly of their judicial fairness and rectitude: We have felt that most of them had not that forensic or judicial experience which gives such confidence in their learning as one desires to find on a bench which has been made illustrious by such men as Martin, Porter, Eustis, Slidell and Rost among the dead, and has yet such living representatives as Merrick, Lea and Spofford; but in their individual integrity and good will we have ever had the highest confidence.

Nor has this confidence been misplaced. The judges of this court are of the Republican school of politics, and their decisions upon questions growing out of the war and the reconstruction acts will doubtless be opposed to Confederate ideas in the one case, and in favor of the power of Congress to reorganize the seceded States in the other; but we have no reason to believe that any strained misconstruction of our constitution or laws will be used by them to favor a Radical administration of our affairs, or to defeat the will of the people as expressed under them.

The decisions of this tribunal, just rendered at Monroe, the telegraphic summary of which we reproduce from Saturday morning's paper, are of the most vital and far-reaching importance.

We have not before us the positions taken by the judges in their decision in full, but can well conceive what they were.

In the Jefferson City case it is stated that they declared that there were no vacancies. A new city charter had been enacted in 1868, under which the Governor was authorized to appoint a mayor and council at once, and an election was directed to take place in January.

He neither made the appointments nor caused the election to take place. Consequently the old officers held over. By undertaking to appoint new officers afterward he raised this question before the Supreme Court, which decides that there were no vacancies to which he could appoint.

Very likely this decision also takes the ground we have maintained in these columns that the kind of vacancies to which the Governor can, under the law of 1868, appoint, are such as arise from resignations, deaths, expulsions by the Legislature, or removals out of the districts, the acceptance of incompatible offices, etc., and not such as result from the expiration of the terms of office.

The decision declaring unconstitutional the eligibility act which authorizes the Governor to remove from office is equally suggestive. The Governor can exercise no judicial powers in the removal of officers. Their right to office must be judicially tried and determined, and until it is finally decided against them they hold their office by rightful possession.

The principle of this decision will set aside many more of the judicial assumptions of the Legislature, and the entire course of action of some of our aggressive and legislative judges.—New Orleans Picayune.

The Lockup and its Visitors.

Life has many phases, but the picture which it casts upon the mind is deficient, in an essential feature, to one who has never visited a police station. Its misery and its crime are here presented with a vividness that derives no coloring from imagination. That dull, sombre-looking building at the corner of Lafayette and St. Charles streets has been the theatre where many a life-drama, more thrilling in its details than the tragedies that make men and women weep, has been acted out.

Seated near the open door, one may watch the curious tide that flows almost unceasingly into this charnel house of angry passions and of evil deeds. Darkness has settled in the street and the gas light flings weird shadows around it. Out of the gloom comes an old woman, crippled and worn; her long white hair floats in the wind in many a straggling tress; her cheeks are wrinkled and sunk, and want stares out of her great hungry eyes. She begs for a night's lodging. In all the wide city she has no place to lay her head, no place but this, a bundle of rags and a truss of straw.

Scarcely does she disappear within the gloomy corridor before a shuffling of tired footsteps announces a fresh arrival, and the police come in carrying a man. The frame is inanimate; the shut eyes emit no light; the heart scarcely beats; and the stranger would think the man was dead, did not the sickening fumes announce the wretched inebriate. The blood trickles from a deep cut in the forehead, where he has fallen; and a groan, as they carry him to the cell, asserts the life still lingering in the drunken body.

Then a child comes in, wild-eyed and scared—strayed from home and lost—a dark nook in an angle of the building, beset with vermin, the inebriate's shout echoing in its ears, the ribald song and bitter jest, giving a woful experience to the frightened child—its first night in a police cell. Mayhap its screams of terror mingle with the din, and the long night drags through with a slowness its young life never knew before.

Then comes the sweep of costly robes, the rattle and whisk of silks, and fair young faces, scornful and proud, are lost in the dark gloom of inner cells. Perhaps a laugh, perhaps a sigh and tear fling memory back with hate, or bewails a fate that has left far behind its days of innocence and peace.

Then comes one dressed with the tailor's utmost skill, sleek and smooth, with soft, white hands and visage fair. His step is proud, his bearing haughty. He is high among the votaries of evil, an aristocrat in crime. This is the burglar, robber, thief. Even the turnkey looks upon him with a tacit admiration, and his nonchalent salute is returned by the clerk with elaborate politeness. The best cell is furnished him, and the night is spent with jubilee and the flow and shimmer of wine.

But the night advances, and the visitors take their coloring from the night's dark hue. The levee gives up its votaries, and a dusky tide sweeps in. These are the speculators of the cotton market and the corn exchange. The symbols of their trade come with them, a greasy bag and a basket made of bark. The uninitiated call them pilferers; a gloomy cell shuts them in, and the iron door shuts creakingly.

The noon of night is reached and passed, and still they come, a motley, incongruous herd, wretched and poor, well clad and rich. The extremes of society meet and shake hands. The evil and the depraved, the vicious and accursed, and the votary taking the first step in crime stand here side by side—a mixed and wondrous gathering of the disciples of wrong—the votaries of the dusk and shadow.—New Orleans Picayune.

A FRENCH history of the Spanish Inquisition computes that between 1481 and 1820 there were in Spain thirty-six thousand one hundred and sixty-eight persons burnt alive, and two hundred and eighty-one thousand two hundred and fifty condemned to the galleys or imprisoned for their religious faith.

LOUISIANA CROP PROSPECTS.

WEST BATON ROUGE.—Rain much wanted, but crops still thriving and promising well.

LAFOURCHE.—Planters generally report favorably.

POINTE COUPEE.—We have, in our parish, certainly as fair prospects for an abundant yield in all the products grown here, as ever before. Never has a season been so unobjectionable throughout. From all quarters of the parish we have news of excellent crops, and the only trouble now seems to be the risk, that is yet to run, of the caterpillars. We have heard some little talk of their appearance in some places, but as yet we have heard no absolute assertion that they are the genuine cotton worm.—Echo, July 31.

TENSAS.—The weather still continues warm and cloudy, but for three days past we have had no rain. The crops are growing finely; so are the vines. Planters complain that they spring up and begin to creep in a few hours after the hoe and plow have destroyed the previous crop. Fears are expressed that the continued warm, damp weather will hasten the appearance of the worm. So far we have heard of only two of these destroyers having been found in this vicinity, though they are said to be more numerous in the neighborhood of Waterproof.—Gazette, July 31.

EAST FELICIANA.—Rain, so anxiously looked for by our planters, has shed its blessings upon the parched earth. This has given fresh impetus to the growing crop, although it is feared it came too late for the last planting of corn. There are rumors of the worm, but neither so positive or definite as to create any alarm. The freedmen are laboring closely and industriously, far better than at any time since the surrender.—Democrat, July 31.

FRANKLIN.—For the first time this season, the worms have this week commenced to be talked about. Some farmers here and there say they have them in their fields. The present rainy weather is thought to be favorable to their propagation, but the cotton is coming on so finely that if they hold off awhile they will do little or no damage.—Sun, July 31.

INDIA.—The weather has been very warm throughout the past week, and it has not rained any of consequence any place in the parish, except near the sea marsh. Everywhere else the crops need rain, and in the vicinity of town the roads are very dusty.

It is said that caterpillars have been seen on the Moss place and on Mr. John Rigg's place; yet we hope our informants are mistaken as to the insect.

We are informed that Mr. T. Oubre, of Fausse Point, this week commenced picking from some few open bolls, and is confident that he will bring the first bale to market, while we know of others sanguine they will be first.—Times, July 30.

RICHLAND.—Saturday last we were down below here ten or twelve miles, and noticed that cotton looks fine. Cotton was never better formed, and all of our planting friends speak of the prospect as encouraging in the extreme. All seem to have an abiding faith that the worm will not do much damage; and as far as the corn crop is concerned, there will be enough in this to do two or three parishes.—Beacon, July 28.

CLAIBORNE.—Rain plenty; corn will be abundant; cotton looks very fine, but some little talk of the devouring insect. Cotton is now making very fast, and if the worm will stay back one month we will begin to think about letting him in.—Advocate, July 24.

OUACHITA.—What is made, is made, and we feel certain that the country has corn plenty for its consumption. The cotton crop is reported on all hands to be very promising. The only complaint we have heard is that the plant is rather sappy and is running too much to weed.

We hear nothing said of the caterpillar, notwithstanding the weather of late has been regarded as very favorable for its development.

We are pleased to have very favorable reports of the crops in the uplands west of the river.

AT THE annual meeting of the English Church Union, June 15, Dr. Pusey, Mr. Mackonochie, and the leaders of the Ritualistic party solemnly pledged themselves afresh "to resist at all hazards any attempt to prohibit the teaching of the doctrine of the real presence in the sacrament of the altar."

TEHUANTEPEC.

Another great work, equal in magnitude to the Suez Canal, is on the eve of commencement, and that is the Isthmus Railroad and Telegraph lines. We condense, from papers before us, an account of this project. The grant to Mr. LaSere was filed in the city of Mexico on the 4th of January, 1869. The fourth article of the grant is as follows: "The LaSere company is bound to construct a first class railroad, starting from the point where navigation on the Coatzacoalcos river terminates, or from its mouth, and continue said road to the port of Ventosa, or to any other port on the Pacific that may be deemed more suitable. While the road is being finished LaSere will establish the communication by means of a carriage road, which he will put in a good serviceable condition, and with bridges necessary for the passage of vehicles, carrying passengers and light freight." The surveys and plans are to be completed within eighteen months, and the work to be commenced within six months after, and a section of fifteen leagues is to be made every year, until the whole is completed. A strip of land sufficient for the road is given, and the half of the unclaimed lands within a league on each side of the road. The government grants such grounds as it owns for wharves, docks and other indispensable works.

The company can take from the public lands the materials necessary for the construction of the works. The lands and materials of individual owners may be expropriated. Lighthouses at each end of the road are to be built by the company. Sixty days after the date of this grant, a bond in the sum of $100,000 is to be given to the Mexican government, and the company is to be organized according to the laws governing the States of the United States. The right of importing free of duty everything necessary for the work is conceded. The transit by this route will be open to all nations, but will be increased twenty-five per cent. in merchandise of nations who have no treaty of peace and commerce with Mexico. The grant is for the period of seventy years, and is liberal in all the privileges conferred. The restrictions are not onerous. The company cannot construct forts, nor organize an armed force, nor grant passage to any foreign force, nor transport contraband of war. The company obtained an act of incorporation from the State of Vermont.—New Orleans Picayune.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

The Raleigh Episcopal Methodist recently suggested that these meetings ought to be more largely devoted than they are to religious purposes. We have attended several, and we are glad to say that we have seen no cause for complaint on this point. We have seen, even in the business meeting, the flame of devotion kindle and run through the assembly, until the meeting was as joyful as a love feast; and they may all be conducted on this pattern.

But the district meeting may easily be spoiled. If set sermons and great sermons are to be preached, and learned essays read on irrelevant subjects, instead of having in view, in the public services, the needs of the congregation, and so directing all the preaching that it shall have cumulative power on the hearts of the hearers, it will be easy to make a dull meeting. We see one called, at which "essays are expected" on thirty-three different subjects, among them "whether schools and colleges should be mixed or exclusive as to sexes," "whether orphan asylums ought to be encouraged," "on popular errors in ecclesiastical science," "on the millennium, so called," "on knowledge and free agency," "have modern Jews the [illegible] their ancient ancestors?" "on reading and the selection of books," "the A B C," "are our newspapers sufficiently laudatory of living ministers." We would answer the last question by saying, Too much so entirely. If they gained the sound judgment of one who should get up such a programme for a district meeting, with the expectation of its doing any great good as a [illegible] meeting.—Southern Advocate.

THE Pope has ordered one of his ministers to address a letter to the physicians of Rome, exhorting them to refuse attendance on persons who are dangerously ill and who have not confessed within three days of their first visit. The story seems incredible, but is reported.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1869.

THE BITTER CUP.

A cup my Father held ;
I thought I heard my name ;
I shuddered ; should I be compelled
To take and drink the same ?

I'm in my Father's hand,
'Tis He that bids me drink ;
And if it be at His command,
Why should my spirit shrink ?

I need for others' woes
A keener sense to feel ;
To seek, instead of life's repose,
My soul's eternal weal.

There is no more within
Than souls like mine require ;
He knows the cure for death and sin,
And brings the cup entire.

I'm in Gethsemane,
The garden of my woe ;
Oh ! let Thy will, if it may be,
The cup untasted go.

'Tis not that bitter cup
The Father gave to Him !
And yet He took and drank it up,
Though angry to the brim.

He mingled it for me,
But tasted ere He gave ;
And though the end He doth foresee,
He still forbears to save.

And I will drink it all ;
From Him 'tis even sweet ;
Nor from the wormwood and the gall
Will I relief entreat.

I know that, when I stand
Serene on heaven's pure height,
'Twill seem that all was wisely planned,
The cup was mingled right.

CHANGE OF NAME.

Mr. Editor: Though a small majority of the church at large decided against changing the name of our ecclesiastical organization to "Episcopal Methodist," that cannot be presumed as settling the question whether the name of our church shall be changed at all. The vote simply decided against the particular title recommended by the last General Conference—a title which was scarcely worthy the name of change, and which, if adopted, could only have caused confusion in the public mind when endeavoring to distinguish the "Episcopal Methodist Church" from the "Methodist Episcopal Church." Hence the main question is still open, especially so because there are now pressing reasons for the change which did not exist at the time of the last General Conference. Permit me a few words on the main question of changing the name, and in connection with the same suffer me to suggest a new title for our church.

In the first place, I hold that it is proper, and according to historical precedent, to embody in the title of any church organization some word defining the geographical boundaries of its regular operations. By this means the Methodist Church in England, for example, should be distingnished from the Methodist Church in America, and the Methodist Church in China (when it becomes self-sustaining and self governing) from the Methodist Church in India (when in like case.) This geographical distinction is all the more necessary because of certain peculiarities in the people of each nationality to which a church organization must adapt itself in order to the accomplishment of its mission among any given people. It was for this reason that our church affixed the word "South" to its title, in 1844, to distingnish it as operating in that section of the United States wherein slavery was not prohibited by public law. The reason was a good one until the close of the recent war, but it is so no longer. Now slavery exists nowhere in the United States, in the Southern States no more than in the Northern; and there is, therefore, now no "South" in the sense of a section distinguished as slave territory. We need now a geographical title of far wider extent than the word "South" indicates, for the partition wall of Mason and Dixon is broken down, and as a consequence we have been stretching our lines into regions beyond—into Illinois, and Pennsylvania, and New York, and elsewhere in the old free State section. Hence to retain the word "South" in our title is a misnomer, for the South, in the political sense, no longer exists, and the South, in the geographical sense, is by no means the boundary of our regular evangelical operations. Why, then, retain a word in the title of our church which no longer has any meaning—a word which one of our new Conferences (the Illinois) cannot adopt, and which greatly operates against our advance beyond the ancient border? So much as to changing the word "South" for something more comprehensive.

In the second place, I hold that brevity is power in a title, and every word not actually essential should be excluded therefrom.—Now do you not think the word "Episcopal" a very unnecessary one in the title of our church? It seems to give undue emphasis to the episcopal feature of our church government. With us bishops are not vital links binding us to the skirts of Paul or Peter. What need is there, then, that we hang up a sign to tell the world:—"We've got bishops in our church—we belong to the dignified family of Episcopalians!" Moreover, in ordinary conversation, who ever thinks of using the word "Episcopal" when naming our church; and even in our church papers and publications, do you not almost invariably see the word contracted into an initial "E." As a general rule, we neither say nor write the word "Episcopal."—Practically it is regarded as obsolete and useless. Why not lop it off altogether? We can get along very well without it, and I am sure it will be a great relief to us all not to be obliged to carry such a burdensome word.

But as to the other word in our title—"Methodist"—you could not change it if you would. That is the one word by which our denomination will be known till the end of time. It expresses everything in form and doctrine peculiar to our church. No matter how we came by it, it is one of the finest words in the English language. It is as euphonious as any which the tongue of Demosthenes ever syllabled; it is as full of meaning as ever chalice was of wine. We might have a dozen words in the title of our church, but vox populi would ever call us "Methodists," and no more. It is a precious name—it has a history which endears it to us all. I love the word to fondness. If I saw your editorial ax uplifted to strike off "Methodist" from the title of our church, I would, if possible, leap to its protection, and cry with all the powers of persuasion which the occasion might inspire: "Doctor, spare that word—touch not a single jot or tittle of it!"

And now, sir, would you have a title at once euphonious, expressive and comprehensive, let the name of our church be changed to "American Methodist Church."—The non-political character of our church warrants the hope that the day is not far distant when its ministers and churches and people will be found in every State in the Union. The Northern Methodist Church is necessarily sectional, because it is leavened with Radicalism. Only in a political atmosphere that is permeated with Radicalism can it breathe and live. But inasmuch as our church eschews politics in toto, therefore it is adapted to live and move and flourish in every State and section of this vast continent.

Mr. Editor, look at this title, "American Methodist Church," and then at that, "Methodist Episcopal Church South," and tell us which you prefer to wear.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Mr Editor: Were I to withdraw my "views" at the kindly remonstrance of W. B. L, the facts which I have been perhaps too bold in naming would still remain, and so would his dissent.

Two things we both see:

First That the Sabbath school is fast taking the place of the church for the children.

Second. That an existing indisposition to prevent it indicates that the conscience of the church is satisfied with such an arrangement.

W. B. L. objects to what he sees. He thinks the conscience of the church is not satisfied with the arrangement; but should he be mistaken in this, he insists that the arrangement is not a good one; and he finally refuses to admit that a divine institution—the ministry—can be superceded by one of a human origin—the Sabbath school. We answer, we must explain more fully what we believe we see. Two preliminary statements are necessary to a correct representation of our "views:"

First. The church has been divinely charged with the training of her children in the nurture, fear and admonition of the Lord. Without being directed to pursue any particular method, thus she is free to choose and work her own plan.

Second. The church has been divinely authorized and enjoined to go into all the world to preach the Gospel of redemption and salvation, without being limited in expectation to the precise number or individuals that shall be saved through her testimony. Hence she is free to multiply agencies for the spread of Gospel truth.

The Sabbath school is admitted to be the product of the creative spirit of the church. It may not at present rank with New Testament institutions, yet its importance is so widely and deeply felt that no one questions the province of the church in the premises to create the Sabbath school, and no one doubts its entire consistency with the spirit of the New Testament, although in the book a model cannot be found for the institution.

The importance attributed to the Sabbath school arises from its design and its partially tested availability for the purpose. It is the first deliberately contrived plan by the church for executing both commissions at the same time, and by the same agents and means—training the children and preaching the Gospel for salvation.

The New Testament recognition of the eligibility of children for the kingdom of God, and the ritual for infant baptism in our Book of Discipline, are thus complied with. A juvenile non-communing church is provided for actual non-communing members of the church. From a mere convenience to impart religious instruction to a few ragged and neglected children in the city of London, the Sabbath school has, under the auspices of the church, grown up into a regular, well ordered and religiously conducted worship for intelligent Christian children, directed not after the manner nor according to the spirit of a missionary enterprise, but under the sanctions of doctrinal beliefs and obligations of discipline, as a proper and divinely accepted provision, made in good faith and with firm intent to pursue it for the faithful training of the children of the church in the nurture, admonition and fear of the Lord. Created by its intelligence, the Sabbath school is also cultivated and guarded by the conscience of the church, which is seen chiefly in its exactions of personal piety in the teachers selected, and a carefully scanned and thoroughly purged religious literature for the use of the school.

In obedience to the other commission, without designing to interfere in the least with the methods that have come down to us for propagating the Gospel, the church makes the attempt, through the Sabbath school, to compass the salvation of each generation at the most eligible time of life—in childhood. Instead of waiting for a generation of ripe sinners to grow up to be preached to, the effort is made to impress a Christian type upon the common life of the people. Instead of a small church striving to send rays of light over vast tracts of darkness that belt and spot the world, the serious aim and plan is to train up in turn, as they come, generation after generation in the Christian religion, so as eventually to comprehend in the church all living, both old and young, imperceptibly yet effectually flooding the world with the light of truth and with the light of a glorified life.

The chief end of man is comprehended in the main provisions of the Sabbath school—to glorify God in devout prayer, in solemn praise, in other instructive acts of worship, and in a life consecrated to God and His service. The commission of Christ is strictly applied to superintendents and teachers, so that the central idea of the Sabbath school, to which every duty and purpose is made to conform, is the conversion of the children. It is by no means regarded as sufficient to acquaint them with the doctrines of the church, the principles of morality, and the articles of religion. No; the desire and aim is to lead each one, by a personal, saving faith, to behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world, thus securing to them the strongest possible bias to goodness at the very ontset of life.

While this is the tendency of that life which develops so rapidly in the Sunday school, and while the very great availability of the Sabbath school for realizing the glorious idea of the conversion of the world is as yet unproved, though full of promise, there cannot but be a real feeling of hesitancy among regularly constituted pastors to yield up the lambs of the flock to an inferior pastorate created solely by the church. In making Sabbath school superintendents members of the quarterly meeting conference our church has sought to remove the main difficulty to fitting the Sabbath school into the institutions of the New Testament. Perhaps the very perfection of efficiency will be found in the Sabbath school when the proper relations of the pastor to the superintendent and to the school are satisfactorily defined. When the clergy and the laity shall heartily concur and unite in working up the Sabbath school to its utmost power of application, then will come such a revival as the world never before witnessed.

W. E. M. L.

The Sunday School Problem Solved.

Mr. Editor: Your correspondent, W. B. L., springs some questions in reference to Sunday schools which are of more than passing importance. The children do not come to church. The Sunday school is their church. They are comparatively strangers to the ordinances of the church and modes of worship of their fathers. The parents do not come to Sunday school, and, abandoning the patriarchal form of government instituted of God, they commit to others, and often to incompetent persons, the religious training of their children. Under the present system the pastor is ruled out, unless, as Brother W. E. M. L. remarks, he comes in under the patronage of the superintendent. It is the latter's Sunday school—is called by his name, and he cultivates a jealousy of "foreign intervention."

There are real evils. In most of our smaller stations, and perhaps in the larger, the Sunday school is an elephant which the pastor does not know what to do with.

The kind-hearted and zealous superintendent realizes that something is lacking. He complains of non-attendance of teachers, of parents, and want of general interest. The Sunday school meets at half-past eight or nine o'clock A. M., and holds till half-past ten. Preaching at eleven, services closing at half-past twelve or one P. M. If the parents come to Sunday school they cannot come to church. They must be confined four or five hours. The children ought not to be. Service in the afternoon, for either church or Sunday school, is undesirable. What is to be done? Bro. W. E. M. L. suggests that the pastor become the superintendent. "I show unto you a more excellent way." Let them form an equal partnership. Have morning service at half-past nine or ten o'clock.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Distribution of hymn books and Testaments by librarian.
2. Reading of two chapters in the Bible by the pastor, one from the Old and the other from the New Testament.
3. Singing by the children and congregation.
4. Prayer by the pastor.
5. Singing, as before.
6. Preaching by the pastor.
7. Superintendent takes charge. Lessons are heard.
8. Singing, conducted by superintendent and children.
9. Prayer by the superintendent.
10. Benediction by the pastor.

This is all done inside of one hour and a half. I have tried it and succeeded

At the conclusion of the sermon persons not interested in the Sunday school are permitted to retire, without blame.

I say without hesitation that if the Sunday school cannot be managed without divorcing the parents and their children in their religious interests—without separating the lambs from their shepherd, and turning away the children from preaching—then let the Sabbath school, for children who have religious parents, be abolished. If the case reads: Church versus Sunday School, or Preaching the Gospel versus Catechism, "then mark my name for the plaintiff," as the lawyers say. Let pastors and superintendents, district meetings and conventions, speak out upon this question.

Junior.

Centenary Institute and Female College, Summerfield, Alabama.

Mr. Editor: After many years' observation and experience I am fully of the opinion that there is no subject on which the public is so easily and so generally imposed upon and deceived as that of schools. The reason is obvious: the mass of the people are not educated themselves, and with few exceptions uneducated people are not judges of schools, or the progress of pupils. They are generally more taken with show and display than with solid improvement

A first class school is one that is complete in governing supervision, and also in successful instruction. It is a great mistake to suppose that every educated man can teach, and an equally great one to suppose that every one who could teach can govern and manage successfully a school. And no school, especially no boarding school, will be recommended by any prudent man where both these features are not present. An institution not under proper supervision is an institution where manners and morals are not guarded. Ability to govern others is a gift. Hickory withes and boisterous and vulgar threats are not an evidence of its presence, but of its absence. True governing talent is not displayed by degrading and disgracing, but by elevating and inspiring self-respect and self-control.

These generalizations prepare the way for me to say that the Board of Trustees of Centenary feel they have been particularly fortunate in securing the services of the present heads of the Summerfield schools. Both of these gentlemen are not only eminently successful teachers, but excel in the management of their departments.

To succeed in so teaching, stimulating and training boys as that their manifest progress and unexceptionable deportment satisfies and delights intelligent patrons, and at the same time to make all the pupils feel that they have been treated kindly and respectfully, and that their teacher is a gentleman and their friend, in short, so to succeed that there shall be no word of complaint from any party, is to exhibit undoubted genius in a teacher. Such success has attended the labors of Prof. Massey in the male department of Centenary. We can unhesitatingly recommend that school to parents as every way worthy of their patronage.

The church and community are not aware of the great benefit conferred upon them by the provision of such schools, where the moral and religious interests of their sons and daughters are so guarded and cared for. Could they know what some of us learn yearly on this subject they could not be hired to place their sons under different influences, and in contact with the perils that exist in many schools.

To those who are acquainted with Prof. Vaughn, either as a man, scholar or teacher, little need be said in the way of commendation; suffice it to say that he meets all our expectations and demands. He has placed the standard of scholarship in the female college as high as it is in any institution in the South, if not higher. I think there is a greater number of branches of education taught there than can be pursued in any other school in the country, at the same cost. And if patrons will allow their wards to remain as long at the institution as they allow them to remain at schools at the North, we promise in behalf of the teachers that they shall be made as accomplished scholars as are made in the country.

I have left myself little room to speak of the exercises at the recent commencement. There were several things connected with those of both schools worthy of remark and special commendation. The speeches and speaking of the boys and young men gave evidence of labor and training in that department; and the compositions of the young ladies, and their manner of reading them, showed how successfully Mrs. Vaughn had been in this important part of education. Indeed the exercises, as a whole, gave great satisfaction to the trustees and friends of Centenary. And it would greatly lower my estimate of the intelligence and good sense of our people if these schools should be neglected and allowed to languish. I must believe that both ministers and people will do them justice.

J. Hamilton.

Commencement Exercises of Homer College.

Mr. Editor: The commencement sermon, preached on Sunday, July 11, by Rev. Dr. A. R. Winfield, of the Little Rock Conference, was fully up to the expectations of his friends, and you know that this is saying a great deal, for few men in the West rank higher as pulpit orators than Dr. Winfield.

On Monday the students were addressed by Hon. T. B. Tompkins, of Union—an address most admirably suited to the times—eloquent, forcible and practical.

He was followed by that most popular teacher and finished scholar, Dr. Gordon, president of the Gordon Institute, Arkansas. This was one of the best talks on education and training I have ever had the good fortune to hear.

On Tuesday Dr. Winfield made a most eloquent and telling address to the people upon the importance of sustaining the college—an omnium gather em, omnium rous em speech; and in the gather em part he raked in $1,065 to pay off our liabilities. This leaves only about $600 to be raised to free us entirely from debt.

Tuesday and Wednesday were given up mainly to declamation and other exercises by the students, and closed on Wednesday evening with an address before the Polytechnic Society by Hon. C. B. Pratt, of Minden—a very chaste and beautiful address, in which this young son of Claiborne fully sustained his high reputation as an orator.

We feel that a great impetus has been given to the college, and we have the promise of a full school for the term beginning on Monday, September 6, 1869.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The Rev. M. C. Turrentine writes, under date of July 26: "We are having some good meetings on the Crawford circuit, and hope for better times."

MACON, MISS., July 27, 1869.

Mr. Editor: I have had the pleasure of attending two meetings recently, at which God graciously revived His work. He is visiting nearly all the churches in our section.

Your brother in Christ,

WILL. H. LEITH.

Mr. Editor: While writing I may as well say that the religious interest on Mariana circuit has been for some time steadily increasing. At present I am continuing a meeting at Columbiana, where there have been several conversions.—Stephen Johnson, James Applewhite and Hollis Williams, a noble trio of local elders, have been the instruments in the beginning and progress of this work.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

WHISTLER, ALA., July 22, 1869.

Mr. Editor: You may tell the friends of Zion that the Lord is still with us in power. On last Sabbath night we closed up the fourth week of the meeting, with an increase of eight members for the week, and about that number of conversions. We have had an increase of forty-three members since the meeting began, and nearly that number of conversions. We did not have services but three nights last week, and then were hindered by the rain. The church has been greatly revived, and much good accomplished. We consider the church in a flourishing condition.

Pray for us, that the good Lord may continue to prosper us.

Yours in Christ,

J. J. GRACE.

COPENHAGEN, LA., July 22, 1869.

Mr. Editor: We have been having some most excellent meetings on the Columbia circuit, in which the church has been much revived, and members who had been holding off their letters—some even for years—have been so revived that many have handed them in; while sinners are turning away from the path of vice and folly.

Our second quarterly meeting came off, embracing the third Sabbath in this month. Our beloved Brother White, the elder, was with us, and preached with great acceptability.

The Lord manifested himself during the meeting, which only lasted two days. There were eight accessions, and a shout from some of the members to see sinners returning to God. Since my last quarterly report to you I have taken into the church some twenty five.

Brother White took up a missionary collection on Sabbath morning, which amounted to $15 and some cents. We also paid him half of his salary. The work keeps the preacher in a plenty to eat and to wear, and gives him plenty of hard work to do in the way of preaching and visiting. May the Lord bless the people abundantly this year. To God be all the praise for these refreshing showers.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN H. BOGLE.

A DANGEROUS EXPLOIT.

Mr Editor: I passed down Main street, in the city of Columbus, Mississippi, one Saturday afternoon, and when I came to the corner of Market street I found an immense crowd, of all ranks, grades and classes, in carriages, wagons, and on foot. They were all gazing upward, with breathless interest, on one object. Not a word was spoken. They were watching a woman who was performing the feat of walking across Market street, on a rope extending from the tops of the houses on one side to the other. It was a perilous undertaking: A single misstep, and she would be dashed to inevitable destruction. A dizziness of the head, a slight paralysis, would have proved fatal. But she passed over in safety, and when she reached the end of her perilous walk there was immense cheering from the crowd below. I thought it a good illustration of the Christian's career to heaven, and the interest with which the angels watch his course till he arrives safe at home, and the shouts with which he is cheered on his safe arrival. She had to watch the rope steadily; she had no time to gaze at the gaping multitude below; her life was depending on every step, and any carelessness might have proved fatal. She truly had a narrow way to travel, and her temporal salvation was involved in the dangerous exploit. So the Christian has a narrow path to travel. He must keep his eye on the way; he has no time to look to the honors and glories of the world; his eternal salvation is involved in the steady prosecution of his Christian career, and one false step may prove his everlasting undoing. His progress is watched with interest by the shining hosts above, who are waiting to welcome him home.

It also illustrated the danger of those who occupy the dizzy heights of worldly distinction. Few attain them—few can preserve them without becoming dizzy by their influence. It requires great vigilance and circumspection to pursue them safely. A single false step may prove their ruin. It is a great folly to expose ourselves to the dangers of greatness for the insignificant rewards they bring. S.

Fayette Circuit Sabbath School Convention, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: This convention met pursuant to the call made for the friends of the Sabbath school to meet in convention at Fayette, on Friday, July 2. It continued in session until the 4th. The Rev. W. B. Johnson, local elder, was elected president, and Bradford D. Coffey, secretary.

Numerous appropriate questions were propounded, as follows: What is the relation of the Sabbath school to the church? What are the prerogatives of the Sunday school superintendents? What should be the qualifications of a Sabbath school teacher? Shall the literature of the Sabbath school be sustained? Shall the lessons be uniform? These several questions were referred to committees to report upon. During the sessions appropriate reports were made and adopted, and were ably discussed by Rev. Dr. Watkins and William F. Mellen, Esq., of Natchez, Rev. J. A. B. Jones and Captain George Barnes, of Port Gibson, and Rev. W. F. Glenn, Dr. R. A. New and others.

W. F. Mellen, Esq., discussed with great ability, eloquence and zeal, the question of "the relation of the Sabbath school to the well-being of society." He maintained his position with unanswerable arguments taken from sacred writ and the experience of the past.

Dr. Watkins' theme was the proper qualifications of the Sabbath school teacher. To say that this subject was ably discussed by the eminent divine is only to affirm a simple truth. He exhausted the subject, as he usually does everything he attempts.

Rev. Mr. Jones addressed the convention upon the question, What should be taught in the Sabbath school? He gave to the question an interest and importance that does not usually appear to the casual thinker. At his hands it assumed a degree of enlarged thought that fully impressed the audience with the fact that he was a practical teacher and a deep thinker on this subject. He drew out of the rich treasury of knowledge, which his studies has given him, illustrations, simple but profound, and gave his auditory much thought for future reflection on this momentous subject. We have often heard him preach, but never heard him from the platform before. He is at home there, and no doubt his talents in this line will bring him out more prominently hereafter.

The following resolutions, among others, were passed, which are worthy of note, and we hope will be carried out practically:

Resolved, That religious literature should form a staple commodity in every Sabbath school.

Resolved, That we should sustain by our means the various publications especially adapted to the Sabbath school scholar.

Resolved, That the Sunday school is a coadjutor of the church in so far as it endeavors to adapt the intellectually spiritual light of the church to the untutored minds and hearts of the young.

Resolved, That it is the duty of all Sunday school superintendents and teachers to keep this idea prominently before the minds of their pupils, and to teach them that the church, and not the Sunday school, is the light of the world.

Prepared for publication by resolution of the convention, by the undersigned as a committee.

THE ESCAPE OF A NUN.

Some people may be under the impression that nuns are free to leave their convents if they choose. Let the following fact speak for itself. Early one morning in December the little postern gate of the convent was slowly and cautiously opened, and a lady, closely muffled in a long cloak and thick vail, issued from it. It was too dark for her to see any distance, but after an anxious, searching glance on every side, she hastened along a narrow lane that wound past the convent wall into the village, and made her way to the place where a post car was just about starting for a town some thirty miles off. In a very excited manner she made arrangements for taking her seat upon it; and the members of the little crowd which had collected to see the car start indulged in many surmises as who she might be—the darkness and her close wrappings preventing their distinguishing her features. At last, to her evident relief, the car began to move, and was soon out of sight of the group who watched it. About two hours afterward, however, a rumor ran through the village that a nun had escaped from the convent, and in answer to the impatient inquiries of those seeking her, it was speedily discovered that a strange lady had left the place on a post car. As soon as this fact was established two young priests mounted their horses and set off in hot pursuit. The road was very hilly, and as they spurred their horses swiftly up one hill and down another, they strained their eyes to catch a view of the post car on which the poor fugitive was escaping from her prison house, but they looked in vain. The car had got a good two hours' start of them, and when they arrived at its destination they found to their chagrin that the freed captive had taken another conveyance, and was already far on her way to a small town some twenty miles further from the convent. As soon as they could procure fresh horses (for those they had ridden were staggering from fatigue) the two priests again set forward, eager in the chase; but the short December day closed in around them; and still no traces of the runaway could be found. Late in the evening they reached the town to which she had gone, and on inquiry found that she had certainly stopped there, for the car on which she had traveled was safe in the inn yard, and she had not taken any other conveyance. She was not, however, in the inn; nor had she applied for a room at any of the lodging houses in the neighborhood. It was too late to prosecute the search that night; so, baffled for the moment, the priests sat down to their suppers in a very bad humor, discussing many plans of operation for the coming day, and recording vows of punishment to come for the offender when she should be once more in safe keeping.

Early the next morning a thorough investigation of the town, which was quite under priestly control, was commenced. Not a house, from garret to cellar, was left unsearched, but without avail. The fugitive had evidently managed to get away. But how? That was the question. At last an old woman was found who said she had seen a lady stealing along in the shadow of the houses late the night before, and that she had taken her away toward the open country. It was plain that the hunted creature had sought to throw her pursuers off the scent by proceeding on foot and alone through the wild passes of the mountains. Men with a spark of manliness—human beings with even the smallest touch of humanity in their hearts—Christians with but the faintest glow of Christianity within them, would have felt an overwhelming pity for the poor, frail woman with such a courageous spirit; who having been, without a crime, held in a bondage worse than that of the Israelites, was flying from the scene of her imprisonment, from grated windows and barred doors, through the darkness and wildness of a December night, alone and unprotected, along rugged roads and mountain-glens. But no such emotion of pity was felt by those who dogged her terrified footsteps. No; like bloodhounds thirsting for their prey, they hastened upon her track with a savage kind of ferocious joy that boded ill for the poor victim should she fall into their hands. For several days the priestly detectives searched among the retired glens of the highest mountains, climbed every rock, and pressed into every crevice that could afford shelter to even the smallest animal, but still the pursuit was more warded. Day by day, as disappointment succeeded disappointment, the rage of the pursuers became fiercer, and their thirst to secure the fugitive more strong and burning. Every place that could promise a refuge had already been examined, and as they passed along, weary and infuriated at their want of success, the stones on the mountain sides rolled from beneath their feet into the hollows with a mocking sound, and the bare, bleak tops of the mountains seemed to look down on them in scorn; but suddenly turning an acute angle on the crest of one of the ranges a narrow gorge came into view, and in its most remote depth a miserable hovel appeared. A sudden inspiration told the priests that at last their quarry had been struck, and stealing like crafty reptiles on their prey they approached the cottage from different sides. There was but one opening, the door, and when they came within reach of it they sprang together through it into the only room the wretched abode contained; and there, on a truss of straw, in a state of utter exhaustion, lay the poor exhausted creature, whose doublings and windings had left her at last, worn out in mind and body, completely at the mercy of those who had so relentlessly hunted her down.

Without a moment's delay the wretched woman was seized upon and conveyed by the priests, as best they could, to the nearest town. She was now completely helpless in their hands—all her energy gone, and all her powers of mind and body prostrated utterly, so that without any difficulty she was placed in a post chaise and taken, not to the convent from which she had escaped, but to another, famed for the strictness of its discipline; and there she still remains if death has not set her free. Who shall say what agonies of mind and body have been inflicted upon her? No human tongue will tell, or pen will write, what her tortures have been, for the high walls and barred gates of the prison house keep those secrets well; but the all-seeing eye of the great Being has seen it all, and His ear has heard the utterances of her despair. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay," saith the Lord. But God will not hold those guiltless who, having the power to prevent such cruel atrocities, permit them to go on unchecked, and who even uphold a church whose tyranny has been the nightmare of ages.—Christian Times, London.

A GREAT CAMP MEETING.

We find in one of our exchanges a description of the camp meeting at Round Lake, in the State of New York:

The railroad bounds the ground on the west side, and on the east is a fine turnpike. Across this is Round Lake, a beautiful sheet of water one mile in diameter. A reservoir holding one hundred hogsheads, built in masonry, about a half mile from the grounds, supplies the water, which is chalybeate, through a two inch pipe, buried four feet under ground, and by a happy arrangement of tank and fountain is brought within the reach of all. Near the centre of the grounds is a basin sixteen feet in diameter, with eight posts. Through these run pipes, each throwing jets of water back into the basin, while in the centre of the basin rises a fine fountain about fifteen feet high, throwing water in the form of spray. Fishes play in a large basin below. In another location a basin fifty-three feet in diameter supplies the horses. Besides these, two other large reservoirs are to be found. A large space capable of seating about six thousand people is fronted by the preachers' stand, a fine covered structure about twenty feet square, and standing six feet from the ground; the cornice bears appropriate mottoes. A tower rises from the top, holding a bell of two thousand pounds weight. This auditorium is surrounded by a splendid avenue named after Wesley, and from this, radiating in every direction, are broad streets and avenues appropriately named and unnumbered.

About twenty cottages are erected, and a post office building, store, storehouses, etc., abound. The cottages are private property, most of them two story, with tasty verandas, sash doors and green blinds. The post office building is two stories high, and is large enough to accommodate not only the post office but a book store, where denominational and religious books may be obtained, and a news room. The second story is occupied by the trustees of the association as an office. The store is thirty-five by twenty feet and two stories high. A market is kept in this building. The storehouse is one hundred and four feet long and twenty feet wide, and two stories high. During the meeting this building is used as a lodging house for preachers. A telegraph is in operation during the meeting.

A thousand tents are erected, and their white wings are unfolding in every direction. They vary in size from the rainy weather tent, capable of seating three thousand people, to the little seven by seven sleeping tent. These tents are public and private; and family, lodging, boarding and prayer tents, ice cream, barber shop and store tents meet you at every turn. Canvas, jean, sheeting, brown and white, old and new, are used in construction. The boarding tents occupy a position by themselves, and, as the feeding of the multitude is an important consideration, ample accommodations have been provided. Milk, fresh vegetables, bread and meat, find their way daily to the ground.

The attendance at the meeting the first few days was very numerous and culminated last Sunday, when Bishop Morris preached an eloquent sermon to an audience of twelve thousand people.

Pulpit Spice and Pastry.—From Freeman's Sermons an exchange takes this extract:

It is in vain to demand of the settled ministers of the Gospel, who are constantly preaching to the same people, and who, in the course of a year, deliver a hundred sermons in the pulpit, the same style of eloquence which distinguishes the celebrated preachers, who have appeared only on particular occasions. The sermon, which is filled with tropes and figures, with glowing language, with pathetic addresses, in a word, with the graces and energies of the superior kinds of oratory, is loudly called for by many. Why do not our ministers, it is asked, preach like the divines of the French nation, or deliver their sermons with the life and pathos of Whitfield? The answer is, that the French divines, who have gained so much renown, preached only in Lent and Advent; and that Whitfield, who, it must be confessed, possessed astonishing power of oratory and great knowledge of human nature, never remained long in one place, but as soon as he perceived that the attention of his auditors was beginning to droop he fled to another part of the country.

In truth, the animated style of eloquence is not designed for common use; it is a mere luxury—a dish to be served up on holy days. The figures which enrich this species of style do not grow on every tree; correct and elegant simile and metaphors are rare productions. The settled ministers of the Gospel must be content to supply their flocks with the plain and substantial food of religion. If they are constantly aiming at something more exquisite, they will, ere long, become declaimers and enthusiasts; they will soon get to the end of their stock of images and glowing expressions, and will go over them again and again. They will grow affected and artificial; and though there will still be an appearance of heat, yet it will be a mere appearance; for their language will be colder than the rays of a December moon. As the truth of these observations is established by experience, you, my brethren, will be satisfied with their moderate warmth, which will last through life; and you will consider him as a useful preacher who wins you to virtue and piety, or confirms you in them, by little and little, though he seldom make a deep impression in any particular discourse.

Coral Varnish, according to Professor Buttger's prescription, should be made by first dissolving one part, by weight, of camphor, in twelve parts of ether; when the camphor is dissolved, four parts of the best copal resin, previously reduced to an impalpable powder, are added to the ethereal camphor solution, placed in a well-stoppered bottle. As soon as the copal appears to be partly dissolved, and has become swollen, four parts of strong alcohol, or methylated spirits, and one-quarter part of oil of turpentine is added, and, after shaking the mixture and letting it stand for a few hours longer, a thoroughly good copal varnish is obtained.—Scientific American.

A correspondent of the Churchman tells of a clergyman whose salary was made up by subscription. Not proving sufficient to support him, his wife gave music lessons. When the salary was collected, a mean miser, who had subscribed $10, refused to pay over $5, because he paid the minister's wife $5 for a quarter's instruction of his daughter. Another cut down his subscription from $10 to $20, because his wife received $20 for teaching his daughter music.

Dr Desmeches, a French Baptist missionary, has just organized, on the Canada side of Lake Huron, a church of eighty-two members, making the fifth church composed of converts from Romanism which he has organized since he came to Detroit, twelve years ago.

A NEW DECORATIVE MATERIAL.

The slowness of painting operations in buildings, the obstruction caused by workmen, and the disagreeable smell from fresh paint, are great inconveniences inherent to the present mode of painting and decorating. To remedy this, M. Jean Marie Lasche, of No. 23 Boulevard de Strasbourg, Paris, has just patented an invention, the object of which is chiefly to dispense with painting operations in the house or room to be decorated, and to prepare the painting at a factory or shop, so that it can be applied to walls or other surfaces by ordinary hangers or layers, without giving rise to disagreeable smells. The invention consists in producing the painting upon tin foil. M. Lasche takes thin tin foil, which possesses great flexibility, and spreads it upon glass, taking care to damp the glass in order to facilitate the spreading and retention of the foil. The foil thus spread constitutes a very smooth surface, on which the inventor paints or colors in oil, either plain or ornamental, as on walls or wainscots. It is allowed to dry, and is then varnished. This portable painting, when removed from the glass with its lining of tin, is ready to be applied in a house or otherwise. This new covering or hanging is wound on rollers like paper hangings, but it differs from them, inasmuch as the coloring or painting is on tin and in oil; the back or tin lining constitutes a waterproof surface, and the tin, owing to its great flexibility, can be adapted to the configuration of all moldings or irregularities. Before applying the tin hanging or covering, a waterproof mixture is spread on the wall or surface to be decorated, and the hanging is then cut and applied, being made to follow the irregularities of the moldings and ornaments. This tin covering may also replace gilding, the gold being applied on the tin foil with the ordinary preparation. It is dried and cut, and after having had a waterproof mixture spread on the ornaments or surface to be decorated, the pieces of tin gilding are applied to them. The advantage of this tin gilding over ordinary gilding on metals is that it does not oxydize, while ordinary gilding on metals soon becomes spotted or tarnished. This invention thus constitutes, as it were, a new process of decorative painting, which dispenses with all labor at the place of application, except simple hanging or laying. We have by us some samples of this new material, which are exceedingly appropriate and effective.—Mechanics' Magazine.

Practical Application of Sensitive Flames.—An apparatus has been invented by Barrott for making practical use of sensitive flames. It consists of two perpendicular copper rods, one of which, on its upper end, holds a metallic ribbon, which is composed of thin leaves of gold, silver or platinum, welded together. Such a ribbon expands unequally under the influence of heat; it bends toward one side, and, in doing so, comes in contact with a fine platinum wire attached to a galvanic battery. As soon as the poles of the battery are closed a bell begins to ring. The working of the apparatus is as follows:

"A sensitive flame is lighted, about ten inches from the metallic ribbon. This burns quietly so long as there is no noise, but a shrill whistle, or any unusual disturbance, will cause it to diminish one half in length, and to spread out wide in the middle, like the wings of a bird. It thus heats the metallic ribbon, which expands unequally, and occasions the contact of the poles of the battery, which rings a bell."

Such a light as this in a banking house would betray to the watchman the noise of robbery, and the inventor proposes to use it as a species of burglar alarm. As sound can be transmitted in water four times as rapidly as in the air, it is also suggested to employ this method on shipboard to make known the approach of a vessel in time of a fog.

There is probably the germ of curious applications of sensitive flames in Barrett's invention, and it would not be surprising to hear of its use in war, to warn a sentinel of the approach of the enemy, or of its application to a new species of telegraphy.—Scientific American.

TO AGENTS.

We are always trying to think of some eloqnent thing wherewith to stir the minds and kindle afresh the zeal of those preachers who befriend the ADVOCATE. Dr. Abbey, in a programme of treatises which suggests the French Academy of Science, presented as a theme the question, "Whether the Advocates are sufficiently laudatory of living men?" If he refers to those preachers who act as agents for this paper we do not hesitate to answer, "no." Indeed it would be no easy thing to award each of them his proper meed of praise. To call, excite, warm up and encourage a cironit of members to the snbscribing point is no ordinary undertaking. How often must he ring the changes of duty, cheapness, novelty, valnable information, price current, Conference organ, literary merit and other qualities which modesty forbids one even imagining! When at last he succeeds, with what honest pride does he forward the name and the money to the office, conscious of having achieved good in several directions! Well, we must not indulge—the theme is too rich and tempting. But we may be permitted a word further to those who have tasted this pure pleasure. It is this: August is a hot month and a long one—editorially, very long. We need encouragement—that is, new snbscribers. We need a good deal of encouragement. And camp meetings and district meetings are the precise source from which we hope to derive it. And we ask, in the French Academy style, "Are district meetings and other large Methodist assemblings sufficiently prolific of new snbscribers to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE?" We are honestly doing our best to make this paper a help to all Sunday school conventions, camp, quarterly and protracted meetings, and we now ask in turn that they should strengthen our hands. Every family of our people has money enough to take a religious and literary paper, published in their own region and Conference, and we urge the preachers to give no rest to the head of each household until he discharges this plain duty to himself, his children and his church. Give us five hundred new subscribers in this hot month.

WORLD'S EXPOSITION IN WASHINGTON.—Measures have been instituted for the organization of a company having in view the holding of a World's Exposition of manufactures, etc., in Washington a year hence.

AVAILABILITY OF PRAYER.

There are some blessings which are dispensed only upon the condition of prayer. No man ever attained to pardon and sanctification without it. Spiritual benefits are received in answer to earnest supplication. Progress in holiness is by this means. The lower forms of good—the good as distinguished from the perfect gifts of God—are often bestowed upon this condition. There is scriptural warrant, "in every thing" to come to the throne of grace. The natural, the reflexive benefits are great, no doubt; but to limit the results of prayer to these is at least semi-infidelity.

Manifold blessings seem to be showered upon men with no relation to prayer. This may be, however, more apparent than real. The great Advocate is always interceding; but as we are speaking of prayer in the world, we might inquire how long the world would stand if there were no praying in it? Suppose every breath of it, audible and inaudible, were to stop for an hour, a day or a year, would the channels of natural blessings continue open, and would streams of grace to guilty men continue to descend? Everything, temporal and spiritual, enjoyed by both saints and sinners, may therefore be due to the praying that is actually being done. The uniformity of the laws of matter, so far from being opposed to prayer, may be due to it. An absolutely prayerless world might fall immediately to pieces, and moral anarchy and the chaos of matter would come at the same time. Since the beginning of time prayer has been on the earth, and no one can assuredly say that the earth has not stood these thousands of years by virtue of it. Believing souls have always been interceding for a wicked world, and no moment of the night or day is without their supplications.

The four beasts and the four-and-twenty elders, when they fell down before the Lamb, besides their harps, had "golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints." Before the sounding of the seven trumpets an angel offered much incense, "with the prayers of all saints, upon the golden altar which was before the throne." Fire from this altar, cast into the earth, was followed by the most stupendous events in the history of the world, by "voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake."—Prayer is thus related to all the great affairs of time, and has some vital and potential connection with all the dispensations of divine providence and grace. It has to do with the revolutions of empires, the vicissitudes of the seasons, and the moral changes of repentance and conversion in the soul. Every order of intelligent beings is made to feel its impulse. Angels are sent forth as beams of light, to minister to the heirs of salvation, and devils are discomfited and put to flight by humble faith.

Most significant is the title: "O thou that hearest prayer." This is God's character, the very essence of His nature, and descriptive of the peculiar privilege which we enjoy in approaching "the high and lofty One which inhabiteth eternity." He is the hearer of prayer as much as He is the Creator or the Saviour, and He is this with special reference both to creation and redemption. Prayer is a factor in relation to each, and the products of the divine government in reference to this world are necessarily connected with it. Whatever moral and material laws there may be, and whatever these laws are, the economy of prayer was ordained along with them; so that if this element were taken out, the whole universe, for aught we know, would go to destruction. It avails, then, beyond all estimate in the entire scope of the world's history, and for good, temporal and spiritual, to all classes and conditions of men.

In estimating the availability of prayer, consider what real prayer is. Asking without faith, and for things not warranted in the word of God, is not prayer. The prayers of the wicked are declared to be an abomination to the Lord. To pray effectually we must walk closely with God. "The effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous" is the availing supplication. Here are especially the conditions of successful intercession. It is the "lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting." Holiness, charity and faith are essential to right praying. A spirit of revenge, and the indulgence of malign feelings, will make our intercessions a mockery and an offense in the sight of God. How much praying is there in the world when tested by the Gospel standard? Take out the formal services, the unbelieving, the careless and the unholy, and what amount of the pure wheat is left? The highest attainment and refinement of paganism is to pray by machinery, and much of what is called prayer amongst avowed Christians is little better.

Intercession certainly avails, but the conditions of its success must be observed. The wrestling and agonizing of holy and loving hearts cannot be in vain. Such intercessions girdle the earth and reach to all time with their waves and pulsations of spiritual light and power. The life and work must be in accord with our petitions. What right has a church to pray while its members are idlers? Parents cannot expect their children to be saved by this single means if they neglect to instruct and train, and are, withal, inconsistent in their example. Besides praying for the conversion of a friend or of sinners in general, we must be sure that we have done our duty toward them personally.

Intercessory prayer for sinners may avail to intensify the reproving and awakening operations of the Holy Spirit. It may prolong the space of repentance, and secure more time and opportunity to the careless. It may secure the special direction of providential agencies and circumstances, so that they shall conspire, along with direct spiritual influences, to the end of the soul's salvation. Also, prayer may qualify the believer more perfectly to discharge his duty toward the ungodly, and the very act of prayer for the impenitent may sometimes lead them to Christ. Few sinners can think, without concern, that those who love them are earnestly and habitually remembering them before God. Prayer is, therefore, an appointed means for the salvation of sinners. The intercessions of believers move directly upon the fountain of spiritual influences, arrest the suspended blow of justice in subordination with the higher advocacy of Christ, call into play all the resources of providence, and secure to the Christian the highest qualifications in the work of winning souls.

Besides leading sinners to Christ, prayer fertilizes the believing soul, and enriches it with all gifts and graces. It is this duty which determines the measure of our spirituality and the progress of the church. The prayer meeting, and, with Methodists, the class meeting also, are the gauges of spiritual condition; and the closet is the thermometer of religious life in the individual. The revival of prayer is the revival of all good in the soul, and of life and power in the church. How shall we get all the people to erect the family altar and maintain it? How shall we persuade all professed Christians to pray habitually in secret? When this problem is solved the world's salvation will be at hand. The prayerless man is out of accord with God and nature, and at war with the economy of salvation. But what shall be said of the prayerless Christian? What an utter perversion of terms, what a moral incongruity, what a monstrosity in the very idea!—There are such people, however, in the church—people who are practically prayerless. The approaching week of prayer will help, we trust, to arouse those who are neglecting this duty, and to bring the entire church to earnest and importunate supplication. "Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice." *

OUR MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

We have received a very pleasant remembrance from our brethren in that distant field, in a letter printed elsewhere—a photograph of the Rev. Y. J. Allen, and a copy of each of the newspapers published by him; one in the vernacular, and one in the classic letter of the Chinese. We highly prize these visible tokens of the vitality of Southern Methodism in those antipodal regions of the earth. They are to us both a comfort and an encouragement. Yes, those who may need comfort themselves are, by the working of God's methods, the source of comfort to others. England has derived for years past a perennial satisfaction from the hardships of those fearless mariners who, amid perilous floes and ice packs of arctic regions, patiently endeavor to force a northwest passage. The bare thought of what those adventurous spirits are passing through mitigates the winter in every hearth at home, and braces every Englishman for encountering all ordinary perils of the sea. Or, if he have other discomforts or fainting, he has but to cast his eye to the fierce regions of the tropics and contemplate the hairbreadth escapes and amazing endurance of Sir William Baker and his heroic wife, hunting the sources of the Nile through miasmatic waste or burning sands, or savage forests, or the more impenetrable, deadly tribes of unknown, untamed Africa. And doubtless, on the other hand, Sir John Franklin, or Kane, or Livingstone, or Speke, were sustained by the thought of home. The ten thousand eyes and hearts that were watching their steps and were waiting for the news of their discoveries, constituted the stimulus which bore them on to triumph over every form of discouragement or danger. England does not allow herself to be unrepresented in the greatest fields of human adventure—no, not an hour. And shall any part of the church of Christ fail to supply its share of heroes of the faith? Or shall ours be wanting when the Angel shall make up in the future, as St. Paul did in the past, a cloud of New Testament worthies as witnesses to the faith of Christ?

Of all kingdoms that of the Saviour is looking forward to the greatest conquests, and of necessity, therefore, to the severest conflicts. It is one vast action of adventure; from its inception to its ultimate consummation it is a battle with the impossible. Human weakness, with desperate faith, throws itself against the entrenched powers of darkness, and by superhuman effort prevails. On all the field angels and men fight side by side, and not a foot of it is gained that is not stained with blood. The whole soul and "the whole armor" are only sufficient to endure the dreadful shock or to drive the enemy from his strong places. In such a warfare we cannot mistake the place which missions hold in the minds of our people. They brace the courage and inflame the zeal of every earnest Christian. Every victory gained by them thrills ten thousand hearts with triumph and gratitude. Our brethren may therefore take courage, for they are the centre of many eyes and the subject of many prayers.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

WHISTLER, ALA., Aug. 2, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: We still have some good news to communicate to the friends of Zion, from this part of the Lord's vineyard, through your valuable paper.

Yesterday was our regular monthly communion, and truly it was a time of "sweet communion" with us. We received six persons into the church, making fifty-four during the past six weeks, and seventy-one since I have been in charge of this station, which now gives us a membership of one hundred and forty-three at this place. All our young converts and members took communion with us yesterday, and truly it was a time of refreshing from the Lord. All hearts were melted before God. Pray for us.

Yours in Christ,

J. J. GRACE.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

Remember that it begins on Friday, the 13th instant. Friday is to be observed as a day of fasting and prayer. Let all of our people, all of our churches, all of our preachers observe the week of prayer. Where other services are not expedient let there be a public prayer meeting at some hour of each day in all of our churches.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A FOURTEEN WEEKS' COURSE IN NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. By J. Dorman Steele, A. M., principal of Elmira Free Academy. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago. 1869. 12mo, pp. 316.

This book is the result of years of study and practice in the art of teaching. The author has selected from a multitude of philosophical principles "those which are essential to the information of every well read person," and these he has presented in language which can be readily understood by the learner. His illustrations of the various physical changes of matter are simple and natural. A large amount of most valuable information is thus compressed into this treatise and brought within the comprehension of youth. Every page has a wood-cut, making plain to the eye that which the text presents to the mind. The laws of hydrostatics, optics, pneumatics, acoustics, motion, gravitation, heat, frictional, thermal and magnetic electricities are set forth by the aid of all the modern uses of photograph, microscope or pencil. The accumulated knowledge of centuries is presented in the surface of a few printed pages. It is an excellent manual for schools. For sale by Messrs. Stevens & Seymour, Common street, New Orleans.

CHINA MISSION.

LETTER FROM REV. YOUNG J. ALLEN.—ARRIVAL OF C. K. MARSHALL IN CHINA.—PHOTOGRAPH.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, June 15, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: As you have always stood by the China mission with a hearty indorsement, I am sure you will rejoice with us at the prospect of soon being able to recover our foothold in the interior. We were never able to meet all the demands upon us in that direction, and the death of both of our native preachers was a sad calamity, for they held our advanced stations.

Once more, however, we are rallying. By a timely remittance from the Louisiana Conference to Brother Lambuth he is now set free from those secular engagements which have so long riveted him to Shanghai, and is able to revisit our scattered membership in the towns and cities so long neglected.

We have also to report the arrival of Brother Charles K. Marshall, who, we hope, has come out in the spirit of a missionary to his own people. He is now absent with Brother L. in the country, and expects to devote himself diligently, for the present, to the acquisition of his native language, which, from long residence in America, he has quite forgotten.

A letter from Dr. Deems, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, in New York, assures us that his church and Sabbath school will make provision for his support in connection with our mission.

Thus you see our present prospects hold out something more than that blank hope which we have contemplated so long and so steadily as almost to leave the impress of our "shadows" photographed on it.

I am under many obligations to you for your valuable organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I find an immense amount of valuable information in it, and not unfrequently make drafts upon it for the columns of my Chinese newspapers. How any member of the Methodist Church, within the limits of your patronizing Conferences can, without remorse, deprive himself of the pleasures it brings, and the instruction it gives, surpasses my comprehension.

We are all now hard at work, and hope ere long to report progress.

Inclosed I send my photograph to the Felicity street Sabbath school, which I hope you will kindly hand to the superintendent with my compliments.

Yours truly,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

A SAD AFFAIR.

EXPLOSION OF BOILERS AT PASCAGOULA.

MR. EDITOR: On the 23d of July, about four o'clock in the afternoon, the community of Pascagoula, Mississippi, was startled by an explosion of the boilers of Mr. Van Wagenine's saw mill, located near that place, on the bank of the Pascagoula river, just above its mouth. The mill had been running from early morning, was in good condition, and everything in regular working order. The hands (ten, I believe, in number) were at their posts, little thinking of the danger and death which were just before them. The mill had been stopped a few minutes for the purpose of repairing a band, when the dreadful explosion took place, spreading ruin, devastation and death on every side. The accident was certainly the result of the scarcity of water in the boilers, but whether from mistake, carelessness or an oversight in the engineer, is not known. The furnace, of course, was left a wreck, the bricks, shed and pieces of machinery being scattered to the four winds. One boiler was bursted into fragments on the spot, while the other, twenty-eight feet in length, was thrown with great force and velocity four hundred and sixty-five feet from its original bed, sweeping down and destroying everything in its course. It struck and tore off the earth in one or two places, lopped off branches, cut down two trees entirely, and finally stopped by coming in contact with a large oak in Mr. Van Wagenine's back yard, between the dwelling house and garden.

The results of this terrible accident are enough to make the heart sick. Six of the men were severely wounded, three of whom are now in eternity; and another may be dead at this writing. J. P. Martin, the engineer, is supposed to have been thirty-six years of age. Having no relatives here we know but little of his history, and nothing of his ancestry. He told some one that he was born near Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, ran away from his father when a boy, came South, grew up to manhood and married in the State of Louisiana. During the war he lost his wife and three children. If to blame on account of intemperance, carelessness or otherwise, for the disaster which has caused so much suffering, he has fully atoned for it. In addition to his being severely stunned, scalded and badly wounded, he is supposed to have inhaled the hot steam. After much suffering he died at the expiration of eight hours. We know nothing of his course in life, or preparation for death. His remains rest in the Protestant grave yard at Pascagoula. Herman Ibach was a German, but from what part of Germany he came, or how long he had been in America, we are not informed. A few weeks ago he came from Mobile to work in the mill, where he soon came to an untimely end. Receiving a severe wound in the head, he died in forty-eight hours. Though a Catholic in faith, yet for some cause his body lies in the Protestant grave yard at Pascagoula. Theodore Kelly, a colored man, of whom we have no particulars, received an injury at the same time, and died between thirty and thirty-six hours. He was buried by his friends in the colored grave yard, near Mosa Point, Mississippi. Another colored man's head is so dreadfully broken that death is thought to be inevitable. The other two, a white and colored man, may recover. The condition of Mrs. Council, a lady living in Mr. Van Wagenine's yard, and not in any way connected with the mill, is sad indeed. While returning from the well, just as she came in front of the furnace, though four hundred and fifty feet distant, the dreadful explosion occurred; and, as quick as lightning, the red hot boiler, in its destructive course, swept over the path in which she was walking. Immediately after the terrific blast, which was heard for miles around, had died away, and the smoke and dust settled, so that those who were not injured could see the ruins, this unfortunate woman was discovered lying against the garden fence, with some pieces of timber upon her, in a mangled and almost lifeless condition. The concussion was great; she was fearfully bruised in many places, both arms broken, one in two places, and also the upper part of her thigh. She is yet alive, but her suffering is excruciating. There is but little hope of her recovery. While Dr. Moore, who was soon at the place of destruction and death, was busily ongaged in stopping the blood, easing the pains and dressing the wounds of the suffering and dying, a messenger came from the next house summoning him to rescue a drowning child from the grave. Mr. Alexander, in the excitement of the moment, had gone to aid the suffering without leaving any orders concerning his little son, who was left in the yard. The mother and nurse thought the child was with the father, and the father thought him perfectly safe at home, and so all felt secure. After some time Mrs. Alexander, passing through the yard, was amazed, shocked and terrified to find her precious babe in a tub of water. Raising him out, life seemed almost entirely extinct. By the skill of the Docter he was resuscitated; but two minutes more would have been forever too late.

In this dreadful calamity it seems that Mr. Wagenine and family were providentially preserved, he having left the mill only ten minutes previous, and later than that his wife and child had been on the very spot where Mrs. Council was so fearfully injured. The loss and damage of property is estimated at $5,000 or $6,000. A. M. JONES.

JULY 27, 1869.

WE RECORD with pain the death of Mrs. Henrietta M. Saunders, and tender heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family circle. We recently stated, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, that Bishop Paine was called home by the dangerous illness of Mrs. Paine's mother. The numerous friends of that excellent lady will be pained to learn that she died suddenly at the Bishop's residence in Aberdeen, Mississippi, June 24. The Bishop reached home just in time for the interment. Mrs. Saunders was the widow of the late Rev. Turner Saunders. She was about seventy-five years of age. She was the daughter of Mr. Weedon, one of our old members in Baltimore; of course she was brought up in the church, and was a devout communicant for nearly half a century. She brought up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; six of them, besides step children, survive to call her blessed.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

FIRST BALE OF THE SEASON.—The steamship I. C. Harris, which arrived yesterday morning from Brazos Santiago, brought that for which our cotton merchants anxiously looked for tho past ten days, viz, the first bale of the new crop. It weighs—or rather did on leaving the plantation—three hundred and thirty-eight pounds, and classes as strict middling, though we have seen parties who put it down as low middling, and others who said that good ordinary would be a fair classification. The cotton bears the appearance of having been prematurely picked, yet the staple is long and strong. It was grown thirty miles above Brownsville and consigned to H. E. Woodhouse, of this city. But for the wretched condition of the road between the place where it was raised and Brownsville, the bale would have arrived here fourteen days ago.—Bulletin, August 4.

BY AN ingenious experiment, Prof. Graham lately showed the immense amount of hydrogen which palladium will absorb, amounting to eight hundred times its own volume. He took a thin ribbon of palladium, loosely coiled up, and made it one pole in the electrolysis of water. As the water was separated into its elements the hydrogen was absorbed by the palladium, increasing its bulk and uncoiling it. By reversing the current the hydrogen was driven off and the palladium coiled up again. The experiment was amusing, and the metallic ribbon seemed like a writhing worm endowed with life.

OBITUARIES.

Died, on the 12th of July, in the village of Delhi, Richland parish, Louisiana, CHARLES R., only son of Charles R. and Anna E. Slider, aged one year, four months and twenty days.

DANIEL J. HARGROVE, in his seventy-eighth year, passed away June 17, 1869, in Pickens county, Alabama, where he had lived since 1821.

Like the Daniel of Scripture, he left not a blemish on his name, but embalmed it in the sweet odor of his virtues. Fifty-eight years he had been a member of the church, and nearly all that time a class leader and steward. His house was a house of prayer, and evening and morning sacrifice was offered to God. A successful planter, his barns supplied many a widow's barrel with the "unfailing meat," and his home gave welcome to many a prophet of the Lord.

Thousands of souls were born again at "Hargrove's camp ground," of which for forty consecutive years he was the leading agent.

His money was given to the literary institutions of the church, in one of which he endowed a perpetual scholarship. Few men, with so little parade, have done so much good.

Fifty-five years my father and mother lived in love and unity, a wedded pair, beautifying earth's sweetest relation and blessing their children. Preceding her to the heavenly home, he no doubt eagerly awaits her coming. He frequently expressed "a desire to depart and to be with Christ," and said he was only waiting.

He had withdrawn at midday for usual repose, and simply slept on. What delightful visions filled that hour!

"Sweet be thy rest till He bid thee arise,
To hail Him in triumph descending the skies."

R. K. H.

Died, yesterday, in this city, Mrs. ANN N. JONES, wife of Judge John B. Jones. Judge Jones came to Texas in 1839, and may be considered one of the oldest inhabitants. The deceased was a most estimable lady, whose whole life was devoted to acts of goodness and charity. She leaves a void in the circle of her friends, and a host to mourn her death.—Galveston Dispatch, July 21.

The funeral of Mrs. Ann N. Jones, wife of our old friend and fellow-citizen, Judge John B. Jones, took place from the Methodist church this forenoon. We feel our utter inability to speak of the deceased, whose life we have observed for thirty years, in adequate terms. All old citizens who remember the trying scenes through which this city has passed, will remember with melancholy satisfaction the good works of the deceased. She was ever the friend of the poor, the sick and the distressed; in epidemics ministering to the suffering and the dying, taking charge of widows and orphans, opening her home and dividing her substance with the needy and the helpless. She did not wait to be called upon by or for those needing aid. She "went about doing good." Her long life affords a noble example of true Christian charity and practical piety.—Galveston Civilian, July 21.

Died, of congestion, July 14, 1869, in his seventeenth year, CICERO W. MOORE, son of Jethro and Eliza Moore, of Trenton, Louisiana.

Cicero joined the church and professed religion in August, 1868, and remained faithful till summoned to his reward. He used all the ordinances of Christ, and however much wearied by his studies or tolls, or debilitated by disease, if able to do anything, that thing was to attend the services of the sanctuary. He early displayed propensities for trade, which would have eventually made him wealthy; but with these he evinced a liberality that would have shielded him from the reproach of "loving money." Toward the welfare of the church and the care of God's house he contributed greatly by his personal sacrifices. He was patient under difficulties, and accomplished projected ends by unwearying pertinacity.

In the school room, where, from parental neglect or perversion, childish peculiarities frequently are bad comments on their professions of religion, his teacher says he presented a department thoroughly Christian. A remarkable fondness existed between him and his brother, several years younger, from whom he was seldom separated. His loss creates a mournful want and loneliness, like the failure of a cheerful fountain in silent woods. When sensible of his condition he expressed his readiness to die, and called around his bedside his brother and sister, whom he pledged to seek the Saviour and join the church, and charged to repeat his expiring message of like import to an absent sister. One by one he bade farewell to father, mother, sister and brother, then quietly turned over, and without a struggle, groan or sigh, sweetly slept in Jesus.

The disease which wafted him home came charged with tempestuous night that clouded and benumbed his faculties; but as he floated down, down to the ocean the darkness broke and the billows hushed, and he glided on beneath a cloudless sky, over a placid sea, to heaven.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE ANGEL BARQUE.

From the rosy, Western Heaven,
Through the tinted mists of even,
Up the purple deeps of twilight,
Slowly sailed a snowy cloud;
Coasting by the golden skylands,
Sweeping round the starry islands,
Sailed that barque, until the Zenith
Was enveloped in its shroud.

Thirteen years had come and parted,
Since, upon that sea uncharted,
Once before came seraphs sailing,
On a skyward tending track;
Then a leaf of God's evangel,
They had left a tiny angel
On thy bosom, gentle mother,
Now they come to call it back.

All her earthly mission ended,
On her little couch extended,
Lay she watching with the spirit,
Though her eye lacked mortal sheen;
She, by others all unnoted,
Watching where that vessel floated,
And the wooing angels waited,
For she knew they called "Pauline."

Many sweet good-bys she told ye,
Close her little arms enfold ye,
Mother, brother—presence holy,
Hov'ring angels fondly view;
But to Thee she clung the nearest,
Thou the fondest and the dearest,
As she murmured, "Oh, my Father!"
Longed to take you with her too.

"Oh, Lord Jesus! angels! heaven!"
Sang the parting spirit. Even
Caught the cadence of the chorus,
As the angel barque passed on;
Sailing up the ether slowly,
It has reached the haven holy,
And lies moored within the shadow
Of Jehovah's "great white throne."

CHILDREN AND PREACHING.

Mr. Editor: Many Sabbath school children, especially in our towns and cities, do not go to preaching on Sunday. They seem to think attending the Sabbath school sufficient; but this is wrong. Young children should go to church as well as Sabbath school, and learn to behave themselves properly and listen to the preacher, and try to understand what he says, and profit by it. The Sabbath school is designed to teach us our duty, and make us acquainted with the Bible. But God has instituted the preaching of the Gospel as the grand instrument in the conversion of sinners and saving the souls of the people. The Bible says: "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God; and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?"

Preachers are Christ's ministers, and He has promised to be with them to the end of the world. If you knew that Jesus would be in the pulpit on Sunday, at eleven o'clock, how anxious you would be to go and see Him and hear what He would say to you! Well, He is there every Sabbath, though you do not see Him with your natural eyes. He is there by His Spirit, and you ought to be there praying that He would bless you and make you a true Christian, that you may go to heaven and be happy when you die.

Be sure to go to preaching every Sabbath if you are able. If the preacher were to see all the Sunday scholars at church he would be sure to say something especially to them, that they could understand; and so they would feel that they had a share in the worship of God as well as the grown folks.

Uncle George.

Columbus, Miss., July 21, 1869.

Sights and Sounds in Canton.

Of all places to see strange sights and hear strange sounds perhaps we might select the great city of Canton, in China. Come, children, let us take a walk there in imagination, and observe for ourselves.

The city, you know—for you have studied geography—is in the southern part of China, upon the Canton river, which is of itself a thronged and mighty thoroughfare. Boats, boats are seen everywhere; boats of all sorts, all sizes, all uses, all descriptions of lading. What is that? A great awkward junk, the largest of all the native vessels, with its short masts, its flapping sails, and that staring eye painted on the prow, so it can see what course to take in the water!

See here, now, on the right.—There is something very pretty. It is a flower boat, moving down the stream. The deck is a perfect little garden. What lovely and fragrant shrubs and flowers! Let us buy a small bouquet. It will not cost much. Here sits the owner, under an umbrella of bamboo.

Well, what comes here? A duck boat, a fish boat, a pig boat, a poultry boat. But we can scarcely glance at them as they float or paddle along, shouting in strange gibberish what they have to sell, and begging your custom. Here is one that might be called a boarding boat, where cooked food is furnished to those in want of a meal.

These are tea boats. How gay they are, with their little awnings and bright vermilion paint. The pretty China cups and saddles tempt us to take a draught of the pleasant beverage; but we will pass along.

Here are boats in which artisans are plying their trades. Here are market boats and vegetable and fruit boats, where every eatable or drinkable article of a Chinese market may be obtained. And, with the noise of gongs, and bells, and trumpets, mingled with thousands of voices, screaming and shouting in unknown tongues, you have a vivid idea of Babel, and the confounding of its presumptuous builders.

Now we will leave the river and walk a while in the streets, where the native customs are best exhibited; for in some of them European usages are slowly creeping in. These streets, if they can be called such, are mostly narrow and filthy. But we shall meet no wheel carriages, except a few hand-barrows and small trucks; and perhaps we can avoid them. Sedan chairs or palanquins and their bearers may be numerous, or donkeys with a load so wide as to fill the street from one side to the other. In those cases we must dodge and duck as nimbly as we can. But the chances are for a good deal of knocking about. We must resolve, however, to take with good humor the innumerable pokes to which all pedestrians are exposed in the crowded thoroughfares of Canton.

Look at the articles exhibited for sale everywhere. Bamboo coops and cages contain all manner of live stock. Puppies whine, kittens mew, pigs squeal; birds sing, talk, scream or silently dress their bright tropic plumage; fowls cackle, crow or squawk; fish dart about in pans; rats and other creatures which we should call vermin at home are all marketable commodities here, as you perceive by the yellow-faced, long-cued, petticoated customers, who are cheapening, and chaffering, and scolding, in order to secure a good bargain.

Here is a barber pursuing his calling in the street. Beneath his bamboo umbrella is his shop. He will shave your head, comb and braid your cue, clean your ears, pick out your gray hairs, crack the joints of your fingers, and thump you on the back, all for five cash—about one-half a cent of our money.

Yonder is a vender of food, also under an umbrella, with his little brazier of charcoal to cook it. How nice it smells! Will you try a little rice stewed with chicken or pork and agreeably seasoned? It is not bad eating.

There is a fortune teller; there is a bookseller; and here, the proprietor of a Chinese circulating library. You can take a book for a few cash; but it will not do you much good unless you can read Chinese.

Who can this be making way among the crowd for this sedan? Get out of his road, if you can, or you will be roughly jostled. He looks wise, and handles his palmetto fan with vigor. That string of human teeth round his neck proves that he is a doctor, and is probably hurrying to visit some patient.

Here is an old woman, under her umbrella, mending clothes. Have you any rent in your gown to employ her upon? You would hardly know where it was, she can close it up so skillfully. Another umbrella shelters a shoemaker, with his tool and stock; another a blacksmith, with his coal, furnace, hand-bellows and little anvil. All manner of trades are thus represented and carried on in the streets of Canton.

Here is a beggar, showing us his dreadful sores. We will not stop to inquire whether they are real or artificial—probably the latter; yet we will give him a cash and hurry along. This little copper coin, with a hole through it so that it can be strung on a thread, is a cash; it is worth about a mill, or the tenth part of a cent.

If we go into other streets we shall find shops and stores, after the Chinese fashion, where wealthier merchants and artisans prosecute their business. Some of them make a fine display with lanterns and showy ornaments. The coffin shops are perhaps the gayest of all. Some of the natives buy their coffins before hand (if they can do it at a bargain,) and keep them in their houses till wanted.

There are some most melancholy sights, too, in this great pagan metropolis of a great pagan country. The square where the friendless poor and sick and old congregate, asking for alms, or medicine, or clothing, or food, till their voices are silenced by death; for many die there, under the universal umbrella or exposed to the glare of a tropical sun.

But perhaps there is no spot more shocking to a spectator from a Christian country than the place of a public execution, where the dead bodies of criminals lie exposed to view, attracting the coarse curiosity of the heathen crowd. The officers of public justice suppose that the sight of a headless trunk or a trunkless head will deter others from crime; but it must surely have a most hardening and brutalizing effect, whether it prevents crime or not. After a certain time these bodies are buried by the government.

Now, children, we have seen enough for one day; go home and —"thank the goodness and the grace

That on your birth have smiled," in that your home is on Christian ground. Never forget who has made your lot to differ so widely from those whose conditions and customs we have been noticing in our walks about Canton. We have reason to hope and believe that a Christian civilization and Christian institutions, with their refining and ennobling influences, will yet pervade this great and populous empire. Will you take a part, children, in bringing about so grand and glorious a result? We trust so.—S. H. Brown in New York Independent.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FOR THE GULF STATES.

But little can be done at gardening till September.

Gardens in July and August in this country are apt to be considered neglected, and to become grassy. But something may be done in gardens every month in the year.

Those who have not dug their Irish potatoes should dig them. They keep well till the first hard frosts by spreading them out on an outhouse floor, or on the dry ground under a building that sits up two or more feet above the ground. Any dry, cool place will do if they are spread out thin.

Cabbage seeds should be sown on the full moon of August and September. Old turf thrown in a pile and well rotted should be used, mixed with old manure and rotten leaves and fresh vegetable mold.

Scatter a little moss over the seed bed, to remain till the plants are fairly up. In case they become too dry, water them in the evening. Never water in the morning. Shade with palmettoes when the sun is too hot. Cabbage seed, and all others intended for plants, should be sowed in drills a foot apart, and worked with a hoe occasionally.

Plant squashes, and snap and pole beans, in rich and mellow soil, and after they come up keep the ground stirred around them to the depth of an inch. Always stir the soil as soon after a rain as it will pulverize.

Plant cow peas. They run to vines less, and produce more peas when planted late in the season.

Plant tomato seeds, in seed beds like cabbage seeds, for a second crop.

If the season prove favorable, watermelon and muskmelon seeds may be planted this month and produce healthy and good melons.

Sugar corn, and even the common corn of the country, may be planted this month and next, for roasting ears.

Lady peas may now be planted, and will do well.

On very fresh, new land, where brush piles have been burned, Dutch and ruta baga turnips may be sown on the full moon of August; but on most soils they will be hard, woody, stunted and bitter, if planted before September.

Tie up grape vines that run at this season of the year.

Haul manure to a pit prepared for the purpose, and mix with muck, leaves, rotten wood, bones, etc., to be placed on the fall garden in season for winter cabbages and turnips.

Spanish flies are troublesome in some gardens at this season of the year. Mix a spoonful of coal oil and a spoonful of spirits turpentine with a bucket of water, and sprinkle the invaders with the mixture from a watering pot. Lime sifted on the plants moderately is good. Soot and ashes are also good to protect the plants. If the garden is clean drive them into a pit, and cover them with earth.—Planters' Banner.

Watering Plants in Summer.—It is not wise to begin to water plants in the garden, unless it is intended to follow it up thoroughly. If plants in the open ground are watered, they throw out their little roots near the surface in order to drink in the moisture, and if afterward the watering be neglected, these little fibrous roots perish for lack of moisture, and the plant suffers. When they are not watered at all, the little roots go down deeper in search of moisture, and in well cultivated soil, in good condition, they will usually find enough to keep them from suffering, unless the drought continue unusually long. If it seem necessary to give water, it should be copious in quantity, sufficient to go down to the bottom of the roots; a sprinkling that wets the surface is worse than none. Syringing the leaves to wash off the dust, if done in the evening after the sun is down, will improve the appearance and health of plants.—Exchange.

Strawberry Fertilizer.—A Lancaster (Pennsylvania) correspondent of the Small Fruit Recorder says:

An experiment made last year by myself may not come amiss at this time with those who grow strawberries. I procured a half hogshead, filled it with rain water, and put into it one quarter pound of ammonia, and one quarter pound of common nitre. When the strawberry plants were blossoming out, I gave them a sprinkling of the solution at evening, twice a week, until the fruit was nearly full size. The result was double the amount of fruit on those where the liquid was applied, to what was obtained on those vines right along side of those where none of the liquid was applied. Let all give it a trial.

Grape Vines from Leaves.—Mr. Joseph Harris, of Moundville, West Virginia, inclosed a statement to the effect that certain grape vines were grown from the leaves, with no wood or bark attached. The leaves being stripped from the vines and placed in sand prepared for them, the bud and roots started out from the stem of the leaf. The process is to take the leaf and give a quick downward jerk. This breaks it off close to the vine. It is then put in the sand about fourteen days, at the end of which time it will have good roots and the top started; then it is potted off and grows rapidly.

HOUSEKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

Ice Cream.—The following directions for making ice cream are furnished by a lady who is noted for her success in the preparation of this most acceptable refreshment:

To the making of good ice cream five things are essential—namely: pure sweet milk or cream, fresh eggs, white sugar, good flavoring extracts, and maizena or corn starch, or arrowroot. The last mentioned it is difficult to obtain in an unadulterated state, and maizena is nice enough for the most delicate taste.

The most common fault in ice cream is flakiness, which may be produced by the use of milk which has been watered, or by an imperfect method of freezing. There are several kinds of patent freezers now advertised, each of which claims the superiority. I have one in use which promises to do its work in five, and actually does it thoroughly in from eight to fifteen minutes, according to the quality of the cream. The more pure cream there is in it, the longer will be the time required for freezing it. The best flavoring extracts I have ever used are Lubin's. They can be obtained in half-pint bottles, a much more economical way of buying than by the small bottles so much in use.

I have for the last three years experimented quite extensively with different recipes, and I have settled upon the following as making the best ice cream:

No. 1.—Two quarts of milk, four eggs, three quarters of a pound of white sugar, two tablespoonfuls of maizena, and a little salt. Boil the milk with the salt for two or three minutes in a tin pail, set in a kettle of water. Remove it from the fire and stir in the maizena dissolved in a little cold milk, then the sugar, and lastly the eggs. Stir it constantly for two or three minutes to keep the eggs from cooking. Add the flavoring extract just before freezing. The mixture should be thoroughly cooled before freezing, as otherwise the process is retarded.

No. 2.—Skim a quart of cream from five quarts of milk, which should have been standing in summer twelve hours, and in winter twenty-four hours; add to it one quart of new milk, two tablespoonfuls of maizena, three quarters of a pound of sugar, a little salt, four eggs or less, or none at all. With the four eggs it is very rich, too rich for most tastes. Flavor as you like. The cooking process is the same as in No. 1.

No. 3.—A still richer article may be made by using clear cream, and in this case no eggs should be used. The same proportion of other ingredients should be observed.

There are a good many articles of cookery which require only the whites of eggs; the remaining yolks are very nice in either of the first recipes, instead of the regular number of entire eggs. From four to twelve yolks may be used in No. 1; from two to six in No. 2.

The first recipe makes a more economical dessert than most pies or puddings.—Hearth and Home.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Griddiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and net at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth; or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE OF THE CHARTER OAK.

OF GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus shewing the great importance of PILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

Letter from Major J. T. Hester, of Alabama:

AUBURN, ALA., April 4, 1869.

MESSRS JOHN DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents.: I have received so much benefit from "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid" that I feel it my duty to let you know it. I had an attack of Typhoid Fever, and with it a most stubborn case of Erysipelas, and was confined to my bed near two months, suffering the most intense pain all the time from Erysipelas; and after exhausting the many prescriptions of my physician, he finally commenced the use of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, and soon found that I was being improved by its use, and continued to use it, and am nearly well. I consider it the most valuable medicine for the diseases and purposes for which it is made that is sold. I also used it most successfully on my little son, who was severely burned, and I do assure you that it was from this medicine alone that I could get any relief from my distressing attack of Erysipelas.

I do not write you this as a certificate for publication, but as a duty that I feel I owe to Professor Darby and his invaluable medicine.

I shall never be without it again if I can by any possible means get it.

I hope you are succeeding, and will make a fortune.

Very truly yours,
J. T. HESTER.

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited rather less apathy during the last three days, but without showing much improvement in any department of the wholesale trade. Sugar has been in good request, and all the receipts, together with a moderate amount in second hands, have met a ready sale at full prices. Very little has been reported in molasses. The movement in Western produce has been confined to the usual local trade, there being no stocks to bring out buyers for export. Owing to the limited demand, and the supply being more liberal, corn has lost a part of its recent advance, but still rules at $1 07 to $1 10 per bushel. Wheat is arriving quite freely at St. Louis, and selling at reduced rates, affording reason to hope that there will soon be a surplus for shipment to this market, where it will meet a ready sale at fair prices, if in a fit condition for an Atlantic voyage.

The weather has continued showery. We still receive cheering crop accounts from the country. The caterpillars have appeared in various localities, but only to a sufficient extent to excite remark. If the cotton were not a week or two backward they would cause no uneasiness, but it is evident that there is some apprehension that they may yet do considerable injury and disappoint the present hopes of the planter.

The river remains about the same, being three feet nine inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 30th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	216
Lake		7
Mobile		469
Texas		1
Total		693

On Saturday a list of 350 bales, classing strict low middling, which had been for some time held at 32c., and for which 30, 30½ and 31c. had been repeatedly refused, finally changed hands at 31½, which was fully 1c. above the price recently accepted for trifling lots of the same grade, but this was the only transaction reported. On Monday there was more inquiry, but in consequence of the price realized for the above list factors were more stringent in their pretensions, which confined the business to 163 bales, taken by three buyers, in small lots, mostly of the lower grades, at inside figures. On Tuesday 90 bales were picked up in several small lots at 26c. for strict ordinary, 27½ to 28c for barely good ordinary, 28¾c. for good ordinary to low middling, and 30c. for a good style of low middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 603 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 794,481 bales, against 586,696 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 81,894 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 22,574 bales to France, and of 6,231 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 248,123 to Great Britain.

Sugar.—The demand for Louisiana sugar, since our last report, has been fair, and prices have ruled firm. The supply in the city is light, and held generally at higher prices, and little more will be received from the country until next crop. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 120 hogsheads, including all the receipts, at 12½c. per pound for fair, 12¾c. for good fair, 14¼c. for choice, 14¾c. for yellow clarified, and 16c. for white.

Molasses.—The production of Louisiana is in good demand, and what little comes in sells readily at full prices.

Flour.—The market has been quiet, with a light stock and a scarcity of superfine and double extra.

Monetary.—Gold opened at 135¾ to 135⅞, (against 136⅛ at New York,) and closed at 135¼ to 135½.

The movement in silver has been of moderate extent, the only sales reported being $500 in American half dollars at 130½, and $500 at 131, and $1,300 at 130½ to 131. American half dollars are quoted at 130½ to 131, and Mexican dollars at 3½ to 3¾ per cent. premium in gold.

In bonds we notice sales of $2,500 city ten per cents at 99½, $4,000 at 100, and $15,000 at —.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—The following statement is made public by permission of the President:

In an interview with General Tarbell, secretary of the Republican Executive Committee of Mississippi, at the residence of Secretary Fish, in New York, on the 6th instant, General Grant remarked on the small number of Republicans engaged in the National Republican party in Mississippi, who are using the name of Judge Dent, and said that in his judgment this fact was in itself evidence that they could not be otherwise than used by the opposition. The President said that his only desire was peace and amity, and he would do anything that was right to bring that about, but that these people cast suspicions upon their own motives by the fact that all their efforts seem to be aimed at dividing, not aiding, the Republican party in their midst. If they were really in earnest they would not be so anxious about those with whom they acted; to sincere men it could not be difficult to tell who in the South were and had been friends of the administration.

The President stated that in his conversations with the gentlemen representing the new Republican party in Mississippi he had expressed himself much more emphatically against their course than he had to General Tarbell. He said he fully indorsed General Ames' administration, and that that officer would have to do much and more serious things than he had heard charged against him before he would subject himself to removal.

The President has not intimated, in conversation nor by letter a desire that Judge Dent should withdraw from the Mississippi canvass.

In view of the present complications, Judge Dent reasserts that he will canvass the State of Mississippi in favor of the Conservative Republican candidates, whether himself or another heads the ticket.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—It is generally conceded that Tennessee has gone for Senter overwhelmingly—perhaps forty thousand. No county, so far as heard from, gives Stokes a majority.

The Tribune says: "For a long time the result of the Tennessee election has been conceded on both sides. The fight made by Mr. Stokes has been the hardest kind of up-hill work, and his chances have diminished more and more certainly as the time for voting drew near. The few returns at hand, as we write, indicate that the majority for Senter is even a larger figure than was claimed by his partisans."

The Herald says: "A most gratifying point of the news is that the contest passed off quietly, and that all the refreshment saloons were closed during the day."

The World says: "It is very gratifying, in view of the efforts made by a portion of Grant's cabinet, to secure the election of that bold Radical Stokes. More important than this is the probability, indicated by the returns, that a majority of the members of the Legislature just elected are Conservative, thus sparing the nation the disgrace of the addition to the Senate of another Radical. Whether the Senator to be will be Andrew Johnson, or Bailie Peyton, or Emerson Etheridge, or some other person whose name has not yet transpired, remains to be seen. It is enough if the Radicals have been beaten in a State which they have held by the throat for years, through a system of disfranchisement as sweeping as it was outrageous. Thus one by one of the States that voted for Grant and Colfax are repenting of their folly, and courageously arraying themselves under the banner of the Democratic party."

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—The Secretary of State instructs Marshal Barlow to deliver the Spanish gunboats to the custody of the commander of the Brooklyn navy yard.

EUROPE.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—Patrie says large bands of the clerical party have assembled in the northern district of Spain, well armed, and a great Carlist demonstration will be made on the 15th instant.

MADRID, Aug. 10.—The newspaper Impartial says twenty thousand men will be sent to Cuba in September.

Several priests who led Carlist bands have been defeated. Death promptly follows capture.

The Spanish consul at Bayonne telegraphs that the Carlists are on the frontier, and intend making an irruption into Spain to-morrow. The government is well prepared to receive them.

Carlist bands throughout the country seek refuge in the mountains.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Parliament prorogued. The Queen's speech contains strong assurances of peace. Negotiations with the United States have been, by mutual consent, suspended. The Queen hopes the disestablishment bill may promote peace in Ireland and help to unite all classes.

LISBON, Aug. 11.—Resignation of the entire ministry is expected, under the censure of the Upper House.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 5.—The election passed off quietly, not a single disturbance having occurred.

This county elects the entire Democratic Legislative ticket, and gives Senter about three thousand majority. Hardeman gives him one thousand, Knox eight hundred. So far as heard from Senter surpasses the most sanguine expectations of his friends. The vote polled here is the largest since the war.

Latest.—Returns from various parts of the State indicate the election of Senter by an overwhelming majority.

With the exception of a slight disturbance at Moscow, not a single act of violence has been heard from.

The following Senators are elected: D. C. Slaughter, Emerson Etheridge, Bailie Peyton, John Cubbins and Edwin Cooper. The latter is a Republican.

So far as heard from the Conservative Legislative ticket ran ahead of Senter.

There is great rejoicing among the disfranchised here over the result.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Singman and Chay Chew, our Chinese visitors, were entertained with a private banquet at the Sherman House, last evening, which was attended by our leading citizens.

G. M. Richards, president of the Board of Trade, presided, and speeches were made by Mr. Richards, Alderman Wicker, Hon. N. B. Judd, S. S. Gould, of San Francisco, Joseph Medill, of the Tribune, and Chay Chew. The speech of the latter was a gem, as follows:

"Eleven years ago I came from my home in China to seek my fortune in your great Republic. I landed on the golden shores of California, utterly ignorant of your language, utterly unknown to any of your people; a stranger to your customs and laws, and in the minds of some an intruder; one of that race whose presence was deemed a positive injury to the public prosperity. But, gentlemen, I found both kindness and justice. I found that above the prejudice that had been formed against us, there flowed a deep, broad stream of popular equality; that the hand of friendship was extended to the people of every nation, and even Chinamen might live and be happy, successful and respected in free America. [Applause.]

"I gathered knowledge in your public schools. I learned to speak as you do; to read and write as you do; to act and think as you do; and, gentlemen, I rejoice that it is so; that I have been able to cross the vast continent without an interpreter, [applause;] that here in the heart of the United States I can speak to you in your own familiar speech, and tell you how much, how very much I appreciate your hospitality, [applause]—how grateful I feel for the privileges and advantages I have enjoyed in your glorious country, and how earnestly I hope that your example of enterprise, energy, vitality and national generosity may be seen and understood, as I see and understand it, by our government. [Applause.]

"Mr. Burlingame had done much to promote a good feeling in China toward the American nation—made himself acquainted with the authorities at Pekin; and he won their confidence to a remarkable degree. He is an excellent man, and I believe if his advice is received and acted upon, China will soon be a cordial friend of all the commercial powers of the earth. Already we are doing something in the way of progress and modern improvement. Steamboat lines have been established on our rivers, and now we want the railroad and telegraph

"This wonderful sovereignty of the Western Hemisphere, where the people rule and where there is ever proclaiming peace and good will to all, has taken the lead, and China now must brush away the dust of her antiquity, and, looking across the Pacific, behold and profit by the new lessons of the New World. [Applause.]

"We trust our visit, gentlemen, may be productive of good results to all of us, that the two great countries of the East and West, China and America, may be bound forever together in friendship, and Chinamen in America may find like protection and like consideration in the search for happiness and wealth."

MOBILE, Aug. 11.—David P. Reid, a prominent citizen of this city, who was accused by the Radicals of firing the first shot at the Radical meeting last Thursday night, gave himself up for trial yesterday, and was honorably acquitted by the mayor this morning. Some eighteen white and colored witnesses of unimpeached integrity, both for the prosecution and defense, were examined, and swore positively that Reid did not fire the first shot.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 11.—A petition from some of the Republicans of Mobile was made on yesterday to Governor Smith, asking him to place that city under martial law. A delegation from the citizens of Mobile arrived here to-day and had an interview with the Governor, which was entirely satisfactory, and resulted in his declining to put the city under military rule.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 11.—Governor Palmer addressed the county convention, wherein he opposed the fifteenth amendment for the reason that he opposes the surrender by the States of the power over the question of suffrage.

MACON, Ga., Aug. 11.—The first bale of new cotton arrived here to-day. It was raised by P. W. Jones, of Baker county; class New York middling. It will be shipped to Boston.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Aug. 11.—The late heavy and continued rains causes rust in the cotton in various sections of the State.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Aug. 11.—The Democratic Central Committee have nominated George H. Pendleton for Governor. Peudleton accepts.

THE ECLIPSE.

SHELBYVILLE, Ky., via Eminence, Ky., August 7.—The observations here to-day were very satisfactory and in many respects gratifying. The following persons comprise the joint board of observation for Shelbyville: Prof. Joseph Winlock, director of Harvard Observatory, in charge of the observations of the physical phenomena; assisted by Alvan G. Clark, professor of Cambridge. Assistant George W. Dean, of the Coast Survey, was in charge of the observations of procession; assisted by F. Blake, Jr., of the Coast Survey. J. A. Whipple, of Boston, assisted by George Clark and J. Pendergast, had charge of the photography. Prof. Searl, of New York, devoted himself to observations of the general phenomena, and during the total phase he was to search for the intra Mercurial planets. Sub-assistant F. H. Agnew also devoted himself to observations of general phenomena, and had charge of the observatory arrangements, being assisted by Mr. R. E. Sharrard, of Louisville. The meteorological observations were made by Prof. Seymour, of Louisville, and Robert Levis, of Shelbyville. A number of distinguished amateurs were present, and with their own instruments took observations. Among these was Mr. Bowditch, of Boston, a son of the celebrated astronomer. One of the most important discoveries made by Prof. Winlock at the spectroscope, was eleven bright lines in the spectrum of the protuberances of the sun, only five having heretofore been determined. He also observed a shower of meteors between the moon and the earth. The party are jubilant over the success of the photographers. Four excellent pictures of the corona were secured; while eighty live photographs of the sun were taken at different times during the partial obscuration. The beautiful red flames or solar protuberances were visible to the naked eye. Bailey's beads, as well as the dark and dismal shadow of the moon sailing away through air, were plainly noted by a party of amateurs stationed on top of Shelby College. The sky was perfectly clear, and everything seemed to propitiate the success of the observations. There were ten or twelve mounted instruments in use on the occasion, the principal one of which was the Shelby College telescope, which was handled by Prof. Winlock, assisted by Adam G. Winlock, Esq., of Cambridge, Massachusetts. This is a fine instrument and cost $4,000. It once ranked third in the United States. Arcturus, Vega, Venus and Mercury were visible to the naked eye during the total phase. Mr. Searle, whose duty it was to search for intra Mercurial planets, did not succeed in finding any, reporting nothing fainter than Regulus near the sun. When the sunlight commenced to become dim a number of citizens rushed to the college grounds, the headquarters of the observers. Eight minutes before the total phase, the usual phenomena of distraction among birds of the air and cattle occurred. Six minutes before totality a deathly ashen hue overspread the countenances of all present, and for a while the faint-hearted were terrified.—The scene during the totality was an awful one, and when the sunlight appeared again a shout of exultation went up from the great crowd in the college grounds.

SPAIN.—The recent discovery of the slaughter ground of "the Holy Inquisition" in the new squares at Madrid has produced a thrilling effect, and the very earth seems to have opened its mouth to cry out for vengeance on that system of priestly tyranny which has canonized St. Domiuic.

Even in this country people required to have their memories refreshed as to the atrocities perpetrated by the Inquisition. Popular writers have of late years done their best to whitewash popery from the indelible stain of its sanguinary persecutions; and the present generation is not so well versed in the history of the martyrs as those who formerly were accustomed to the early study of Foxe's generally faithful although not uniformly accurate chronicle. There are those who forget how Spain was steeped in the blood of Jews and Albigenses and other so called "heretics," before Luther was born, and how the blood of martyrs did not cease to flow even down to the time of Ferdinand VII in the present century. It is true that the iron heel of Philip II, the husband of our sanguinary and persecuting Mary, trod down the Protestants of Spain till few were left after his terrible autos da fe in 1559 at Seville. But authentic publications of Llorente's famous work show what were the atrocities committed before and after the times of Luther. The Edinburg "Spanish Evangelization Society" has published the following:

"THE POPE, SPAIN AND THE INQUISITION.—The London journals of December 21, 1868, mention that the Pope had a secret consistory at the Vatican, the day before, at which his holiness spoke of the events in Spain, and deplored the many evils suffered there by the church, mentioning particularly the danger threatening the unity of the faith which had ever formed the chief glory of that nation. And how was the unity of the faith in that Catholic nation maintained for so long a time? By the Inquisition. The great instrument which was the glory of that Catholic nation was the Inquisition! The following table, translated from a French work, Histoire Abregee de l'Inquisition d'Espagne (par M. Llorente) par I. Gallois, Troisieme Edition, Paris, 1824, exhibits a recapitulation of the victims of the Spanish Inquisition, from the year 1481 to 1820:

FROM—	Burned alive.	Burned in effigy.	Condemned to the galleys or imprisd.

1665 to 1700, und Chas II	1632	510	6512
1700 to 1746, und. Philip V	1000	760	2120
1746 to 1759, und. Ferdinand VI	10	5	170
1759 to 1788, und. Chas III	4	.....	56
1788 to 1820, und. Chas. IV	.....	1	42
	36168	18019	281250

"Thus the number of victims in Spain alone, from 1481 to 1820, amounts to three hundred and thirty-five thousand four hundred and sixty-seven, not including those who had suffered imprisonment or confinement to the galleys, or exiled, during the reign of Ferdinand VII, the number of which is very considerable."

It is well that the public mind should be directed to the facts of history. Llorente's tables are the more valuable because he was himself an official of the Inquisition, and had access to its registers for the materials of his statistics.

ASBURY MANUEL LABOR SCHOOL BUILDING DESTROYED BY FIRE.—A note from the Rev. J. Harrell, superintendent of the Indian Mission Conference, dated Van Buren, Arkansas, July 30, brings bad news for the cause of education among the Creek Indians. Only two weeks ago we gave an interesting and encouraging account of the late examination exercises of the Asbury school, and now, alas! the building is in ashes. Brother Harrell writes:

"I am sorry to inform you that our Asbury school (Creek Nation) has been destroyed by fire. A note just received from Brother Ruble informs me that the building was discovered on fire about three o'clock on the morning of the 22d instant. He does not know how it was set on fire, but nearly all was lost. We can only leave it to Him who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind."

THE GREAT EASTERN.—Her Present Appearance.—A foreign journal prints the following with reference to the present condition of the steamship Great Eastern, now engaged in laying the French Atlantic cable: "This floating island, as the ship has been poetically called, is deeper, by a foot or more, than she has ever been. She is somewhat cumbered by deck houses, and has, in other respects, been made to resemble a floating American hotel. Despite alterations, the Great Eastern remains a marvel, concerning which all that has been said will probably be said again and again, without tiring those who are not to be tired by wonders. Her space and her luxury, her long corridors, high ceilings and tiled floors, her large rooms instead of cramped holes for sleeping in, her passages leading thereto, with numbers denoting the apartments, '119 to 129,' '130 to 137,' and so on, are all so unlike anything aboard ship that visitors might be pardoned a forgetfulness of locality. There are improvements in the mechanism of the Great Eastern which are of some moment and value. Her rudder, formerly worked by twelve men, now answers the bidding of steam machinery. A single helmsman turns a wheel, and may indulge himself with the pleasing idea that he thereby steers the ship. All that he does, however, is to act upon certain valves, and to set in motion the power by which, in reality, the vast hull is guided through the sea. The paying-out machinery, too, has been perfected, and there is less chance of injury to the cable than there has ever been."

THE Moravian Periodical Accounts gives the history of the mission ships which for one hundred years have been engaged in supplying the missions on the coast of Labrador. During all that time there has been no shipwreck, though often in the greatest dangers of Arctic navigation. The late Admiral Lord Gambier more than once declared that he considered the preservation of the Labrador ships during so long a course of years as the most remarkable occurrence in maritime history that had come to his knowledge.

THE DEATH OF MOSES.

BY DR. WATTS.

Lord, 'tis an infinite delight
To see thy holy face,
To dwell whole ages in thy sight,
And feel thy vital rays.

This Gabriel knows, and sings thy name
With rapture on his tongue;
Moses, the saint, enjoys the same,
And heaven repeats the song.

While the bright nation sounds thy praise
From each eternal hill,
Sweet odors of exhaling grace
The happy region fill.

Thy love, a sea without a shore,
Spreads life and joy abroad;
O, 'tis a heaven worth dying for
To see a smiling God!

Show me thy face, and I'll away
From all inferior things;
Speak, Lord, and here I quit my clay,
And stretch my airy wings.

Sweet was the journey to the sky,
The wondrous prophet tried;
"Climb up the mount," says God, "and die;"
The prophet climbed and died.

Softly his fainting head he lay
Upon his Maker's breast,
His Maker kissed his soul away,
And laid his flesh to rest.

In God's own arms he left the breath
That God's own Spirit gave;
His was the noblest road to death,
And his the sweetest grave.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SOOCHOW, (85 miles from Shanghai,)
June 15, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I have been in this once great city for a few days to meet the native Christians and to receive some into the church who have been on probation. My time has been taken up with visiting the church members scattered about in the city and in the country, preaching in the morning and in the afternoon, and administering medicine to the sick. I had more applications for medicine than I could attend to. They were coming night and day, begging me to help them and save their lives. Many seem truly grateful for the help rendered, and pronounce upon me many blessings. But few care to listen when you talk of the soul and of the great love of God in sending His only begotten Son to die for all men, and that all, through Him, "might not perish, but have eternal life." O! the hardness of the hearts and the want of understanding of this heathen people.

If any people are in total darkness it is certainly this people, who are filled with all superstition and are enemies to all truth, and by their wicked works and tempers manifest their wickedness and enmity to the living God.

This great city is now in ruins, or nearly so. Its former glory has passed away, and its wealth and prosperity have vanished. Her people are reduced to poverty, and the happiness and joy which once prevailed have given place to sadness and fear. Many of them have been made to pass through the fire of affliction, and their families have been scattered to the four winds. There is scarcely a family but can tell some tale of distress. Many point to the loss of the eye or ear, or some severe cut which they received from ruthless invaders of their homes.

Now while I write the people of this once great city are in great fear, and are ready to flee, from reports of an invading force. Thousands are ready, at a moment's warning, to flee to Shanghai for safety. Some six or seven suspicious looking men were arrested and beheaded at once, but I fear that will only increase the difficulty and exasperate the friends and kindred of these men.

Soochow, I apprehend, will now be what it once was under the present government. Ruins of once stately buildings meet the eye wherever you go, in and out of the city.

We have now a small church in this city, consisting of eight members. A small number, it is true, but we do thank the Lord our God that He has put it into the hearts of these few to seek and serve Him. Now that we have a small community of Christians here, we pray for an outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the work. We have waited long, and labored and prayed for the salvation of this people; but we have had faith in the promises of God. We are called upon "not to cast away our confidence, which hath great recompense of reward; and yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

Charles Marshall, or Sir Whoa, is with me in Soochow. He arrived on the 10th of June, from New York, having been on the way about five months. He worked his way on board ship, and is now with us in Shanghai, and anxious to be a missionary to his own people. He is thoroughly Americanized, and firm in his faith in Christ as his Saviour. Dr. Deems, of New York city, promised him, if he wished to be a missionary, his church would support him when he reached Shanghai and was prepared to commence the work among his own people. For the present he will continue with us and pursue his studies, both English and Chinese.

I am truly thankful that I can say I have commenced my missionary work again, and that I am assured by the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences of a support in the future. I trust you will not expect too much at first, for we have much with which to contend. But God is able to convert these people, and we believe He will abundantly pour out His Spirit on the work. Many thousands around me are willing to hear the Gospel, but few, very few, are willing to accept of it. But we trust for better things. I am assured our "labor shall not be in vain." The heathen shall yet see the glory of God and of His Christ. Who are those that fly as a cloud, and as "doors to their windows?" In that day the glory of the Lord will fill the whole earth, and "he shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied."

From what I have seen in some of our papers, many expect China to be converted at once, and that they open their arms and their houses and receive missionaries with the greatest joy. But this is not so. No, we have to battle with their superstitions as much as ever. It is true, when passing among them, we are treated with all kindness; but they are just as far from accepting of the Gospel as they were many years ago. The Gospel is being spread among them, and here and there we find a Christian who is willing to let his light shine. Such accounts as state that China is now prepared to have the "standard of the Gospel erected on every hill top" is calculated to do harm. What you want are facts. We have a blind and superstitious people to deal with. Their prejudices are many, and as deeply rooted as their notions of idolatry. To conquer these it requires strong faith in the God of Abraham.

Week after week adds to the number of sincere believers in Christ from among this people, and I trust the time will come when China will lift up her voice in singing the praises of our God. I have not the least doubt that God will yet, in answer to the prayers of His people and for the sake of His dear Son, stir up these people to repentance and faith in the atonement of Christ the Lord. Our prayers are for God's blessing, and we are assured that "What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." "If ye ask anything in my name," says Jesus, "I will do it." Blessed be God for this precious promise, which has been the comfort of the followers of the Lord Jesus for ages past, and will be until He comes again to receive us to Himself. These precious promises are dear to many Christians among the Chinese, who pray that they may be filled with the knowledge and love of God.

I would be glad to say that thousands were eager to receive the Gospel of Christ; but this should only quicken our efforts for their conversion.

We beg the prayers of the whole church in our behalf, and that we may see the work of the Lord prospering here in a heathen land, and that the glad day may soon be ushered in when "The earth shall be filled with knowledge of the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea."

Election of the S. S. Superintendents by the Quarterly Meeting Conference.

Some years since the General Conference of our church showed representatively the growing importance of the Sunday school interest, and their desire to foster that interest by identifying it more intimately with the organization of the church. The whole church thinks this was well. We would suggest that the General Conference take another step in the same direction, by making the superintendent of the Sunday school a member of the Quarterly Meeting Conference in the same manner that other church officers are made, to wit, by election.

We shall briefly suggest our reasons for this change: First. It would harmonize our system. All other members of the Quarterly Conference are made so by election of the Quarterly Conference itself; but the superintendent of the Sunday school is made a member by the votes of the Sunday school teachers, or the appointment of the pastor. The superintendent, as a member of the Quarterly Conference, can vote to grant or to renew license to exhort or preach, or for recommendations for admission into the Annual Conference, and for deacons' and elders' orders, and his single vote may not unfrequently determine the result; but he himself occupies his position as a member of the body without the votes of the very body his vote has power to control. There appears in this something incongruous, and out of harmony with the usual working of our system. We see no good reason for this exception to usage. The selection of the superintendent by the teachers or the pastor may be judicious, but we think the Quarterly Conference more competent to the task, being composed, for the most part, of men of age and experience. Let us harmonize our system.

Another reason for the suggested change is that the Sunday school teachers, taken as a class, are quite young, (and I fear this state of things will long continue,) and as a consequence are inexperienced and impulsive. Now with such elements there is danger of unpleasant friction and discord. These young people, however excellent, will have their various preferences; they cannot all realize their wishes in the election of their favorite. The defeated party will be apt to feel some chagrin, and may not always accept defeat gracefully. This will be a source of embarrassment to the superintendent in the administration of the school. The election of the superintendent by the Quarterly Conference, upon the nomination of the pastor, would be most always judicious, and would be free from the "unpleasantness" that is likely to result from the present method. A superintendent elected by the Quarterly Conference would come clothed with a prestige and dignity that would command respect and acceptance, and leave no place for partisan or clique influence—consummations devoutly to be wished.

If it should be urged in opposition that it is three months from one Quarterly Conference to another, and that inconvenience might arise by a vacancy, or the organization of a new school, we reply that the pastor might have power to make a temporary appointment, and forty-nine times in fifty such appointments, made after due consultation, would be confirmed by the Quarterly Conference, so that no serious ill consequence would likely arise from the contingency suggested.

We think these reasons sufficient to commend and justify the suggested change.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Aug., 1869.

THE supplementary elections in France have returned, among other eminent candidates disappointed in the first instance, M. Thiers and M. Garnier Pages. Louis Blanc had written a letter recommending the election of Henri Rochefort in preference to Jules Favre; the latter, however, was elected.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: The commencement exercises of this institution for 1869 began on Friday, the 25th of June, and ended on Wednesday, the 30th I did not witness the examination of all the classes. I heard classes examined in arithmetic, algebra, geometry, Latin and natural philosophy. These evinced that they had been thoroughly taught, and that they were familiar with these branches. An examination here is a pretty good test of scholarship. There is no getting a special lesson for the occasion. The pupils are examined thoroughly, one at a time, on a part of each study drawn by lot. And if they understand the part which falls to them I take it as good proof that they are familiar with the whole of it. When a young lady is examined by Mrs. Stuart, she is examined, certain.

Rev. Samuel Armstrong was expected to preach the sermon on Sunday, before the graduating class, but failing to arrive, it was preached by Rev. Mr. Manly, of the Little Rock Conference.

Brother Manly is blind, physically. But judging from several reports of the sermon, he is certainly far from being blind intellectually or spiritually. On Monday and Tuesday evenings concerts were given. I attended the first, and the young ladies showed that they are taught to sing and to perform on the piano at this institution. Madam Michelly is fully competent to teach them these accomplishments, as well as French. The president boasts of his French and music teacher.

On Wednesday, commencement day, we were sadly disappointed in not hearing the annual address to have been delivered by Hon. George Williamson, of Shreveport, who could not be present. But the five graduates entertained well the large audience with their compositions, which displayed sensible thought, clothed in good English, and a cultivated delivery.

The valedictory was delivered by Miss Kate Pipes, daughter of the Rev. John Pipes, of the Louisiana Conference. On listening to this we should have cried had we not been ashamed to be seen shedding tears. The number of pupils for the last session was seventy-six; number in music on piano, twenty-seven; number in vocal music, thirty-one; number studying Latin, twenty; number studying French, fifteen. Health and order good, and the pupils generally studious. Five hundred dollars were expended in repairs, and the buildings and grounds are in good condition. A new and elegant piano has been added to the stock of instruments, and during the next session it is expected to have a chemical and philosophical apparatus provided for the institution.

To all who have daughters to educate we heartily recommend Mansfield Female College. The location, in De Soto parish, Louisiana, is healthful and beautiful. Everything necessary to the health and comfort of young ladies, boarding in the institution, is provided. The president spares no pains nor expense to furnish them. They have fine religious privileges—the ministry of the word and Sabbath school instruction. The president is a minister, and great pains are taken to impress the pupils with religious obligation. We doubt if you can do better than to send your daughters here. Rev. C. B. Stuart appears to have been made for the presidency of a female college. Send your daughters to Mansfield, and have them educated, and you will never regret it.

A CURIOUS discovery lately made by Dr. Sarrazin, a Swiss experimenter, promises to throw some light on the nature of the Aurora Borealis. It is known that pure oxygen under a pressure of only two millimetres or less becomes exceedingly phosphorescent under the influence of electricity. He finds that this is due to the conversion of oxygen into ozone, and that the luminosity ceases if powdered metallic silver be put in the vessel with the gas, while the silver is speedily oxydized. Other gases than oxygen and its compounds do not show this property.

THE OPELIKA HIGH SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: The annual exercises of this institution commenced June 24 and closed June 29. The examination of the classes, which occupied Thursday and Friday, was very creditable to teachers and students, and highly gratifying to patrons and friends. Of course the crowding of the examination of more than a hundred students into two days rendered it impossible for spectators to get even an approximate idea of how much had been accomplished during the session; yet the exercises were sufficient to show the mode of instruction—that it had been the very best—and to prove that Prof. E. D. Pitts and his corps of excellent teachers had not only been faithful in their efforts to educate their pupils, but eminently successful.

On Sunday Dr. Boring, of Atlanta, preached a most excellent sermon on experimental religion, that deserves to be printed—put into a substantial form—and read by everybody. At night a crowded house listened to an eloquent discourse preached by Rev. E. L. Loveless, of Lafayette, Alabama. Monday was devoted to declamation by the young men and boys, in which they acquitted themselves well. At the close we had an address by Colonel I. J. Moses, of Columbus, Georgia. Tuesday we heard very excellent compositions read by the young ladies, and another address by Major Turner, Esq., of Selma. Monday and Tuesday evenings were devoted to exercises usual on commencement occasions, which passed off very pleasantly. All the exercises were interspersed with good music, which showed that this department had also been well attended to.

This school should be more widely known and more fully appreciated abroad than it is. It deserves a large and extensive patronage. Prof. Pitts is a scholar, and possesses in an eminent degree those qualities of mind and heart which make him a first class educator; and he has associated with those who are also competent and well qualified to teach. The curriculum is ample, embracing everything usually taught in our schools or colleges. The discipline is parental.

Opelika is a growing town. It is rapidly approaching the proportions of a city, and it is perfectly accessible to all parts of the country. For health and good water it cannot be surpassed. I think it can be truthfully said that a miasmatic chill or fever has never originated in or about the place. The people are intelligent, and the moral and religious tone of the community is good.

In conclusion, I would say, it would be hard to find advantages and facilities superior to those afforded by this school. The school is no experiment, but a fixed fact. It has been in successful operation about eight years. Its excellency has been fully demonstrated. The Opelika High School is as good as the best.

ANECDOTES OF THE WESLEYS.

Zion's Herald says: Rev. Mr. Wakely has done the church and public excellent service in collecting from many sources a mass of anecdotes concerning the Wesleys, father, mother, sons and grandsons. Every kind of incident, illustrative of this famous family, finds a place here, literary and religious. It is deserving of very general circulation, and will be an immense favorite with Sunday schools, replacing their usual fiction with its bracing illustrations of their piety and tact and talent.

The following are a few of its more novel and important incidents:

SAMUEL WESLEY'S FIRST PARSONAGE. Samuel Wesley, in 1691, was appointed rector of the parish of South Ormsby, with a salary of fifty pounds a year and a parsonage. It was a very mean and uncomfortable abode, but in it he and his youthful wife resided for years, and there five of their children were born, and most of his valuable books were written. Mr. Wesley describes it in cheerful verse as follows:

"In a mean cot, composed of reeds and clay,
Wasting in sighs th' uncomfortable day;
Near where the inhospitable Humber roars,
Devouring by degrees the neighboring shores,
Let earth go where it will, I'll not repine,
Nor can unhappy be, while heaven is mine."

SAMUEL WESLEY AND HIS DYING PARISHIONER.—Samuel Wesley visited one of his parishioners as he was upon his dying bed—a man who had never missed going to church in forty years. "Thomas, where do you think your soul will go?" "Soul! soul!" said Thomas. "Yes, sir," said Mr. Wesley, "do you not know what your soul is?" "Aye, surely," said Thomas; "why, it is a little bone in the back that lives longer than the body." "So much," says John Wesley, who related it on the authority of Dr. Lupton, who had it from his father, "had Thomas learned from hearing sermons, and exceedingly good sermons, for forty years."

SAMUEL WESLEY ON RIDICULE.—There were those in the university who ridiculed John Wesley. He wrote to his father concerning it. He replied in these brave words: "As to the gentlemen candidates you write of, does anybody think the devil is dead, or so much asleep, or that he has no agents left? Surely virtue can afford to be laughed at. The Captain and Master endured something more for us before he entered into glory, and unless we track His steps, in vain do we hope to share that glory with Him."

SUSANNA WESLEY AND HER GRANDCHILDREN.—John Wesley never spoiled a story for the sake of relatives. In his sermon on "Training Children," he says: "In fourscore years I have never met with one woman who knew how to manage grandchildren. My own mother, who governs her children so well, could never govern one grandchild."

JOHN WESLEY'S FIRST EXTEMPORANEOUS SERMON.—Mr. Wesley was at first a reader of sermons, and thought he could preach in no other way. An extemporaneous preacher will always have the advantage over a reader of sermons. Could Whitfield or John Wesley have preached with such power or pathos as mere readers? Mr. Wesley related the following anecdote to Mr. Thomas Letts, of Allhallows church, London. While he was putting on his gown in the vestry he said to him: "It is fifty years, sir, since I first preached in this church. I remember it from a peculiar circumstance that occurred at that time. I came without a sermon, and going up the pulpit stairs I hesitated, and returned into the vestry under much mental confusion and agitation. A woman who was there noticed that I was deeply agitated, and she inquired, 'Pray, sir, what is the matter with you?' I replied, 'I have not brought a sermon with me.' Putting her hand upon my shoulder, she said, 'Is that all? Cannot you trust God for a sermon?' That question had such an effect upon me that I ascended the pulpit and preached extempore, with great freedom to myself and acceptance to the people, and I have never since taken a written sermon into the pulpit."

HOW TO PERPETUATE METHODISM.—In 1783 the Rev. Robert Miller asked Mr. Wesley, "What must be done to keep Methodism alive when you are dead?" Mr. Wesley gave the following answer: "The Methodists must take heed to their doctrine, their experience, their practice and their discipline. If they attend to their doctrines only, they will make the people Antimonians; if to the experimental part of religion only, they will make them enthusiastic; if to the practical part of religion only, they will make them Pharisees; and if they do not attend to their discipline they will be like persons who bestow much pains in cultivating a garden, and put no fence around it to save it from the wild boars of the forest."

WESLEY AND SHAKESPEARE.—Wesley was a great reader of theology, philosophy, poetry, and almost everything else. A gentleman in Dublin presented Mr. Wesley with a fine quarto edition of Shakespeare. When Mr Wesley died it was found that the margin of this volume was filled with critical notes by Mr. Wesley himself. The excellent John Pawson, one of the purest men that ever adorned the church, resided in the parsonage, and had charge of City Road Chapel. He destroyed the book, and many of the writings of Mr. Wesley, because "he judged they were not among the things which tended to edification." Alas for the loss to literature caused by good John Pawson!

ONE of the great enterprises of the world now on the docket is the Mont St. Gothard Railway, which is soon to be commenced. Different nations conspire to open this line between Italy and western Germany. Italy gives £2,500,000, Germany £2,000,000, Switzerland £2,000,000, thus making an aggregate of £6,500,000. The tunnel under the mountain will be about nine and one-fourth miles long, and the engineer who constructs the one under Mount Cenis has offered to do it for £2,400,000.

IDA LEWIS, who at different times has saved the lives of eight men in her boat at Newport Harbor, is but twenty-seven years of age.

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

MR. EDITOR: Much has been said about the presiding eldership of our church. Some are in favor of abolishing the office entirely, others are for modifying it, while others want no change.

"I also will show mine opinion." I am in favor of no change in the office, but would add to it new functions, hence new responsibilities and new honors.

I would make the presiding elders, by virtue of their office, members of the General Conference. I would have them elected, too, to the office by vote of the Annual Conference.

I would do this for several reasons. One is, they are the only class, as such, who are fully prepared to represent the church in all her interests. The station preacher looks at the church from a town or city standpoint, the circuit preacher looks at it from a country standpoint, the professor from an educational standpoint, while the presiding elder views it from all these, and is prepared alike to represent the interests peculiar to each. Her spiritual, financial and educational interests all pass in review before him.

Another reason is, I believe they feel a deeper interest in the church, in all her departments, than any other class. They become familiar with the whole machinery of the church, and because of the part which they are expected to take in all the workings of this machinery they are compelled to study it; and we always become interested in that which is matter of study to us. More than this, they are responsible, in a measure, for the districts over which they preside, and this not only leads them to study, but to pray for all the interests of the church in their districts; and we cannot pray for an object without deep-felt interest for it. Next to the Bishops, they are burdened most with "the care of all the churches." Thus we will have the men who think and pray most for the church as our delegates; and, I might add, the most pious men, for I really think it helps the piety of any man to be presiding elder.

Another reason is, they deserve, more than any other class, the honors of the church, if she has any to bestow. It is a fact, in these days, that they are the servants of the church. They are away from home more, have to do more hard traveling, suffer greater exposures and privations, while they preach as much, besides holding quarterly conferences, love feasts and administering sacraments, and, I may add, get less pay for it, than any other class of preachers. Now, Mr. Editor, I propose making up in honor that which they fail to get in money.

And another reason is, we will get our best and wisest men into this office by this plan. As it is, the presiding eldership is at a discount; at least it is so in the Mobile Conference. But the honor of being a delegate to the General Conference will make the office somewhat attractive. And besides this, you give the boys a chance to elect their own presiding elders, and we will have the grandest set you ever saw—such a body of men as you, Mr. Editor, only meet once in four years. So thinks

ERIN.

THE DRUNKARD.—His wife, a most amiable and respectable woman, was overwhelmed with sorrow at the course he pursued, and she was brought to the verge of the grave. During her illness she was nursed by her mother, who was relieved Saturday night by the husband, who could sleep upon Sunday.

On one occasion, when he was expected to have the care of his sick wife, he came home beastly drunk, and stretched himself upon the floor, to appearances unconscious of all around him. As the hour of midnight approached the invalid urged her mother to retire and seek the rest she so much needed.

"How can I leave you with such a brute as that?" asked the mother, pointing toward the miserable man.

The poor wife raised herself upon her elbow, and, looking her mother reproachfully in the face, cried out, in agonizing tones:—"Oh! mother, he is my dear, dear husband; and never let me hear you speak disrespectfully of him again."

The tender forbearance of the wife touched the man's heart. Was it possible, he asked himself, that he was unworthy to be trusted with her who confided her life to his keeping? He resolved that never again should she be taunted with his being a brute; and she never was.

The next morning he placed his whisky bottle on the mantle, where he could see it morning and night, and disciplined himself to look the subtle enemy unflinchingly in the face. It was a hard ordeal, but he came out of it unscathed. He is now a worthy citizen, a generous friend, and a Christian. Surely he should be regarded as a hero, who not only has conquered King Alcohol, but has conquered himself!

ROMISH SCHOOLS.

We commend the following sensible article from the Advance to certain parents and guardians in the great valley:

No one should complain that Romanists establish numerous schools of various grades. On the contrary, if they cannot conscientiously send their children to the common schools, it is commendable in them to maintain schools of their own. Neither is there reason to censure them for connecting their peculiar religious teaching and worship with secular instruction. Protestants have many academies, seminaries and colleges in which they do the same. Conscientious members of any religious body will scarcely neglect such an important educational influence. Romanists may reasonably provide for their children instruction in Romish dogmas. Nor yet is it to be objected that they impart these same views to other children, who are sent to their schools. It is right to have one system for all the scholars, and it is not to be supposed that those who sincerely believe Romish doctrine, and are teaching in Romish schools, will forbear to seek the conversion of the Protestant pupils.

But we do complain, first, of the fact that, with these things so obvious, Protestant parents foolishly send their children, usually girls, to Romish schools, and thus expose them to proselyting influences. The result is that many are won over to the Romish faith, as might be expected, and as those who conduct the schools undoubtedly intend. The reason for such an exposure of their daughters by Protestant parents varies in different cases. Some think the teaching superior in the convent schools; whereas, with the possible exception of a few accomplishments, the instruction is reported to be far less broad and thorough than in our public or private schools. Other parents care only for the accomplishments just referred to, and follow the fashion of patronizing the convent schools, regardless of the spiritual danger. Yet others are attracted by the cheaper tuition which can be afforded through the employment of "the sisters," as teachers. Still others are impressed by the strict government maintained over the scholars, and think the convent an admirable place for wild girls; and in some cases are ready to think that it might not be a bad idea to have them sobered even by embracing Romanism.

Our second complaint is that convent schools will attract Protestant children under the promise not to interfere with their religion, should violate their engagement. We know of no religious principle that can excuse bad faith. What are the facts? A late number of the New York Evangelist contains an article by Rev. Dr. S. M. Campbell, who tells of the experience of a young lady of his church who attends the convent of the Sacred Heart at Rochester, New York, under such a promise. She says the rules are so contrived as to make it well nigh impossible for her to practice her own religion; that every Sunday a lesson is required out of the Romish Testament: that every day the Protestant girls listen for half an hour to the instructions of a lady on the doctrines of the Catholic Church; that they are compelled to attend the daily and the Sunday chapel service, listening to prayers for souls in purgatory, and moving in procession, bowing and kneeling to images and pictures, a few who decline to do this being severely reprimanded, and that constant impression is thus made upon their minds. Now be it remembered that we do not object to this, nor to ten times as much proselyting effort, when it is avowed by the sisters and understood by all parties. If a Roman Catholic parent shall send a daughter to the South Hadley or the Rockford Seminary, naturally her conversion will be sought to God and to a purer faith; but either no promise will be made not to influence her religious views, or, if made, it will be kept. Let the convent schools frankly say:—"We teach Romish views of religion to all scholars as part of our educational course," and we shall make no complaint of them; only of the silly and unfaithful Protestant parents who send impressible daughters to be wrought upon by such influences.

The Railway System of the World.

The substitution of steam power for that of muscle in land travel and transportation is comparatively a modern idea. It is not yet fifty years old; and its development and growth are mainly the work of the last thirty years. Its results as they stood at the close of 1868 may be seen in the following table:

COUNTRIES.	MILES.	AREA OF SQUARE MILES.	POPULATION.	LENGTH OF MILES.	COST.
North America	4,177,204	7,441,013	69,291,666	44,802	$2,015,264,550
West India Islands	52,528	584,463,937	1,805,528	415	22,819,722
South America	5,979,455		21,040,997	1,424	165,728,862
Europe	3,642,628		281,212,055	56,690	7,598,744,523
Asia	2,578,200		221,250,000	4,711	414,783,994
Africa	533,000		5,450,000	523	54,257,617
Australia	1,578,000		1,925,751	763	77,252,138
Total	19,441,013		584,463,937	109,177	$10,829,751,982

This table shows for the world 109,177 miles of railroads, supplying countries having an area of 19,441,013 square miles, and a population of 584,463,937, and costing $10,829,751,982. Such is the world development of the railway system within the last fifty years.

The railroads of Europe, in length of miles and cost, are more than equal to those of all the rest of the world. The countries in Europe which take the lead of all others are Great Britain (including Scotland and Ireland) and France: the former having 14,247 miles of railroad, costing $2,511,314,435; and the latter having 9,934 miles of railroad, costing $1,576,664,892. The railroads of Prussia are 5,926 miles in length, costing $747,689,346. Those of Russia in Europe are 4,317 miles in length, costing $724,700,274. Those of the Austrian Empire are 4,429 miles in length, costing $327,369,535. The whole of Europe, in its larger and smaller countries, is thoroughly interlaced and bound together by a continuous system of railways. The locomotive facilities thus afforded place the European nations, alike for the purposes of peace and war, in very different relations to each other from those which they held at the commencement of this century.

The railway system in Asia is confined mainly to British India, and is principally the product of English enterprise and capital. It has an aggregate length of 4,092 miles, costing $391,888,791. Turkey in Asia has 143 miles of railroad, Persia 100 miles, Java 102 miles, and the Island of Ceylon 37 miles.

In Africa, Egypt, Algeria, Cape Colony and Natal are the only countries to which railroads have been extended. Their aggregate length is 573 miles, costing $53,937,919.

Australia, under English patronage and influence, has 789 miles of railroad, costing $77,352,138.

North America, chiefly in the United States, stands next to Europe in the railway system. In the cost of railroads Great Britain takes the lead of the world, and the United States comes next; but in the number of miles the United States takes the lead. The railway power in this country has had a marvelous effect upon the American people. It has developed States and cities, especially in the West, with a rapidity having no parallel in any other nation. Though the growth of about thirty years, it is to day one of the strongest bonds of the American Union. It unifies the interests and destinies of the people in one common stride of material progress. It brings the producer and the consumer into easy contact with each other, and acts as a sort of clearing-house for their vast system of exchanges. Looking at the system as presented in this and other countries, one feels no little surprise that so simple a thing as a railroad, so perfectly comprehensible in its principles and feasible in practice, should have waited till the opening of the nineteenth century for realization among men. Why was not the idea fully born a hundred years ago? If it had been, the nations of the earth would have been greatly in advance of what they are to-day. Who can doubt whether the world moves, especially in these modern times?—New York Independent.

Great Meeting of German Protestants at Worms.

It has been no little surprising to me that our leading newspapers, usually so lynx-eyed and sharp scented as regards current intelligence from both sides of the Atlantic, have taken hardly any notice of what was certainly one of the most important and significant events of our days—the mighty gathering of German Protestants which assembled on the 31st ultimo at Worms, for the purpose of making a response worthy of the country of Luther to the presumptuous invitation of Pio Nono to all dissenters to return to the bosom of the Catholic Church. The number, intelligence and respectability of those present made the occasion the most imposing demonstration against the growing usurpations of popery that has been witnessed in our generation. With your permission, I will endeavor to give a succinct account of that great uprising of German evangelical Christianity.

The meeting took place, as already stated, in the old imperial city of Worms, where Luther three hundred and fifty years before had so courageously proclaimed the freedom of conscience to a council of mighty princes and prelates, and where only a year ago a fine monument had been solemnly dedicated to the great reformer in the presence of King William of Prussia and a number of smaller potentates.

The call for it had been issued months before by the foremost lights of liberal Protestantism. Already on May 30 the crowded regular and extra trains gave assurance that it would meet with a most hearty response. But the enormous influx of strangers from all parts of Germany during the night preceding and on the morning of the appointed day exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the originators of the movement. The streets and public squares of the small town became so choked full that circulation was very difficult. The proceedings of the day commenced at ten A. M. with a meeting in the church of the society. Long before that hour the vast edifice was crowded to suffocation, while tens of thousands surged to and fro outside, vainly seeking to gain admittance. The meeting was opened with prayer and choral music, after which Dr. Schroeder, of Worms, addressed some forcible preliminary remarks to the assemblage. Dr. Bluntschli, the celebrated law professor of Heidelberg, in taking the chair, dwelt upon the serious aspect imparted to our times by the encroachments of Rome. He stated that the object of the meeting was not to proclaim hostility to German Catholics as such, with whom they were united by ties of blood and of country; but to the power that sought to produce trouble by interfering with freedom of conscience. The chairman then read a number of letters, addresses and telegrams from different parts of Germany and Austria, expressing sympathy with the meeting. Professor Schenkul, the distinguished theologian of Heidelberg, next moved the formal reply to the apostolic exhortation to the stray sheep to seek salvation in the folds of the Infallible Church. He recalled the historical moment when Luther uttered the bold words, "The human conscience is free!" That this immortal utterance was as yet far from being a universally accepted truism was best proved by the assurance of the Pope in making such a request of German Protestants. The spectres of intolerance and fanaticism had arisen from their graves. The boldness of Rome must be met by an emphatic, decisive protest. When Dr. Eck whilom came to Germany, with the Pope's bull of excommunication against Luther, he was received with derision. Shall we not show a blush of indignation when a similar document is addressed, three centuries later, to the German people?—Popery is still the same; it knows how to adapt itself to changed circumstances; but wherever a government shows a disposition to obey its behests, there it acts just as it did hundreds of years ago. It looks upon the progressive tendencies of our times as a deluge of materialism, from which the ark of Rome can alone save mankind. But, thanks be to God, we are still fully conscious of the priceless good of Protestantism. Our faith has separated piety from superstition, abandoned the morality of convents for the morality of the ardent patriot, the good citizen, the faithful head of the family; returned to the state rightful powers, honor and vitality; rejuvenated society, and warred successfully against feudalism, the consort of clerical tyranny. The speaker next demonstrated from the dogmas of the Syllabus the identicity of Jesuitism and Catholicism as exemplified at Rome. He appealed to Catholics to aid in the efforts against the enemy in their midst, though he would not presume to go so far as to invite them to abandon their faith. But there was a church above all churches — true Christianity, in deeds as well as words—to which he could conscientiously invite them. After concluding his effort with a powerful appeal to the assembly to rise to the momentousness of the occasion, and to protect their own church by abandoning all anti-Protestant ways, he read the following resolutions:

1. We German Protestants, to-day assembled, while recognizing the right of our Catholic fellow-Christians to freedom of religious opinion, fully realize the moral, social and political blessings of the Reformation, and hence feel in conscience bound to protest publicly and solemnly against the invitation, conveyed in the so-called apostolic missive of September 13, 1868, to re-enter upon community with the Catholic Church.

2. Though always ready to unite with our Catholic fellow-Christians on the basis of pure evangelical faith, we protest to-day as energetically as Luther here in Worms and our forefathers at Spiro, three hundred and fifty years ago, against all hierarchical and clerical rule, against all slavery of mind and oppression of conscience, and, more especially against the pernicious dogmas, inimical to civilization, laid down in the Encyclical of December 8, 1866, and in the Syllabus attached thereto.

3. We tender our hands to our Catholic fellow-citizens for an united effort in the promotion of Christian feeling, German ideas, and modern civilization; expecting of them that they will join us in defense of our highest national and spiritual privileges in the struggle against the common enemy of peace, unity and progress.

4. We declare the main cause of the religious differences which we deplore to be hierarchical errors; and, above all, the spirit and action of the order of the Jesuits, which wages a war of life and death upon Protestantism, destroys all spiritual liberty, falsifies modern culture, and now rules supremely in the Roman Catholic Church. And we declare, furthermore, our belief that it is only by repelling the hierarchical presumptions, renewed and ever increasing since 1845, and by a return to true evangelical Christianity and a full recognition of the progressive achievements of the age, that the Christian world can be reunited and universal welfare be assured.

5. Finally, we declare all efforts within the Protestant Church to obtain hierarchical power for the clergy, and to bring about an absolute rule of dogmas, to be contrary to the Protestant spirit, and as bridges leading to Rome. Persuaded that the lukewarmness and indifference of many Protestants afford countenance to the party of reaction in the church, and offer the greatest obstacle in the most powerful German state to national and religious reform, we exhort our fellow-believers to be vigilant and united in vigorous opposition to all tendencies hostile to freedom of mind and conscience.

Pastor Schollenberg, of Mannheim, one of the first pulpit orators of Germany, first spoke to the resolutions. He warned his fellow-Protestants against indifference to the dangers of the hour from too great a confidence in the inherent power of the spirit of Protestantism. In the last century Germany had witnessed a magnificent growth of free thought; but the long reaction that followed succeeded in destroying the splendid fruits of that period to a considerable extent. Baron von Holzendorff, the famous professor at the University of Berlin, brought greetings from the Protestants of the Prussian capital.—He said, though there was less pronounced sympathy with the vindication of Protestantism in northern Germany, this was due more to the absence of the local irritation produced by the Ultramontane agitation in the south than to a decline of the spirit of the Reformation. He was for peace; but he was ready for war against Rome whenever it became necessary. The sharpest reply to the Pope's missive would not be too sharp for him. We ought to invite Pius IX to come here and learn from the monument of the great reformer that he was a better Christian than any of the so-called successors to St. Peter. Other speakers advocated the resolutions in equally fervid speeches and protests against the Pope's presumption. The chairman then put the resolutions to a vote. They were adopted by a general uplifting of hands, amidst the most profound silence. It was a most solemn scene, as the assembled thousands thus pledged their fidelity to the faith of their forefathers.

The vote having been taken, the next question which the meeting was to consider in pursuance of the call was brought up for discussion. It related to the efforts, pursued for years, of enlightened Protestant leaders, among the laity as well as the clergy, to emancipate the church from the control of the state and a reactionary hierarchy, and to reconstruct it on the basis of the independence of each Protestant community. A declaration of principles in this sense was adopted, after an interesting discussion, in which prominent laymen and clergymen took part. Then followed the closing and most impressive act of the day. The great in-door meeting adjourned, according to the programme, to the market square, from the centre of which rises the Luther Monument, where the thousands that had been unable to get into the church had already assembled.—The wide square was soon closely packed with a dense mass of humanity, variously estimated at from twenty to thirty thousand. Order being established, Prof. Bluntschli ascended the steps of the monument, and, after some introductory words, read aloud the resolutions adopted in the church. The vast multitude listened with solemn stillness. After the reading, the immense congregation joined in singing Luther's immortal "A firm stronghold is our God." Thousands were moved to tears by the impressiveness of the scene.

Such is, in brief, the history of a day which, as Prof. Blantschli said, in proposing three cheers for "religious liberty," before declaring the meeting adjourned sine die after the singing, will "long live in the heart of the German people." The meeting produced a deep impression throughout the fatherland, and will no doubt prove a serious check to the machinations of the partisans of Romanism.—Correspondent of New York Independent.

HOUSEKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

OCEAN CAKE.—To one cup of milk add two cups of powdered sugar; one half cup of butter; the whites of five eggs, well beaten; three cups of flour; two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, and one of soda.—Flavor to your taste.

APPLE CUSTARD PIE.—The Nicest Pie ever Eaten.—This recipe is hardly in season, but our readers can keep it for reference when needed. Peel sour apples and stew until soft and not much water left in them; then rub them through a cullender; beat three eggs for each pie to be baked, and put in at the rate of one cup of butter and one of sugar for three pies; season with nutmeg. One egg for each pie will do very well, but the amount of sugar must be governed somewhat by the acidity of the apples. Bake as pumpkin pies, which they resemble in appearance. Dried apples are very nice by making them a little more juicy. You can frost them, and return them to the oven for a few moments, which will improve their appearance.

ICE CREAM.—We give the following as an excellent recipe for making ice cream: Fresh cream one-half gallon; rich milk one-half gallon; white sugar one pound. Dissolve the sugar in the mixture, flavor with extract to suit your taste, or take the peel from a fresh lemon and steep one-half of it in as little water as you can, and add this—it makes the lemon flavor better than the extract—and no flavor will so universally please as the lemon: keep the same proportion for any amount desired. The juice of strawberries or raspberries gives a beautiful color and flavor to ice creams; or about one-half ounce of essence or extracts to a gallon. Have your ice well broken; one quart of salt to a pail of ice. About half an hour's constant stirring and occasional scraping down and beating together, will freeze it. The old-fashioned freezer will make very smooth and nice ice cream.

Changes in the Times of Holding the Mississippi and La. Conferences.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 8, 1869.

REV. J. C. KEENER, D. D.—Dear Brother: For reasons appearing, and upon consultation with brethren upon the interests of the church involved, the following changes have been made:

The Mississippi Conference will meet December 8, instead of December 1. The Louisiana Conference will meet January 12, 1870, instead of December 15, 1869.

Yours truly,

H. N. MCTYEIRE.

"AN UNPROFITABLE SERVANT."

A brother who has already secured us many subscribers sends three more with the money, and adds: "Unless I get subscribers to the amount of $100 I shall feel that I am 'an unprofitable servant,' and still in debt to the ADVOCATE for services rendered."

There are two sorts of unprofitable servants: those who are really so, having done nothing; and those who, having done their whole duty, still take no credit to themselves. The brother belongs to the latter class, and we wish the world was full of such servants of Christ. "Do the full work of an evangelist" means something more than merely doing work? To do "all the work of a Methodist preacher" is the expectation of the Discipline, and the promise of the licentiate. A conscience for attending to the detail of a preacher's duty increases with a growth in grace, and is needed now in our church fully as much as any other improvement.

"THUGS" THAT ARE THUGS!

The principal defense set up by the Catholic Star for the Rev. J. Moynihan's attempt to choke the Calvinism out of a parcel of Protestant Sunday school children in this city consists of abuse. We come in for a full share. It says:

"The editor of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE would fain be an artist. * * * The opportunities he has had of observing the workings of human passions would have enabled a more skillful hand to have wrought a presentment of fearful interest. For instance, in his affiliation with thuggery in New Orleans, had he not before him the aspects of the horde of demoniac ruffians who made murder a profitable trade for six years?"

This "murderous trade," we are then informed, is Know Nothingism. How far that order resembled the worshipers of the Hindoo goddess of destruction we have no way of knowing, never having been in the secrets of either the one or the other. But it occurs to us that the achievements of the Romish Church in the destruction of human life at that festival of blood in 1572, on St. Bartholemew, or by the Inquisitors of St. Dominic, or by that son of the church, Philip the Second, in the Lowlands, may be compared with any of the performances of the Thugs of India in the service of their goddess Kali.

The massacre in Paris commenced on Sunday, the 24th of August, 1572, between three and four o'clock in the morning, and continued violently three days in the city, and during three months in France. In it twenty thousand human beings were killed because they were Huguenots. Writing in the midst of the carnage, not later than noon of the 24th, the nuncio Salviati says: "The whole city is in arms; the houses of the Huguenots have been forced with great loss of lives. In order that matters may not go too far a proclamation has just been issued, declaring that there shall be three hours in the day during which it shall be unlawful to rob and kill. You can see nothing in the street but white crosses in the hats and caps of every one you meet, which has a fine effect!" The living, tied hand and foot, were thrown off the bridges. One man, probably a rag-gatherer, brought two little children in his creel and tossed them into the water as if they had been kittens. An infant played with the beard and smiled in the face of the man who carried him; but the innocent caress exasperated the ruffian, who stabbed the child, and with an oath threw it into the Seine. The streets were encumbered with heaps of naked, bleeding corpses. Two hundred of the best blood of France lay a ghastly pile beneath the windows of the palace. It was a beautiful August morning. Charles Ninth said: "The weather seemed to rejoice in the slaughter of the Huguenots." In the very height of the massacre the rumor of a miracle revived the flagging zeal of the Catholics. In the cemetery of the Innocents there stood a small chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and in front of it a white thorn bush, which for four years had shown neither leaf nor flower. All of a sudden, on the morning of the massacre, it became covered with beautiful white blossoms, filling the air with their delicious perfume. It continued to bloom for a fortnight. The King and his court proceeded there in long procession. Sick persons were healed by merely looking at it. The crowd believed it to be "a sign of God's approval of the Catholic uprising and the Admiral's death." All the city marched out to see it, killing the Huguenots they found in the road.

When the news of the massacre reached Rome the exultation among the clergy knew no bounds. The Cardinal of Lorraine rewarded the messenger with a thousand crowns, the bells rang a joyous peal, the cannon of Saint Angelo thundered, and Gregory Thirteenth, attended by the cardinals and other dignitaries, went in procession to the church of St. Louis, where the Cardinal of Lorraine chanted a Te Deum. Shortly afterward the same infallible Pope sent Charles the golden rose. If the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ could look complacently upon such worshipers, then indeed would Christianity be but a slight remove from the service of the Hindoo goddess, and there would be but little difference between the odor of the sacred sugar of the Thug and the incense of a Romish priest.

But we come to a much more systematic mode of murder—one which has not the apology of a momentary frenzy, but was invented, perfected and continued from the year 1481 to that of 1746; which was adopted as the engine of the Roman Church for two hundred and fifty years, and before which all the murders of all the straggling bands of the devotees of Kali, since India was, are only as a boy killing birds. The Spanish Inquisition was devised first for the benefit of Moors and Jews, but the Dominican Torquemada turned this machine of blood and fire full against the heretics of Christendom; and from that hour it was almost exclusively in the hands of that "holy" band of brothers. In the eighteen years of Torquemada's administration ten thousand two hundred and twenty individuals were burned alive, ninety-seven thousand three hundred and twenty-one punished with infamy, confiscation of property or perpetual imprisonment. The total number of families destroyed by this one friar alone amounted to one hundred and fourteen thousand four hundred and one. This "holy" office, in course of time, taught the savages of India and America to shudder at the mention of its name. A bench of monks without appeal, having its detectives in every house, it judged and executed its decrees without responsibility. It condemned not deeds, but thoughts. The rack was the court of justice. It arrested on suspicion, tortured till confession, and then punished by fire. The only advocate of the prisoner was his fortitude. The torture took place at midnight, in a gloomy dungeon, dimly lighted. The victim, whether man, matron or tender virgin, was stripped naked, and all the apparatus of water, weights, fire, pulleys and screws, by which sinews could be strained, bones crushed and the body racked, was put in operation. The executioner, enveloped in a black robe, with his eyes glaring at his victim through holes cut in the hood which muffled his face, practiced successively all the forms of torture which the ingenuity of the monks had invented. This holy office invaded the prince in his palace and the beggar in his shroud.—Philip the Second said it was a "heavenly remedy," "a lion's den in which just men could sustain no injury, but in which perverse sinners were torn to pieces." There can be but one opinion now of Torquemada and his priest fiends; but one of a priesthood which claims to be unchangeable, yet with hands dripping with blood attempts to stand between God and man; that they are not truly the ministers of Christ, but the thugs of Christendom.

BOVINA.—HELP!

Our irrepressible brother, J. J. Clark, is hard at it again—church-building. The friends on Warren Circuit, Mississippi Conference, suffered severely by the war in the loss of several churches. They are now getting in heart, and are about to lay some of the first fruits of returning prosperity on the altar of God, by building a house to His name. May they devise liberal things! "The soul of the liberal shall be made fat." The Lord loveth a cheerful and large giver. As they give to them it shall be given. We bespeak for the committee appointed and the preacher a cheerful and generous response.

UNIONTOWN, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—A letter from the Rev. T. F. Mangrove, who is now aiding the stationed preacher at Uniontown, informs us that the revival there still progresses and increases in interest. Twenty-two have already joined the church. May the whole "canebrake" catch on fire!

THE truest proof of a man's religion is the quality of his companions.

THE FIRST FRUITS.

The law of the first fruits made no heavy demand, and exacted no burdensome tribute, but it was a most expressive recognition of the principles of religious giving. The first-born son belonged to God, and must be redeemed for a stated sum. The firstlings of the flock and herd are redeemed, exchanged or sacrificed. The harvest could not proceed until the first sheaf was waved before the Lord; and the first measures of the garnered corn were carried to the temple. The housewife devoted the first of the dough, or the first cake, as a heave-offering. All the products of the field and of the orchard were subject to this law. For the first three years no fruit could be gathered for use from any fruit tree; and the entire fruit of the fourth year was devoted to God. The first cluster of the vine, and the first apples, figs, olives, apricots and dates were gathered and brought to the temple, or otherwise set apart.

Thus year by year God was acknowledged as the giver of all, and every product, in its season, proclaimed the same lessons of dependence and gratitude. In the law of the first fruits the quantity of the gift seems not in general to have been prescribed. In the matter of tithes the exact amount is stated, but in the demand of the first fruits no specific proportion is made obligatory. In this respect there is an obvious resemblance to the rule of giving under the Christian dispensation. The demand of the first fruits covered all; and submission to it conceded the divine proprietorship in all. It was, therefore, more comprehensive in principle than the law of tithes, where a tenth or a fifth was exacted. It was, indeed, the expression and recognition of that entire consecration which the Gospel requires.

We have in it clearly the idea of quality. The first fruits were likely to be better than the last gleanings of the harvest, or the last results of the vintage. The wheat was then heaviest, the vine and the tree were then in their best heart, and yielding the rarest and juciest of their tempting treasures. For such fruits the market price would be higher, the money value consequently greater, and the appetite or necessities of the husbandman would whet desire and tempt to fraud. The time of rendering these fruits was a most important item. Not a reap-hook must touch the waving fields until the first sheaf is presented before the Lord; not a cluster of grapes could be pressed, nor an olive gathered until God's portion was duly set apart. The first fruits are the most certain, and, therefore, the strong temptation to appropriate them to ourselves.—What storms may come, what causes of blight, we cannot tell. How reasonable that the first of the harvest should be devoted to our necessities, to our debts, and that God's claims should wait? God then is to receive of us the best in quality, and His claims are to be met first in order of time.

As to quantity the divine proprietorship is absolute in all, and is declared in the law of the first fruits. The law is thus "our schoolmaster" to bring us to the duty and grace of Christian giving. God is to be honored "with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase." The first fruits proclaimed a sanctified harvest, and were the earnest and expression of that "living sacrifice" which covers and comprehends the gifts of providence. The grace of giving is no unimportant branch of the kingdom of God and His righteousness; and in this, as in every other respect, it is to be sought first.

The law of the first fruits is more emphatic and comprehensive, because the quantity is given in principle rather than in figures. The Gospel tells us how much in the same way. "As God hath prospered him," and, "according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver." But how much? The measure is in the depths of our consecration. "Ye are not your own." How much then of our substance belongs to God? Can we conceive St. Paul or any other man asking such a question, while in the same breath he exclaims: "For the love of Christ constraineth us!" The Jew may have required the precise sum, because of the hardness of his heart and the darkness of the dispensation; but of what use would this be to a Christian who professes to lay all upon the altar, and to be wholly the Lord's?

Last week we recorded the arrival of the first bale of cotton, and this week the second has been received. All the papers contained the items, but God was not mentioned; and neither of those bales was shipped to any missionary society. Who is now waiting to send the earnest of his harvest to God's temple? Whose first bale, or hogs head, or other measure of value will be forwarded to be sold on the Lord's account? It is with misgivings, even with fear and trembling, that we hear of the prospective harvest. Will God be honored with the first fruits of all our increase, even among those who profess to honor His name? If not, it were better for us that blight, mildew and the worm should come. Far better that the locust should devour than that God's mercies should be perverted to feed our avarice, selfishness and lusts. The sin of withholding the first fruits is of such a heinous character that it may well excite the most painful apprehension. It is sufficient to bring the heaviest judgments upon us.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

If our observation is not greatly at fault, much additional interest in the religious training of the children of the church has been awakened by the Sunday school conventions which have been held during the past year. This is not confined to our own branch of Protestant Christianity, though we now speak more especially of the effect of this new element upon our people and preachers. Both have been greatly quickened in their zeal for bringing children to Christ. As an instrumentality for advancing the kingdom of the Saviour the Sunday school is beginning to be regarded as capable of becoming most effective. It would seem strange that anything remained, in this age of the world, to be either taught or learned by the church as to the importance of early training in the knowledge and ways of godliness. From the days of Moses until Christ there was to be seen upon the record the plain law of a Christian education: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

But upon one point in this great work there is yet much to be discovered—i. e., how to train them in that "way." The world and the church would yet seem to be out upon the wide sea of experiment. How can children be brought to the Saviour? How can our youth be held to the altars of their fathers' God? What new skill can be acquired, what new influence added, what new methods employed for securing so great an end? The region for discovery in this science we believe to be mainly in the teachings and example of Christ. His exalted estimate of little children, His power with them, the place He assigns them in His system, and the use which He made of their lispings, present a field for profound study and analysis to every one who seeks to advance the glory of God and the salvation of our race.

We give below a most excellent article upon the art of training children, which we find in the New York Independent. It will abundantly repay perusal.

In all biblical instruction are two fixed elements—the human mind and the truth to be taught. A man may blunder in teaching, but he wields the very word which to Paul was the sword of the Spirit. And, diverse as are the minds of men, essentially the same avenues lead into each—they are to be approached in substantially the same method.

We are not, then, to apprehend the study of child mind as calling for a new classification of faculties, but the recognition of a stage of development—mind in its immaturity.

What we wish to accomplish is, by God's blessing, so to present His truth that the thought of the child may be full of the thought of God; its heart be kind, loving, benevolent, as the heart of God; its will be found on the side of God and the right, in submission to divine authority. The secret of success in any teacher in any school will be found to consist in this, that instruction and method were adapted to the age of childhood.

We start with the general question as to the nature of mind. Is it of such sort that you can treat it to truth as a cask to water? If so, just pour it in; cram down the texts, Westminster Catechism and all; memorize the whole New Testament. You have given them sound doctrine and the full measure of your time! But suppose this is but a caricature of minds?—that what you thought you were pouring in only sputtered in the funnel and ran down the sides? Verily this is one of the grandest of mistakes, to take cramming for teaching. The mind is a living organism. Education is a life process. And there is an analogy between all life processes. The bulb is not only wrought upon, but it recognizes that action and takes it up into itself; starts, also, an independent life of its own; puts forth the blade-shoots of the flowering stalk crowned with glory and flanked with living green. Truth is the element which God, the author of mind, would have it lay hold of, feed upon and apprehend in its meaning, use and relations.

Feeding a thresher, you must begin to crowd too soon and keep the motion low. You may put the bundle butt foremost, or thrust it solid, to marked disadvantage; you may so distribute and present the grain that it will do beautiful execution. The man who feeds a second to that sharp pronged cylinder, and his business is to serve! So with the teacher, and his bundle of truth and facts. Let him remember he is second to "the teacher inside the skin;" and, if he would win, let him serve. Then will the mind lay hold of truth and grow thereby.

Look next at a child as a creature of thought, feeling and will. Our analysis must, of course, be very general.

1. The child as a creature of thought.

The characteristics are: lack of discipline, inattention, a slender vocabulary, indifferent to abstract statements of truth. It grows out of this immaturity and lack of discipline; that attention must be won, held by variety in unity, and led by clear, simple, logical steps, in good plain vernacular, to the conclusion you would have accepted and fixed. As to method—consider that the child lives in the world of men and things. Its thought must take shape before its eyes. Instruction must come largely through the senses and by means of familiar illustrations. Hence it is that Bunyan has real fascination for children of six years, when sins are giants, and states of mind are castles, and the Devil himself is out with cloven foot, and the Christian life is a real warfare, and death the crossing of a river! This strange fascination of the story only crowds the moral up into view, and thought is quickened and led.

2. The child as a creature of feeling.

A child has been termed "a bundle of feelings." We have to notice that the sensibilities lie on the surface, that waves of feeling follow each other rapidly, so that only such things as make a deep impression abide and become potential in forming character; that the child is a creature of affection, responding readily to love, and that the period of youth is changing all this to reserve, and, may be, to deadened sensibility. It follows that this is the teacher's vantage-ground and now his time—that through affection the child must be held and swayed—yea, led to the Christ he loves.

And as to method, if impressions are to be lasting, the truth must not stand alone, but be held up by something which interests a child—linked with something in the world of nature or of life, and by incident moved to aversion toward the wrong and admiration toward the good.

3. This same child is a creature of conscience and of will. The victory is not won, the turning point of conversion is not reached, till the will of the child is yielded in love to the authority of Christ. To secure this the mind has been enlightened, the feelings have been enlisted, the sense of right and wrong has been appealed to, and all the powers of affection employed.

The grand characteristic and advantage is this: that the will of the child is not fortified by years of habit, and the conscience is not seared by continuance in sin. And, if converted, you have still the will of a child and a type of piety peculiar to itself, needing patient culture and loving care, appeals to the affection and conscience, enforced by examples drawn from the Bible and real life.

In all this we do not ignore the work of the Holy Spirit, but seek such adaptation of means to ends as will most likely secure His blessing, being in accordance with the laws of mind, which are of God, and seeking to honor His truth by so presenting it that it may be laid hold of and appropriated.

The highest indorsement of this method is found in the very structure of the Book of books. How large a space is given to history and biography, to parables and proverbs! We are made to see in real life the virtue we should cultivate, the vice we should shun.

Then, too, consider the method of God with the childhood of the race. What is the whole ceremonial economy but a grand object lesson, teaching through sensible forms the great moral lessons of both dispensations? And what the descriptions of heaven which the Revelator gives us, but an attempt by glowing material symbols to lead us up to some thought of the final home of the saints?

The childhood of the individual answers to the childhood of the race. Richter has well said, "Children are little orientals!" And the inference is, we must educate them religiously through the senses to an intelligent, loving and willing appreciation of the truth and salvation of Jesus Christ.

Such instruction, given in a loving, earnest and prayerful spirit, may reasonably hope for the divine blessing; for it recognizes the laws of mind which are God-given—uses the truth which is divinely inspired—in prayer, and faith, and love, which are scripturally enjoined.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

FAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A book for boys. By H. R. Fox Bourne, author of "English Merchants," etc. With twenty-five illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Small 12mo, pp. 279.

A collection of short biographies of the most notable merchants of London, from Richard Whittington (1360) to George Peabody (1860). The small beginnings of these princes of material power, the turns of fortune by which they surpassed all competitors, and the guiding principles which controlled them in the pursuit of wealth, are set forth with much collateral information in regard to the financial history of London, the great theatre of their action. It is a good summary for boys who are thinking forward to the time when they will be merchants. For sale by George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

RHETORIC. A text book, designed for schools and colleges, and for private study. By Rev. E. O. Haven, D. D., LL.D., president of the University of Michigan. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 12mo, pp. 380.

A number of sprightly lectures, printed and bound together. The author made good use of the laws of suggestion in getting them up. The names of all the great ones of New England are quoted, and scraps from orations, poems, etc., of, from and about Plymouth Rock, and "our folks" generally, make up the staple of the book. No new principles are evolved, no new methods or help to the great art of speaking or writing. There seems to have been no special call for the book any more than for a dish of hash, only it is served up in case any one wants it. For sale by George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

We have received from A. Eyrich, 130 Canal street:

CYPHER. A romance. By Jane G. Austin. New York: Sheldon & Co. 1869. Pamphlet octavo.

A tub to negro worshipers.

We have received from Rev. R. J. Harp, agent Southern Publishing House, 112 Camp street, the following works, which we will notice hereafter:

THE LIFE OF TRUST. By George Muller.

THE PRINCE OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

THE PILLAR OF FIRE.

THE THRONE OF DAVID. All three by the same author, the Rev. J. H. Ingraham, LL.D.

From J. A. Gresham, No. 92 Camp street, we have A COMPANION FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS. Published by Claxton, Remsen & Co., Philadelphia.

An exhortation for the encouragement of teachers; pp. 34, 24mo; neatly printed and bound. 1869.

THE SON OF MAN. Discourses on the Humanity of Jesus Christ. By Frank Coulin, D. D., minister of the National church of Geneva. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger. 12mo. 1869.

This is another valuable contribution to the realization of the One Personage of all time—Jesus Christ. The translator may be charged either with deficiency in language, or with carelessness in its use; still the ideas of the author lie in a plane familiar to Bible readers, and, therefore, they are readily ascertained.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

CAMP MEETING ON PEACH TREE CIRCUIT.

A letter from Dr. A. H. Mitchell says: "There will be a camp meeting held on the Peach Tree Circuit, Demopolis District, Mobile Conference, commencing on the 7th of October. We are having a very interesting meeting at this time in Uniontown. When I left them fifteen had joined, and the meeting is still in progress."

JASPER CIRCUIT, MOBILE CONFERENCE.

JASPER, ALA., July, 1869.

MR EDITOR: We are having some good times on this work. Congregations are generally large and attentive. We have several Sunday schools doing well, with a growing interest in this important subject. We commenced a meeting at Jasper, on Friday night before the fourth Sunday in June, which lasted six days, resulting in some eight conversions and six additions to the church. The membership was also greatly revived. We were aided by our presiding elder and Brother F. A. Gamble, who did us good service.

Our third Quarterly Meeting embraced the fourth Sunday in July, at Antioch, which was protracted five days, with good results. The Lord was with us in saving power. The church was graciously revived, many backsliders were reclaimed, quite a number converted, and fifteen added to the church. We are indebted to Brother Gamble again for faithful service.

I trust these are but the drops that precede the coming shower which shall water and replenish every thirsty soul in all this land. For this we still labor and pray.

OBITUARIES.

Miss ANN GERONE KING was born in Yazoo county, Mississippi, July 5, 1847, and died in the same county April 23, 1869.

She had by her amiable qualities won the esteem of the old and the young. All spoke in her praise. A short time previous to her death, by the bed of her sick father, she evinced the greatest affection for him by her constant presence and unremitting attention. How little did those who saw the two—the father, to all appearance, in a dying condition; the daughter, with the bloom of health upon her cheek, and nothing to indicate an early demise—think that the king of terrors would claim the latter before the former. But such was the case.

The subject of this obituary notice was a member of the Methodist Church and a professor of religion. She attended with delight the services of the sanctuary.

After her conversion she, like too many of our young members, was persuaded to join in the dance; but at the request of her aunt the minister who was in charge of this circuit (Yazoo,) in 1867, mildly spoke to her concerning the impropriety of dancing. She expressed her regret, and promised that she would no more participate. This promise she kept, in spite of the urgent protestations of her youthful associates to the contrary. Before her last illness, in conversation with her aunt, she told me that she thought her niece was a Christian.

She was sick but a short time, and although she left no verbal evidence with regard to her future prospects, we indulge the fond hope that she inhabits the glorious abode where her mother has been for many years, and pray that it may be the habitation of her father, brother and other relatives who mourn.

A. B. STEWART.

IN MEMORIAM.

I have just returned to my work, after an absence of six weeks in attending the last illness, death and burial of an affectionate mother. I feel that a tribute of respect, in the form of an obituary, is due to one whose precious memory is sacredly embalmed in my heart's best affections.

The subject of this notice, CATHARINE HOOD, was the second daughter of William and Violet Smith, respected citizens of York district, South Carolina, where she was born in September, 1812. She died of chronic ulceration of the stomach, in Jefferson county, Alabama, on the night of the 11th of July, 1869, being in the fifty-seventh year of her age. My mother, at the age of about fifteen, made an experimental profession of the Christian religion, and joined the Presbyterian Church. Soon after her marriage to my father she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to which she held inviolate a pious and consistent membership through life. She was emphatically a daughter of affliction, having inherited a very delicate and frail constitution. She suffered much and long from many of the diseases which are rife in the land, some of which, in her case, became chronic and peculiar in their character, so as to baffle the skill of the scientific physician. For eighteen months before my mother's death she was confined to her bed, with some intermissions of improvement, especially during last winter. About twelve months ago I was called home to witness her last moments; but after spending four weeks with her I left her improving, and she partially recovered during the winter. Last March the disease appeared in a more virulent form, and advanced slowly but steadily until the lamp of life ceased to burn. She bore her afflictions with patience and Christian fortitude. She desired death, not only as a release from suffering, but that she might enjoy the home and society of the blessed. Her faith was strong, her hopes buoyant and her prospects bright, which often led her, during her sickness, to rejoice and give glory to God. She told me that she had "no fears as to the consequences of death." She said to the attending minister, a few hours before her death, that her "prospects were bright for heaven." Thus passed away to the saint's everlasting rest a kind and devoted mother, a generous neighbor and a pious Christian.

Sweet be thy rest, dear mother! "Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for the Lord is thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning are ended."

ALEX. HOOD.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE HEAVENLY BRIDEGROOM.

For many a year and many a day
The Saviour came my heart to win;
But I had given my heart away,
And only thought of serving sin.
I saw Him come and go unmoved,
And never dreamed how much He loved.

But time flowed on, and all things changed
That touch the heart or touch the brain,
And far and wide my spirit ranged
Amid the fugitive and vain,
Until in anguish she had proved
That world was false which she had loved.

And thus my cloud-land died away,
But gave to view those upper skies
Which it had screened with tintings gay:
For when I turned my sorrowing eyes
I saw Him standing, through my tears,
The same as He had stood for years.

Ah, why did I not sooner know
The depth and sweetness of His grace!
And why so long neglectful go
To look upon another face?
But now my soul His goodness proves,
And now I know how much He loves.

And yet I know not all His love,
But only now commence to know;
For in the clearer day above
This knowledge will forever grow,
And I ... —Lays of a Heart.

THE KINDEST SHEPHERD CARE.

FOR THE YOUNG.

Rambling a few summers ago in the lake district of England I came to Washdale Head, where I passed the night at the cottage of a shepherd friend. The next morning I set off to cross the mountains on my way to Buttermere. As I approached the summit of the pass a little lamb was bleating in tones more sad than I had ever heard before. It seemed to say, as plain as in words, 'Pity me! help me! save me!' I stopped, and the lamb ran toward me! It was evident that the lamb had been forsaken by its mother, for it was a mere skeleton, and its loosely hanging skin and sharp features betokened starvation. I could not resist its appeals, so took it in my arms and carried it toward a sheep that was browsing not far off. But the sheep moved away, and the tiny lamb ran back to me, still imploring help. Again I took it in my arms, and carrying it toward another sheep farther off, put it down where some bracken would hide it from me as I rapidly stepped back. The lamb did not go toward the retreating sheep, but remained where it had been placed, and still repeated its sad cry, 'Pity me! help me! save me!'

I took it in my arms once more, and sat down meditating what I had better do. Should I carry it forward with me till I reached the first house, several miles distant? But might not such an act seem suspicious if I met the owner of the flock? At any rate, I would not, I could not, leave to perish a helpless creature which had cast itself on my protection. Just then, looking listlessly down into the valley, I saw a small object at the foot of the mountain moving upward. It came nearer. It was a man. Still nearer. It was my shepherd friend. I at once showed him my lamb, and intrusted it to his care.

'Poor thing!' said the shepherd; 'its mother has forsaken it; they sometimes do when pasture is scarce. It would have died in an hour or two. But I'll take it down and give it some milk, and it will soon get right.'

Then the shepherd took in his arms the little trembling lamb, which at once nestled its head in his bosom, and hushed its pitiful cry. And as this great, strong, tender-hearted man stalked down the mountain side like a giant bearing his tiny burden, I thought of the words of the prophet: 'He shall feed his flock like a shepherd. He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom.' (Isa. xl. 2.)

I thus reflected: If a degenerate creature, sinful and selfish as all are in their degree, had pity enough in him not to suffer a worthless, half starved lamb to perish which cast itself on his care, will He who is the author and fountain of all tenderness be deaf to the cry of any wandering soul that comes to Him in fear and sorrow, saying, 'Lord, have mercy upon me! Save, Lord, or I perish!' Will the good Shepherd, who giveth His life for the flock, reject any feeble lamb, any lost sheep that comes to Him with the cry, 'Jesus, pity me! help me! save me!' He never will. He never can.

The next year I was again at Washdale, and inquired of the shepherd how the lamb had fared. Said he, 'It is now the fattest and the strongest of my flock.'

Thus many, even the very chief of sinners, when ready to perish, have been taken into the arms of Jesus, and under His fostering care have soon become as holy and useful as any of the flock.—Rev. Newman Hall, D. D.

FLOATING DOWN NIAGARA.

Two or three miles above the falls of Niagara, an Indian canoe was one day observed floating quietly along, with its paddle upon its side. At first it was supposed to be empty; no one could imagine that a man would expose himself to such well known and imminent danger. But a turn in the current soon gave the travelers a sight of an Indian lying idly asleep at the bottom. They were shocked, and called aloud; but he did not hear; they shouted in an agony of pity and alarm; but he was deaf to their saving cry.

It chanced that the current, which was now hurrying along with increased speed as it neared the fatal precipice, drove the little boat against a point of rock with such violence that it was whirled round and round several times.

"He's safe! he's safe!" cried the spectators joyfully; "the man is safe; that shock must wake him."

But alas! no. Fatigue or drunkenness (to which savages are particularly addicted) had so oppressed his senses that it seemed more like death than sleep that held him ... all hope was gone; and they hurried along the bank in horror to see the end. It soon came; for the torrent was now rolling so rapidly that they could scarcely keep pace with the moving boat. At length the roar of the water, which had been hitherto almost muffled within the high banks below, was borne toward them by a sudden change of the wind with double loudness. This dreadful noise, with which the Indian's ear was familiar, did at last arouse him. He was seen to start up and snatch his paddle. But it was too late. The dunning sound, which had roused him from sleep, told him at the same time that it was in vain now to strive for safety by rowing.

Nor, indeed, had he time to try. Upright as he stood he was carried over the awful precipice; and the boat and its occupant were seen no more.

Floating asleep down Niagara! Was this after all so sad a sight as that of a sinner floating asleep down the stream of time that is bearing him to eternal woe? "Awake, thou that sleepest," is the call of divine mercy. There is time to escape, if a man will but awake. "Turn ye, turn ye; for why will ye die?" are other words of the same compassionate God. There is time still to turn from sin to God. Almost too late indeed, but not too late yet, as long as a man is in this world where Jesus died, and where His blood is crying for pardon and life to every returning soul.—Good News.

THE BROKEN BUCKLE.—You have read in history of that hero who, when an overwhelming force was in pursuit, and his followers were urging him to a more rapid flight, coolly dismounted to repair a flaw in his horse's harness. While busied with the broken buckle the distant cloud swept down in nearer thunder; but just as the prancing hoofs and eager spears were ready to dash upon him the flaw was mended, and like a swooping falcon he had vanished from their view. The broken buckle would have left him on the field a dismounted and inglorious prisoner; the timely delay sent him in safety back to his bustling comrades.

There is in daily life the same luckless precipitancy, and the same profitable delay. The man who, from his prayerless awakening, bounces into the business of the day, however good his talents and great his diligence, is only galloping upon a steed harnessed with a broken buckle, and must not marvel if, in his hottest haste, or most hazardous leap, he be left ingloriously in the dust; and though it may occasion some little delay beforehand, his neighbor is wiser who sets all in order before the march begins.—Rev. J. Hamilton.

MR. JAS. CASSELLS was some time ago convicted of preaching Protestantism in Oporto, Portugal, and sentenced to six years' banishment. A new trial on appeal took place June 22, resulting in his acquittal and liberation—thus, at last, conceding religious freedom. At least twenty men are now selling Bibles in Portugal. In Lisbon an Episcopal church has one hundred members and a Scottish church twenty. A Portuguese lately died in Madeira, on his return from Illinois. The priest forbade his burial in consecrated ground, as he was a Calviuist; but the civil authorities overruled him, and ordered the burial in the cemetery.

MANTEROLA, a Spanish priest and member of the Cortes, in a speech in opposition to religious liberty, made the astonishing statement that the prosperity of the United States was due not to its freedom of worship, but to the fact that since 1825 a million and a half of people had immigrated from Great Britain, of whom four-fifths were Irish Catholics!

FARM AND GARDEN.

THOROUGH CULTIVATION.

The following is the substance of a paper read before the Alton Horticultural Society, by our correspondent, Mr. O. L. Barler:

If there is one fact in horticulture more than another, that is being impressed upon my mind, it is the necessity of the thorough cultivation of the soil—a term often used, but not, perhaps, with sufficient definiteness, as what one man calls thorough culture, another does not. When first commencing to stir the soil I thought I could easily cultivate a certain number of acres with a given amount of working force. The second year saw an increase in the working capital, and a decrease in the number of acres; and every year since we have felt the necessity of hiring more labor, without increasing the area under cultivation. It is estimated that, in gardening operations, ten men will work ten acres as it ought to be done. This demand is, perhaps, more than we may feel able to meet this if we expect the best results. To thoroughly cultivate—that is, to thoroughly fertilize, for that is the meaning of the term—necessitates a frequent stirring of the soil, not simply to plow when the weeds appear. Thorough culture has a broader mission than this of weed killing. To cultivate is to make productive—to manure; and to this manuring of the soil we are indebted for the best results on the farm and in the garden. When, and how often, ought we to stir the ground? Always after rain, and as soon after as the ground will work well. The frequency of the plowing will depend, in part, on circumstances, on the nature of the soil, and the character and advancement of the crop. "Once a week" is not enough. The idea of plowing simply to kill weeds is ridiculous! We seek, in the frequent stirring of the ground, a mellow soil, with open mouths or pores, eagerly taking from the atmosphere an abundance of plant food. Some plants, the melon for example, take more from the air than from the soil; or rather the soil, in a proper condition, takes from the atmosphere much of the food which it gives to the plant. If we have weeds, we must, of course, fight them to the death; but it is a shame to have weeds, and a double shame to sit at our ease and wait for the weeds to grow! In order to practice thorough cultivation we must have straight rows, and rows both ways, and level culture. These points are all important, and none more so than level culture, especially on hill sides, where it has a tendency to prevent severe washing, which is a great evil, as all know who have farms on the hill side. Good culture implies, on our soil, a moderate deep stirring of the soil, so long as the roots of plants are not disturbed by the operation; and deep culture implies horse power, and this suggests the check row system, of which we have spoken. The one horse plows and cultivators must be kept in constant motion in the growing crops. There is work, also, for the hand hoes and various kinds of weeders, in this system of thorough doing.—American Agriculturist.

WORK FOR THE MONTH.—The main crops of the farm have already received their last working, and the farmer's attention should now be directed to facilitating, in every possible way, the gathering and housing the products of the year's labor. Fodder pulling will first claim attention in a large portion of the country visited by the cultivator. It may be that in some localities clover and grasses have supplanted fodder, or at least supplemented it to such an extent that if the fodder is spoilt from a long rainy spell, during pulling time, there will be a sufficiency of long forage for the farmer's stock. If there be any such places we most heartily congratulate the people thereof.

As soon as the shuck ripens (losing its green color) begin to strip the blades, if the weather favors. Some persons, after pulling a handful, throw it on the ground to take the sun until evening, when it is taken up and tied in bundles. We prefer the method of tying in small bundles as it is stripped, and hanging on the stalk to dry. When say three-fourths cured, gather and throw in good sized close heaps, late in the evening, and let it go through a heating process during the night; next day throw open the heaps—the heat will dissipate the remaining moisture; cure the fodder sooner, and give it at the same time a tenderness and flavor much relished by stock. Spare no pains to cure it well—if moldy and dusty it may prove more than worthless.

The gin house and packing screw should now be overhauled and put in first-rate order; perhaps new cogs are needed or new rollers, or some part may have become out of level, causing the machinery to run heavily, and by altering the adjustment of parts cause them to wear too rapidly. Baskets, pockets, etc.—all the appliances used in cotton picking—should be gotten ready. Prepare a good scaffold for sunning cotton as it is picked—it pays well. Damp cotton cannot be ginned properly. It will certainly nap and make a bad sample.—Southern Cultivator.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE Pall Mall Gazette says a remarkable discovery of ancient human skeletons has been made in Dordogne, France, belonging to the mammoth period of the earliest quarternary, and of such interest that the French government have sent M. Lartet, the distinguished palæontologist, to make a report on the subject. He records that the bones of five skeletons have been discovered; and that they belong to some gigantic race, whose limbs both in size and form must have resembled those of the gorilla. But the simian origin of man must not be inferred from those analogies, as the skulls, only three of which are perfect, afford testimony fatal to this theory, having ... luminous brains. The skulls are now in the hands of a committee of savants, who are preparing an exhaustive craniological report.

THE Scientific American says that there are produced annually throughout the world 3,214,000,000 hundred weight of coal, 191,800,000 of iron, 1,581,000 of copper, 4,926,300 of lead, 2,350,000 of zinc, besides 459 883 pounds of gold and 2,863 000 pounds of silver. Great Britain produces more than half the coal, nearly half the iron, and more than one third of the lead. Austria produces one-third of the copper, and America nearly a third. Half the zinc is from Prussia, and most of the rest from Belgium. North and South America produce six-sevenths of the silver, and Australia and America each produce nearly half of the gold.

THE breeding of ostriches is successfully carried on at the Gardens of Hamma, near Algiers, in an enclosed park containing a quantity of fine sand. The female makes a nest in a small hillock of sand, and lays every other day. Incubation lasts forty days, during which time the male and female sit alternately. The male takes great interest in the incubation, and only leaves the egg when pressed by hunger; and then the female takes the place, but not for such long periods. An extra circulation goes on in the uncovered portions of the male's body, to generate the heat necessary for the process.

THE Norwegian portable kitchens might be profitably introduced into this country. They are used for boiling meats, and consist simply of a box lined with felt, into which the kettle of boiling water with the meat in it is introduced. The box is then closed, and, being a most excellent non-conductor, the cooking will go on for hours with no fuel, as scarce any heat is lost. In a recent trial a pint of water put in boiling hot at eight in the morning was still warm at six in the evening. It is also an excellent refrigerator.

A CORRESPONDENT of the American Naturalist explains the fact that prairie dog towns on the plains are often many miles from any water by an observation of his that in every such town there are some holes that run down nearly straight, and cannot be flooded with several barrels of water. They do not seem to be used as habitations, and he believes them deep enough to be used as wells. This seems to be a case of instinct nearly unparalleled. The frontiersmen generally believe that the prairio dog lives without drinking.—New York Independent.

THE question of lay delegation in the Methodist Church is decisively settled in favor of the proposition. The vote has been a very light one, showing that no deep interest is felt in it by the mass of the membership. In fact, it was a foregone conclusion. Last week the Methodist, the able unofficial paper of this city, had returns of forty thousand three hundred and eighty-five in favor, and thirteen thousand and twenty-four against the plan. The Advocate of the same date, the official organ, and which, one would suppose, would have the best facilities for collecting information if it had the enterprise, reported only twenty-eight thousand two hundred and sixty-three votes in favor, and eleven thousand five hundred and eleven against the plan.

IT WAS rarely, especially in his later days, that Rowland Hill studied much, prior to entering the pulpit. He would take a walk, quietly observe, mark characters and incidents, sit down a short time before the service, work and pray himself into a devotional frame, and then you would be sure to have some natural, beautiful figures and illustrations, pointed remarks, graphic portraitures, and impressive appeals.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

Letter from Major J. T. Hester, of Alabama:

AUBURN, ALA., April 4, 1869.

MESSRS JOHN DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents.: I have received so much benefit from "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid" that I feel it my duty to let you know it. I had an attack of Typhoid Fever, and with it a most stubborn case of Erysipelas, and was confined to my bed near two months, suffering the most intense pain all the time from Erysipelas; and after exhausting the many prescriptions of my physician, he finally commenced the use of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, and soon found that I was being improved by its use, and continued to use it, and am nearly well. I consider it the most valuable medicine for the diseases and purposes for which it is made that is sold. I also used it most successfully on my little son, who was severely burned, and I do assure you that it was from this medicine alone that I could get any relief from my distressing attack of Erysipelas.

I do not write you this as a certificate for publication, but as a duty that I feel I owe to Professor Darby and his invaluable medicine.

I shall never be without it again if I can by any possible means get it.

I hope you are succeeding, and will make a fortune.

Very truly yours,
J. T. HESTER.

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)...	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two.....	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00
Three	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00
Four.....	12 50	25 00	35 00	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited very little change since our last report. Only a limited business has been done in the wholesale trade. In our last issue we noticed the receipt of two bales of new cotton from Texas, since which we have received two from our own section, the first being from the Hermitage plantation of Mr. Lolo George, Pointe Coupee, which came to hand on Saturday, the 7th, consigned to Mr. J. Pinckney Smith, and the second from the Raven Camp plantation of Mr. J. M. Mante, Rapides parish, which was received on Monday by Messrs. Scott, Cage & Co. The former was forwarded to New York. Sugar has been in good request, and with a steadily diminishing supply prices have ruled more in favor of sellers. Nothing of any moment has been reported in molasses. Western produce has continued quiet, with no supplies to bring out buyers for export. Corn has stiffened, but other articles have shown little or no variation.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, and our accounts from the country continue encouraging. Every day that passes without injury from the caterpillars, which are quite numerous, but have hitherto done no damage, excites more sanguine hopes of a liberal yield. The position is much less doubtful than it was a fortnight since, and some of the guesses made at that time may now be realized. This applies to cotton. We hear of nothing new with regard to sugar.

The river has risen two inches since our last report, and is now three feet seven inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 6th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.	155
Lake		9
Mobile		367
Total		531

On Saturday the market was at a standstill, only one bale being reported, but on Monday factors met the demand more freely, and the sales embraced 279 bales, mostly at 26 to 26½c. for ordinary, 28 to 28½c. for good ordinary, and 29 to 29½c. for low middling, the only list of any magnitude being at the outside figures. On Tuesday the business was confined to 57 bales, picked up in petty lots, mostly at 29 to 29½c. for low middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 337 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 794,307 bales, against 587,095 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 81,369 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 22,574 bales to France, and of 6,245 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 246,118 to Great Britain.

Sugar.—Last season's crop of Louisiana sugar is now about all in, and the receipts on Saturday and Monday were very meagre, embracing only 45 hogsheads. These were sold at 12⅜c. per pound for fair, 13¼c. for good fair, 14c. for prime, and 14⅜c. for prime to choice. On Tuesday only 30 hogsheads sold at 16c. per pound for white, and 13c. for good fair. The demand for old lots has been good, and a fair business has been done at previous prices. A lot of 45 hogsheads fair sold on Monday from second hands at 12¼c. per pound. The supply in the city is light, and held generally at higher figures.

Molasses.—There is scarcely any Louisiana molasses coming in now, but the receipts, which are in driblets, sell quickly on arrival.

Flour.—The market has continued quiet but firm, with a light stock and a scarcity of superfine and double extra.

Monetary.—Gold opened at 135⅝ to 134¾, (against 135⅝ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates.

Operations in silver have been on a moderate scale, the only sales reported being $1,000 in American half dollars at 130, and $800 at 130½, and $13,000 Mexican dollars at 3¾ per cent. premium in gold, $1,500 in American half dollars are quoted at 130 to 130½, and Mexican dollars at 3½ to 3¾ per cent. premium in gold.

The only sales of stocks reported are 225 shares Bank of Louisiana at $1 15, and 30 Canal Bank at $46 75.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—The Cubans here are exultant over the order of DeRodas for a general conscription. They claim that it will force one-half of the conscripts into their army, thus doubling their effective force.

They report a number of successes lately, which give them great advantage.

Canby announces the vote on the constitution and amendments, but withholds the vote for Governor, Legislature and Congress. This causes great dissatisfaction, and is claimed as another victory for Boutwell.—Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Secretary Rawlins says that Canby will not exact the test oath from the members elect of the Virginia Legislature.

Judge Dent has written Boutwell a remonstrative and denunciatory letter, wherein he says: "By some strange, dexterous management and occult political strategy, you have so worked upon the confidence of the President as to cause him to flourish the club with which you intend to break his head."

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—The report that Rawlins intends resigning and that the portfolio had been tendered to General Dodge is unfounded.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—General Canby decides that twelve months' residence is necessary as a qualification for seats in the Virginia Senate or House of Delegates.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—A letter from Chief Justice Chase has recently been exhibited, in which he expressed great satisfaction at the result of the recent Virginia election, and hoped that a similar result would attend the elections in Tennessee, Mississippi and Texas. He intimated that the Republican party had served its purpose, and that a great conservative party ought to be formed out of the moderate men of all existing parties.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The Treasurer of the United States to-day received counterfeit ten dollar greenbacks of the twenty-third series, letter C, which in its distinctive features varies materially from any other specimens yet. The engraving is quite coarse and does not attempt to imitate the genuine plate at all. The vignette of Lincoln is very indifferently engraved, and the scroll work around the medallion is poorly imitated. There is within a fraction of $83,000,000 of ten dollar greenbacks in circulation, of which, in response to a circular of the Treasurer recalling it, some $25,000 has already been received from New York, and it is to be hoped that the last issue will shortly be taken up. The fifty dollar greenbacks are also to be recalled under the circular referred to. There are only some $17,000,000 in circulation.

EUROPE.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The Post has an editorial to-day on the subject of the sale of Cuba to the United Stetes, wherein the writer says: "We entertain a shrewd suspicion that the best thing which Spain can do is to close with America in respect to Cuba. She gains nothing by Cuba in her present state, but loses a sum she cannot afford. She is not strong enough to stamp out the insurrection, but is obliged by a false sentiment of honor to continue an attempt costly and annoying. If she is able to restore tranquility, considerable time must elapse before she can reap the fruits of success, and probably before the result is attained the flames of rebellion will break out afresh. These considerations will have weight with the government."

MADRID, Aug. 17.—The newspapers deny that there are any negotiations pending for the sale of Cuba. The government desires the restoration of order in Cuba before considering the subject.

BERLIN, Aug 17.—The North German States have agreed upon common action respecting the Ecumenical Council, if the action of that body repealing the temporal power of the Pope threatens the peace of Europe.

PARIS, Aug. 18.—The Emperor today presided at the council of his ministers. His health is much improved and he will attend the opening of the Suez Canal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA., Aug. 16.—The committee appointed by the National Board of Trade to report upon the most feasible route for the transportation of heavy products of the West to the Atlantic coast met to-day. Reports were submitted from William M. Burwell of New Orleans, Thomas M. Moore of Dubuque, and Robert W. Hughes of Virginia; were read and all three referred to Mr. Hughes to be digested into form. The committee will remain in session several days.

George Peabody has donated to the trustees of Washington College, of which General Lee is president, $60,000 to establish additional professorships recently proposed by General Lee.

Mr. Peabody's health has improved so much that he was able to dine at the hotel to-day. He appeared leaning on General Lee's arm. The crowd gathered around with demonstrations of congratulations on his convalescence.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, VA., Aug. 18.—On invitation of the Executive Committee of the Virginia Agricultural Society, the Southern planters here will hold an agricultural convention next Friday.

AN ELOQUENT TRIBUTE.—The following is an extract from a speech made by Governor Chamberlain, of Maine, at a recent meeting of the officers of the army of the Potomac at Steinway Hall, New York:

Then, too, we had an army opposed to us such as the Confederacy had nowhere else—an army reared in the same field, growing up with us, taught by the same experience, trained by the same discipline, matched and balanced against us in weight and measure and movement.

That army of Northern Virginia! who can help looking back upon them now with feelings half fraternal? Ragged and reckless, yet careful to keep their bayonets bright and lines of battle well dressed; reduced to dire extremities sometimes, yet always ready for a fight; rough and rude, yet knowing well how to make a field illustrious. Who can forget them—the brave bronzed faces that looked at us for four years across the flaming pit—men with whom in a hundred fierce grapples we fought with remorseless desperation and all the terrible enginery of death, till on the one side and the other a quarter of a million fell, and yet we never hated except when they struck at the old flag?

Main force against main force, there was good reason why, when valor like that was exhausted, the sun should go down on thousands dead, but not one vanquished.

THE LATE ECLIPSE.—A correspondent of a Philadelphia paper thus writes of a prolonged totality:

"Few people trouble themselves to think what the effect would be if the eclipse of Saturday were to last any length of time, and the sun were blotted from the heavens. Philosophy declares that not only would a horror of darkness cover the earth, but the moisture of the earth and the temperature fall to a fearful point of cold, nothing less than two hundred and thirty degrees below zero, Fahrenheit. The earth would be the seat of darkness and more than Arctic desolation. Nothing could survive such freezing cold a moment, more than one could breathe in scalding water. In three days after the cooling process began, nothing created would be alive but the monsters that wallow in deep ocean, and the eyeless reptiles that make their haunts in caves which penetrate far under ground."

THE people of the Pacific coast are, in some sort, of the nature of posterity to the great men of the Atlantic slope of the Rocky mountains. Ex-Judge, ex Governor, ex-Senator, ex Secretary, ex Republican leader Seward has made his exit from public life here; but the Californians have received him as a man of the past—as we might receive Jefferson, if he were to revisit the earth. The "Sage of Auburn" arrived in San Francisco on Friday, and was most uproariously received by the people of that city. On his arrival a salute of one hundred guns was fired; and he, with his party, was escorted by a military procession to the Occidental Hotel, where rooms were provided by the city. In the evening a brilliant reception took place in the parlors of the hotel.

MEETINGS of the Catholics of southern Germany have been held with the object of considering the propriety of setting up a national Catholic church, independent to Rome. Prince Hohenlohe, the Catholic prime minister of Catholic Bavaria, has declared in the Reichsrath at Munich that the Encyclical Letter and the Syllabus are opposed to the spirit of the age.

THE PAPACY.

POPISH GROWTH IN ENGLAND.

At a meeting of the Protestant Alliance in London early in this month, several speeches were made concerning popish growth in the United Kingdom. Rev. S. Bardsley did not share in the feelings of despondency which had been expressed by some of the speakers, and would mention a few facts to show why he entertained a contrary opinion. At the census of 1851 the Roman Catholics numbered 4 2 of the population. He was living in Lancashire at the time, and knew that the Roman Catholics were much disappointed at the result. From 1845 to 1851 the Irish population in this country had more than doubled itself, having increased from 284,000 to 600,000, and notwithstanding the immense emigration from Ireland the proportion was only what he had stated, 4.2 per cent. It might be said that the Roman Catholic population had made immense strides since that time, and Dr. Wiseman had made a great parade of the progress of Romanism in this country, stating that his diocese contained 106 churches and chapels. Mr. Lamley, a barrister, who prepared a paper on the subject, found that only 63 such places were registered, and came to the charitable conclusion that Dr. Wiseman had included in his calculation every little school and place where Roman Catholic services were held Mr Lamley closely examined every possible source to arrive at the proportion of Romanists in 1861, and he found it to be 4 4. It might be said that that was an increase, but it certainly was a very slight one. But it should be remembered that there has been a great emigration from Ireland during those ten years. The Roman Catholic population of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was 1,500,000 less than it was in 1841. At that time there were 6,500,000 Roman Catholics. In 1861 the number was 4,500,000, showing a decrease of 2,000,000. Taking the increase in Great Britain at 500,000, there was a decrease of 1,500,000 in the United Kingdom. Statements had been put forth relative to the increase in the number of priests and chapels since 1829. But they did not place side by side with that increase the establishment of the Pastoral Aid Society, the City Mission, the Bible Women's Mission, and various other Protestant institutions, and the fact that more than 3,000 churches of England had been built, and a proportionate number of Non-conformist places of worship. Then, what was the fact in a political point of view? Notwithstanding the great increase of Liberalism, there was but one single Roman Catholic member for the whole of Great Britain. It was true there were some 30 from Ireland, but altogether there were only 31 out of 658. Having had some little experience at the East end of London, he was glad to be able to state that in the course of two years 75 Sunday school teachers had enrolled themselves in the Protestant class, and 25 were competing for prizes. He believed that classes of that kind might be multiplied to a considerable extent. The time was gone by for keeping down Romanism by legislation; this could only be done by the contact of truth; and he trusted that every one would be diligent and earnest in teaching the word of God.

ENGLAND AND CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. By another decisive vote—one hundred and eighteen to fifty-eight—have the English House of Commons again rejected the bill to abolish capital punishment. A reform House, elected for reform business, and holding the freest opinions on all subjects, might have been expected to deal more tenderly with a so-called reform than this. But the English people and their representatives, no matter how radically they may treat other great political and social questions, are, and are likely to continue, conservative on capital punishment; for in no other country, so fully as in England, is that question, in all its bearings, understood. In the United States men theorize about it. They give us their intuitions, but no facts. But in England the subject has been most thoroughly considered by committees of the House. Magistrates, police officers, prison officials, men familiar with the walks and ways of criminals, and doing their utmost in labors of genuine philanthropy, have all agreed in protesting against the abolition of the gallows. Had they advised it, capital punishment would have been prohibited in England years ago.—New York Journal of Commerce.

OUR ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

HULL, ENGLAND, July 29, 1869.

MR EDITOR: Having been favored with a ticket from Samuel Romilly Hall, president of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, to attend its sittings at this place, I thought I would just drop you a few lines which might interest some of the readers of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The one hundred and twenty-sixth Conference of the Wesleyan Methodists opened in Great Thornton street chapel, Hull, at nine o'clock. The president gave out the hymn commencing—

"And are we yet alive."

The Rev. John Farrar read the one hundred and forty-fifth Psalm, and the Revs. Wm. Jackson and Charles Prest engaged in prayer. The secretary then called over the names of the "legal hundred," when it appeared that three vacancies had been created in consequence of ministers having been supernumeraries four years, and three vacancies had been created by death. When a member of the "legal hundred" has been a supernumerary four years he is deemed to be superannuated, and his place becomes vacant. These vacancies are filled up, the first being by nomination, the second by seniority, and the remainder alternately. Thus, H. W. Williams by nomination, in the place of T. Dunn, supernaunsted; Elijal Toyne by seniority, in place of John Geden, supernnnasted; Thomas Llewellyn, in place of F. A. West deceased; Thomas Nightingale, in place of Samuel Young, superamnated. In Ireland: J. W. McKay in place of Henry Price, deceased. The president said the Conference would now be prepared to elect a president.—The secretary announced that all the members of the "hundred" were eligible for election except C. Prest, George Osborn, William Shaw, William Arthur, John Bedford and S. Romilly Hall, who have filled the office within the last eight years.—The votes were collected from those ministers who have traveled fourteen years and upward. After a few minutes of suspense the president announced the numbers to be:

For President—Rev. L. H. Wiseman, 16; Rev. Dr. James, 22; Rev. T. Vasey, 42; Rev. John Farrar, 87; Rev. Dr. Jobson, 120.

After the announcement of the secretary the ex-president vacated the chair.

The Rev. Dr. Jobson approached the chair and knelt down for a few moments, the whole Conference standing. The ex-president then handed over to the president the Bible used by Mr. Wesley in his open-air services, and the Conference seal, with his best wishes for a very prosperous year of office.

The newly elected president, Dr. Jobson, said that he was overwhelmed with a sense of the goodness of God, and of the kindness done him by his brethren in placing him in the chair. A rush of associations came upon him in that place. On his right was Lincolnshire, the county of his birth; on his left Beverly, the house of his ancestry; near him Holderness, the scene of his first ministerial labor. He had also many cherished recollections of good men in Hull, now dead. He held it to be the health and honor of Methodism that it gathered its adherents from all classes, and that it was not pledged to any fixed political creed or partisanship. It would, therefore, be presumptuous in any man who should dare to speak on behalf of the Conference on any matters not immediately connected with Methodism. He would assure them that in nothing doubtful should he speak as their representative. There were some principles, however, which he could safely avow in their name. One was that, whatever might come, they would not, in order to increase their numbers, consent to any change which would tend to lessen purity or weaken Christian fellowship.—Whilst not forgetting those around them, they would take care that the Methodist societies should be, as far as possible, kept up pure and unspotted. He, for one, would not care to be connected with a large, ungodly church.

Again, he might say that they were resolved to continue simple, plain, evangelical, earnest preachers of the Gospel—preachers, not readers nor reciters, but proclaimers, publishers of truth. He would not object to every read sermon, nor did he forget how many good and useful men made reading their practice; but he thought that if ever reading sermons or using lengthy notes became common in Methodism, its glory would have departed. He believed that they were fully qualified to discharge all ministerial duties, but they would not be ashamed still to be called "Methodist preachers." No dignity "excelled that of the preacher's office."

Again, they were all resolved to continue firm and unwavering adherents of scriptural Protestantism. While one in Christ with all evangelical churches, they could have no alliance with the "man of sin." Men might level up or level down, but with those who advocated concurrent endowment or indiscriminate endowment, or who bound by oath to drive away all damnable heresy, Judas-like, could betray the truth for pieces of silver, they could have no sympathy. They would continue loyal to Christ, loyal to the Book, loyal to the house of Brunswick, loyal to Queen Victoria, and loyal to the martyrs and confessors. They would give up not only glebes and houses, but life itself, rather than betray the truth.

Again, they were agreed, while spreading truth among the dense masses of large towns, not to neglect the villages. He had found much simplicity and godliness among the richer classes, but his own happiest recollections were of his ministry in barns and rooms in country places. He concluded by asking the prayers and assistance of his brethren.

The exercises of the first day were concluded by a Conference prayer meeting. R. S. T.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

ENTERPRISE, MISS., Aug. 10, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Both the church and Sunday school in Enterprise are on rising ground. We hope to reach Pisga's highest summit,

"And view the landscape o'er."

W. SPILLMAN.

VAIDEN, MISS., Aug. 17, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The good work still goes on. We closed a meeting a few days since, at Wesley Chapel, with eleven accessions to Zion. We moved from there to Midway, where the Holy Spirit was with us in great power. For the want of space I cannot tell you of this great meeting. Suffice it to say, the Lord was with us in convicting, converting and strengthening power. The meeting was under control of the Methodists, but we were assisted by the Cumberland Presbyterians. Midway should be called Union, for such it is. Four or five denominations worship there. We saw Primitive Missionary Baptists, Cumberland Presbyterians and Methodists all shouting praises to God at once. We give an incident worth relating. We saw ten converted, one right after the other, in two or three minutes time. It would have done you good to have seen fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters from the congregation approach the altar, rejoicing with those who rejoiced. Sinners were struck to the heart in the congregation and were heard to cry out for mercy. One old man, who had not heard a sermon for twenty-five years, was visited by Brother Merrit, a local preacher. He was prevailed upon to attend, was convicted, converted and joined the church.

I find I am lengthening this notice too much. There were about forty conversions and thirty-three accessions to the church—ten to the Cumberlands and twenty-three to the Methodists. I suppose the others intend to join other churches. We left about twenty five penitents—earnest seekers—at the altar. All the glory be to God.

Your brother in Christ,

P. A. JOHNSTON.

OUR most successful pastors are giving increased attention not only to their Sunday schools, but to distinct preaching services for the young. The well known fact that a vast majority of conversions occur in very early life is becoming recognized as very important and significant. Preaching services and ordinary means of grace other than the Sunday school practically ignore the most hopeful and promising class of the people. This is felt by many pastors to be a folly and an absurdity. Chaplain Trumbull's book contains complete formulas for the children's services, besides numbers of outline sermons to children, and is a step in the right direction. We hope the day is not distant when our theological seminaries shall recognize the existence of the little folks, and furnish the coming minister some adequate training in the ordinary principles of teaching, and in proper methods of addressing children; so that he will be able to instruct teachers, and preach acceptably to the most impressible portion of his people. Apropos to this subject, we quote the following from Dr. Bushnell. He says:

"I think of nothing in my own ministry with so much regret and so little respect as I do of my omissions here. We get occupied with great and high subjects that require a handling too heavy and deep for children, and become so fooled in our estimate of what we do that we call it coming down when we undertake the preaching to children; whereas it is coming up, rather, out of the subterranean hells, darknesses, intricacies, dungeon-like profundities of old, grown up sin, to speak to the bright daylight creatures of trust, and sweet affinities, and easy conviction. And to speak to these fitly, so as not to thrust in Jesus on them as by force, but to have him win his own dear way by his childhood, waiting for his cross, tenderly, purely and without art—oh, how fine, how very precious the soul equipment it will require of us! I think I see it now clearly: we do not preach well to adults, because we do not preach, or learn how to preach, to children. Jesus did not forget to be a child; but, if he had been a child with us, we should probably have missed the sight of Him. God's world contains grown-up people and children together; our world contains grown-up people only. And, preaching only to these, who are scarcely more than half the total number, it is much as if we were to set our ministry to a preaching only to bachelors. We dry up in this manner, and our thought widens in a certain pomp of pretense that is hollow, and not Gospel. The very certain fact is, that our schools of theology will never make qualified preachers till they discover the existence of children. Let every young man who is going to preach put himself to it, first of all, in the afternoon service, there to begin a ministry wise enough and rich enough in Gospel meaning to take the heart of children."—Independent.

THE Quakers are awaking to a new life. In Richmond, Indiana—the seat of the great revival, one of the most remarkable that has occurred of late years—is one of the largest settlements of the Friends. Not only do they enter as vigorously as their Methodist and Presbyterian brethren into the evangelistic labor, but the "Spirit moves them to sing hymns, against which they have borne testimony" for so many years. We see accounts of Friends who are making pilgrimages to Richmond from Chicago and elsewhere, to inquire what this means.

A GENTLEMAN of Rochester, New Hampshire, saw an advertisement that a receipt for the cure of dyspepsia might be had by sending a postage stamp to the advertiser. He was a victim, and sent his stamp. The answer was, "Dig in your garden, and let whisky alone."

MY MISSION.

Some few fair flowers I fain would cherish,
Which smile in beauty round my way;
I would not let their sweetness perish,
Nor see their opening buds decay.

Some few rich sheaves my hand would gather,
Some precious freight of golden grain,
Ere chilling winds and cold frosts wither
And blast the treasures of the plain.

Some few soft words of kindness spoken;
Some earnest thoughts for other's weal;
Some tears for hearts by sorrow broken;
Some griefs to cheer, some wounds to heal;

Some few low prayers my lips would offer,
Which like sweet incense may arise—
The chastened soul's adoring proffer
To the white throne, set in the skies.

Thus day by day my work pursuing,
Saviour, thy pleasure let me do;
Yet well I know, with all my doing,
How small my services and few.

Then will I fold my vesture round me,
And lay me down to wait my rest,
Until a kingly Hand hath crowned me,
And drawn me to a loving breast.

THE EOLIPSE.

MIDWAY, KY., August 8, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Being aware that you all in the far-off southland were not under the line of the great eclipse yesterday, it enters my brain that perhaps a description, from an unscientific though it be, would be acceptable. After having smoked a piece of glass, and accompanied by my dog alone, I wandered on the outskirts of this place to where I might have an unobstructed view, and to where I hoped no human voice would reach, that in the solitude of my own heart I might contemplate this mighty change of nature, and experience whatever awe so vast and wonderful a phenomenon could throw around the human soul. My desire was fully confirmed.

I stood upon the descent of a gentle hill. Behind me, about one hundred feet, stood a dilapidated church, and here and there about it moldering grave stones stood, erecting their gray old heads as if to watch the coming death-light, for it was like to nothing else, in imagination. In front there was a long, unbroken view of harvest fields, and happy woodlands, dimpled here and there by man's artistic touch, and weary herds of cattle chewing the "cud of contemplation," innocent entirely, as was soon demonstrated, of the approaching wonder; while around me, in circling antics, my dog was playing, but every now and then sniffing the paling air suspiciously. The awful moment came, the light was gone, a dread and ghostly shadow ran across the western sky, and all the great blue eye of heaven seemed filmed over with the touch of death. Oh, God! it seemed as though I stood in the presence of eternity. A hundred stars burst through the ghastly shadow and poured their trembling light full sadly on the pallid face of nature! My poor dog crept in abject terror to my feet, whining and hair erect; a herd of cattle rushed madly toward me, evidently seeking protection, deeming me, their lord, as Lord of all, no doubt. Poor things! they little knew that I was an atom in eternity, just as they; and though myself aware of what produced this dread effect, fearful, just as they! They forced me to get over a neighboring fence, and then, poor creatures, they got as close as possible to it. This small circumstance struck me with inexpressible force, and brought to my mind that awful time when Christ shall come to judge the quick and the dead, and many who call upon the name of the Lord shall not be heeded.—May God grant that our calls may be heard with mercy in that hour! The moon presented the appearance of a mouse-colored globe, with a halo (the corona) around it; while at the portion nearest the earth appeared an incision, probably one-twentieth of its diameter, of a blood-red color, evidently a volcanic eruption, from its difference in color to the coronal.

The most beautiful part was yet to come. In an instant, and totally unexpected to me, the sun's edge burst from behind the moon like a radiant angel. I am sure nothing in the universe could describe the joy of that moment, and my soul bowed before the splendor of God's handiwork involuntarily; and surely never again will I feel just as I did at that time. The shadow fled from the face of the earth. The pale, sad stars faded from my sight. The moon became invisible in the sudden blaze of glory. The birds began their songs. The cattle rejoicing leaped and lowed. The splendor fell in trembling streams on wood and harvest field, and awed I moved on slowly homeward, just in time to see the chickens leave their roosts! Oh! that I had an inspired pen to paint the majesty of those two small minutes of commingled day and night. They are fixed forever on my soul, a splendor and a power.

PHILISTUS.

Pensacola Dietrict, Montgomery Conference.

MILTON, FLA., August 2, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: In the midst of the cares which crowd into the sanctum of an Advocate editor, I know not but that some cheering news from Flowerland might somewhat soften those cares, and act as a prevention of that pestiferous disease which, anon, we find afflicting editors, and more particularly such of them as are from time to time troubled with such correspondents as the writer of this.

In January, 1868, I came to this place, where I found a band of disorganized Methodists, the number—actual number—amounting to thirty-seven. Nineteen months have sped by, bearing on their wings a diversity of gifts—bringing joys, filling the heart at times with "joy exceeding, and full of glory"—lading the spirit with refreshments, as does the dewdrop the flower, to be torn into atoms by the approaching storm. The storms have blown over us—the gusts of temptation, opposition, doubt and fear have passed, and still we live. This does not give the idea—we grow. Our church was in debt—in a dilapidated condition—the congregation below par, our members few. But now we number seventy-one. Our house is under course of thorough repairs, being made as good as new; our congregations are the largest in the city; perfect harmony prevails, and good feelings are everywhere manifest.

In addition to all this, we have just received from Mr. Werlein, 80 Baronne street, New Orleans, a No. 10 Carhart & Needham organ, which I do not hesitate to pronounce superior to any instrument, of the same size, I have ever heard. Musicians say the same. The whole amount of money raised last year was less than $300; while this year, for all purposes, over a hundred per cent. will be added.

But "the best of all is, the Lord is with us." There have been several conversions recently, and a general increase of vital godliness among the old members. While passing over the district recently I was frequently made happy while I surveyed the prospects of Zion.

At Pensacola we suffer, and suffer much, by reason of having no house of worship there. A rally has been recently made, however, in the feelings of the members, and about forty names have been enrolled as members. The hope of our church is not "clean gone forever," even in that city of persecuting, villifying Romanism. There is hope yet, and prospects for good.

At Warrington there is less hope. All there depends on the wire-pulling at the capital. If Florida proves its loyalty, why then appropriations will be made, and things go on then as heretofore. But then our cause has done well, very well, under the circumstances.

In the National Burial Ground at Warrington rests the mortal part of Rev. Dennis B. Lyne, who died in that station in 1860. A decent wooden slab marks his resting place, while those who were then girls—his pets and playfellows, now grown into womanhood—pay their respects to the memory of a deceased pastor by planting about his charnel house the sweet roses and beautiful lilies, decking them here and there with the choicest collections of shells, and entwining together about his head-board the tender branches of the beautiful jessamine. This is as it should be.—The herald of the Cross died at his post, preaching Jesus to a sinking world. "Away from his home and the friends of his youth," he stood up in front of danger. He left all to follow Christ. He is not forgotten. Tears of sympathy mingle with the evening dewdrops as they gather upon his mound, and the same tender hands which in life ministered to his wants now do the work of a sister by caring for his grave. As he has gone, so I must go; and who will watch my sleeping dust? "Be ye also ready."

From this sacred place—the place where the minister of God sleeps in quiet repose—I turned into other parts of the field, where I found the grace of God working also. But in all this I glory not, but "in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

We need more laborers here. There's work for three young men in my district. Who will come and do this blessed work? Truly, the harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few.

A general revival prevails throughout the district where we have pastors, and the per cent. of increase is encouragingly large.

Very truly,

J. A. PARKER.

MEASURES AND MEN.

MR. EDITOR: I know nothing of circumlocution practically, and in speaking and writing come straight to the point.

I was opposed to lay delegation, yet I voted for delegates to the last General Conference who favored it. Why did I do so? Well, they were our representative men. I had always voted for them. There seems to be a tacit understanding between the electors and the elected, and they go and have gone. But shall they continue to go? I think that we have voted for men to our harm, and I am now for measures; and if our old favorites favor my measures I will vote for them, and if not, not. I am sick of this everlasting call for change in church polity. Our changes heretofore, as Brother Richardson says, have not been to vitalize our piety, but to pander to the demands of the world. My motto is, Halt! and if we do not about face, let us take a step or two to the rear—put that dancing clause back into its place, for, with all Brother Summers' explanations, the mass of our people think that its removal from the Disciplins was a concession in its favor. I intend, hereafter, to know the views of those for whom I vote, and I am sure a majority of our preachers are with me in this matter. Measures and then men. We have able and competent men, both clerical and lay, who entertain our views. Let us see that they represent us in our next General Conference.

SIX HUNDRED acres of land have been purchased in the vicinity of Placerville, California, for a Japanese colony, the members of which will devote themselves to the culture of tea and silk. The establishment of such a colony is one of the most significant signs of the times.

BOUNDARIES.

THE QUESTION OF BOUNDARIES BETWEEN THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND TENNESSEE CONFERENCES.

MR EDITOR: Much is being said and written on the propriety of forming a North Alabama Conference, reuniting the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences, and then dividing by running a line east and west. I think it proper, for the information of all parties interested, to make the following statements:

There were several ministers present from the Montgomery and Mobile Conferences at the commencement of Centenary College. They held an informal meeting and discussed the importance, in case certain changes should occur, of reuniting the two Conferences. The meeting was then adjourned to meet at the commencement at Greensboro, where a larger number of ministers was expected to be present. There were present five of the presiding elders, and many of the prominent preachers of the Conference. The meeting was again organized, and in view of the fact that a general sentimsnt prevails throughout all the Conferences to confine Conference bounds to State lines, and the probability that the next General Conference would so order it, it was considered certain that in that event the Mobile Conference would lose that part of her Conference now in the State of Mississippi, which they would be very loth to give up, and could only consent to do so by yielding to the necessity of a great principle.

To timely meet these probable contingencies, and with a view to the good of the whole church in Alabama, as well as the sister Conferences interested, Dr. Mitchell and myself were appointed a committee to confer with the next meeting of the Montgomery Conference on the propriety of a reunion of the two Conferences—provided such changes should occur—with a view, in the future, to a division by running a line east and west. As to where such line should be located the meeting made no suggestions. But as I travel extensively in both Conferences, and have an opportunity of learning the views of the brethren therein, I will simply state what the general opinion is as to where the line should run or be located: Running east and west, leaving Montgomery, Auburn and Tuskegee in the south, securing to that Conference the male and female colleges in the eastern part of the State; leaving Selma, Greensboro, Opelika and Summerfield in the north, securing to that Conference those colleges in the western part of the State.

This line would leave eighteen stations in the south, and seventeen in the north. At present the south would have much the advantage, and financially would, perhaps, always be much the strongest Conference; but such a division would be about on a line with the line dividing the Georgia Conferences, and would make two large, influential Conferences. As the railroad lines are now, and others that are being constructed, such a division would be most convenient to all parties.

PENALTY FOR NON-PAYMENT OF TAX. Several persons have written from New York to Commissioner Delano, saying that the collector there announces that where persons are delinquent in the payment of taxes by the proper time he will impose a penalty of five per cent., with interest, and they desire to know whether the law sustains such a course. The commissioner replies by citing a portion of the act of July 13, 1866, as amended by the act of March 2, 1867, which reads as follows: "The person or persons failing or neglecting to pay said tax shall pay a penalty of five per cent., together with interest at the rate of one per cent. per month upon said tax from the time the same became due, but no interest for any fraction of a month shall be demanded."

SINGAPORE has a boa-constrictor that has swallowed a young lady, who wore at the time a fifteen thousand dollar necklace. The young lady is of no value now, but the necklace is; so about thirty thousand natives are diligently in search of the snake.

Whitworth College, Brookhaven.

MR. EDITOR: The members of the Visiting Committee should before now have written an account of the commencement at Whitworth Female College. As all others delay, I feel a desire, as well as a duty, to say something, though not as an official report.

I suppose to write an orthodox commencement letter, I would have to begin at home and tell you all my feelings and adventures along the journey to the city of learning. But this, I fear, you would find very uninteresting. We had no romantic adventures with "shafts" or "floods" of golden sunlight, shooting and rolling over eastern hills, spreading over green valleys around, obstructing our pathway. We had no iron horse to whirl us along at lightning speed; no green and shady valleys, with open arms, inviting to repose, with nature singing sweet songs and proclaiming mighty truths for our entertainment. But we did have floods of rain and muddy roads; we had a pair of iron mouthed mules who, in spite of double retraction behind, would run down all the hills; we had the tall old pines bending their heads politely and gracefully to us as we passed; and I had a pleasant, sensible companion, with whom I had much profitable converse on the way.

We got to Brookhaven on Sunday morning, about eleven o'clock. We at once looked for the college buildings. There were no proud temples with polished domes, gathering and reflecting the sunlight in floods of beauty over the land. We saw some gray, grave looking buildings, in which, I judge, there is a great deal of wisdom stored. As we approached the church we heard the last strains of a beautiful hymn of praise. As we entered the aisles we heard the first words of the minister, Rev. Mr. Linfield, reading about the merchantman and his pearl of great price. We had to make wedges of ourselves and force them into small cracks over crowded benches. There we sat for an hour and listened to one of the most interesting and beautiful discourses to which it has ever been my fortune to give ear. First, there was a perfect shower of smaller pearls, lesser virtues, which the speaker shook out as things of beauty and worth, and which, especially in the light of the great pearl, like myriads of rain drops in the morning sunlight, made the earth appear more attractive to me than ever before. Then came the pearl of great price, representing in its value the wealth of earth and heaven combined, and without the light of which no part of the world could be properly seen. The sermon, in its pearl-like value, was given out to an appreciative audience. I think there were no swine there. There was one objection. But it is not lawful to find fault with anything on such occasions; so I desist.

On Sunday night, at the request of the senior class, the president, Rev. H. F. Johnson, preached. His sermon, though short, was earnest and practical, filling the place for which it was designed. On Monday morning we were called out to witness the examination of the senior class. I have never heard anything more impartial and satisfactory. Among many pleasing features one was prominent—one too which should be a guiding index to those seeking a school for their children. I noticed that while the answers to all questions were ready and accurate, yet they seemed to come from the minds of the pupils, and not from the books studied. The principles of the book, of course, had been imbibed, but when the questions were propounded the minds seemed to turn within and act for themselves, and not to learn, through memory, on the text alone. This, to me, was evidence that there was something real in the education of those young ladies; that the teachers had learned them to think as well as to recite. Many men are good teachers, but few are good educators. Many can impart knowledge in the abstract, but few can impart it in such a way as to train and strengthen the mind. With the world the ready recitation is an evidence of good education when at the same time the mind may be without form, strength or life under the weight of this golden knowledge, which it can only reflect through memory. Knowledge must be made to draw out the mind from behind its shield of text books, and to go forth in the open fields of learning, and there cultivate and discriminate for itself. Then education goes on apace. A mind thus trained lives in a much higher sphere than one whose education is only the storehouse of memory. With the latter there is no discrimination. A thing of beauty is a thing to be possessed, though it leads to ruin. It walks amid flowers, of empty show, reclines in green valleys on beds of ease, which exhale noxious vapors when pressed, and which induce giddy oblivion on the treacherous floors of the gay and beautiful halls of worldly pleasure.

Such things, with all their hideous deformity, fly before the superior light of an educated mind like owls and bats before the king of day. The educated mind must walk in fields of utility, where the flowers are real and develop into good fruit, must dwell in the great temples of truth, where the floors are not only smooth, but of pure and solid marble; where the beds are not only fresh, but of real down—even the eternal principles of Christianity. If we would have our daughters educated thus we should not send the ephemeral schools that spring up at our doors because they are convenient and cheap, but we should seek out the temples of real education, where they may be trained to the highest standard. Such a place I believe the fathers of Mississippi may find at Brookhaven.

You will know that the music of the commencement was good when I tell you that they appreciate sacred music, in its entire superiority, over all other. You will know that the compositions of the senior class, on Tuesday, were good when you remember that they were the work of minds educated as above recommended. To say that the annual address was delivered, on the subject "Reading," by Dr. Walker, of your city, will be, I know, to secure your high appreciation at once: to say that the address was requested for publication will be to show the appreciation of the hearers; and to say that Dr. Walker refused to comply, because, as he said, he would to speak it again, is to show his appreciation of it. So you know it must have been a good speech.

Time and space fail me to tell of the large and pleasant gathering and sumptuous feast prepared at the college on Tuesday night. G.

THE DRUNKARD'S CURE.—Some months ago a gentleman advertised that he had discovered a sure specific for the cure of drunkenness. He would not divulge the secret of what compounds he used, but furnished the medicine at so much per bottle. He did not have so many applicants for cure as he expected, considering the extent of the disease. In fact, the more malignant cases did not seem anxious for relief.—They rather appeared to enjoy their malady. A few, however, placed themselves under treatment, and some were cured—whether by taking the medicine or by not taking any strong drinks, we are not prepared to say. One of the cured ones had faith in the medicine, rigidly carried out the directions of the doctor, and now has not the least taste for intoxicating drinks; whereas, one year ago, he was an inebriate, and could not get along with less than a pint to a quart of whisky per day.

He said that he had, at some trouble and expense, procured the receipe for the preparation of the medicine, which he had published for the benefit of suffering humanity. It is as follows: Sulphate of iron, five grains; peppermint water, eleven drachms; spirit of nutmeg, one drachm; twice a day. This preparation acts as a tonic and a stimulant, and so partially supplies the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevents that absolute physical and moral prostration that follows a sudden breaking off from the use of stimulating drinks. It is to be taken in quantities equal to an ordinary dram, and as often as the desire for a dram returns. Any druggist can prepare the prescription.—Wood's Household Magazine.

JOTTINGS FROM AN ITINERANT.

Mr Editor: A recent jaunt to the country presents several points of interest.

First. The tide of prosperity is rising. The people seem inspired with fresh hopes. The crops are altogether promising on the fertile Yazoo hills, and, indeed, in all north Louisiana. The labor has been more efficient than heretofore; yet what is the grand difficulty with reference to success in the agricultural interests of the country. Our people are learning to work, and many that have not worked in the field for years are now manipulating with plow and hoe effectively, verifying the unpoetic expression:

Tickle the earth with a hoe
And it will laugh with a harvest.

Valuable lesson learned: It is no disgrace to work. If the people are true to that lesson these fertile valleys will laugh with fatness on every side. It is generally conceded that the devouring worm will not destroy the cotton this season. Some farmers are nervous still on the subject and stand in fear, when there is really no visible ground for trepidation. The yield of cotton will likely be greater than last year, while an abundance of corn and other indigenous products will repay the laborer for his toil.

Second. It is evident to every observer that there has been a corresponding depression, religiously, in keeping with the agricultural and financial embarrassments of the country. Now is the time for a corresponding revival. Now is the time for simultaneous effort. Now is the time to reoccupy the territory, gather up dispersed congregations, repair church houses, reorganize, vitalize the church and make an aggressive movement. We have been too long inert, until the fatal Laodicean sleep has well-nigh culminated in apostacy—that apostacy which is "twice dead, plucked up by the roots." With a zeal and assiduity measured by the interests involved, the minister of the Gospel should "cry aloud, and spare not," seek the lost, and bring back the straying, build up the waste places of Zion, proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God." There is no time now for the discussion of abstruse abstractities to indicate needed reforms, but to take right hold of things as they are, and educe form and life and power from the stagnant, yet pregnant elements which lie before us. The only reform needed is one of works, not words—a reform from lethargy, inaction, deadness, a waking up from sleep and putting on the armor of light. The people's minds are open to religious truth and conviction; they were never more courteous or deferential toward religion. In the whirl and confusion of the past much of vitality, form and church accommodations have been lost, but the people are reflective; they are thinking soberly of their condition, and now is the time to occupy and cultivate Emanuel's lands. The enemy, in every form and guise, is at work diligently. By many strategic movements he is at work to mislead, deceive, hoodwink.

Let the Bible societies scatter the Holy Word, and let the earnest, God-fearing, self-denying, loving, ardent men of God go with tears and entreaties and persuade the people to be "reconciled to God." Let us away with the cry of hard times and war associations which fill the mind with rancor and disaffection, and let us patiently bear and endure our lot; acting well our part and addressing ourselves heartily to the great work of "converting sinners from the error of their way." May the Spirit of the Lord God rest on the church.

Third. "The harvest truly is great and the laborers are few." What missionary, apostolic zeal is adequate! We need preachers—men who will dare stand at the post of duty and implicitly trust God's promises, men whose hearts are in close sympathy with the people, who love the people, whose heart sentiment is: "I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren." We need the itinerant economy operative. We need to maintain a high standard of ministerial efficiency. We need that "want of acceptability" should arrest a preacher before an assembled Conference of grave divines. We need that every one be searchingly scrutinized. We need that discipline, vigorous, be enforced as respects the preacher; then with propriety and good results with the members. "Then not one will say to another, know ye the Lord, but all will" have a living, experimental sense of sins forgiven, and acceptance with God. "Let us ask for the old paths and walk therein," and in "due season" the "seed sown" will "produce some thirty, some sixty and some an hundred fold." Affectionately,

T. B. White.

MINOR MEANS OF GRACE.

There are great varieties in the ways of shaking hands, produced, no doubt, by temperament, example, education in manners, and other influences. One method is to shake arms and shoulders. It suggests dislocation and is continued indefinitely, accompanied with a gurgling, vehement flow of queries that cannot wait for an answer. This method obtains in Ireland. It is met with in the north of Scotland. A variety of it has been imported, and may be met with out West in this country. Another and opposite form is confined to the hands, and omits the shaking. The digits touch as the fins of two fishes might touch, and then, left to the operation of gravitation, fall. This may be met in England and in good society everywhere. There is a via media—golden mean—in which both verb and noun have their place. It is shaking hands with a firm, fearless grasp, and a little heart tingling down to the finger tips.

I maintain that shaking of hands, rightly administered, is a means of grace. You, my dear sir, are established, and every one knows you to be a solid man. There is a man beside you just fighting his battle and making his way. You know him and nod to him. Take him by the hand, my dear sir. It will do him good; and if he was cast down a little, as men will sometimes be, it may encourage him. "Our minister shook hands with me." What made that bulking fellow, too big to be a boy, too raw to be a man, announce that fact so loudly when he went home? The truth is, for sensible effect on him it was more than the sermon. John Smith has been a hard drinker, but is trying fairly to get out of it. Going down the village street, he meets Mr. Brown, who is "boss at the works above." Mr. Brown shakes hands with "Mr. Smith," in sight of the entire village. Does that do Smith any good? I tell you it is as good to him as one of Mr. Gough's admirable lectures. It says as plainly as if Mr. Brown had written it: "Mr. Smith, you have only to take care of yourself, and you will be a respectable man in spite of all." That makes Smith stronger; and when he goes to church next Sabbath, and looks over at Mr. Brown, he will find it easier to believe God's most loving word:—"Their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more." So "shake hands and be friends"—at market, on the street and, above all, at church. I presume the apostle meant something when he said: "Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss." Some people quit church for want of this means of grace. Everybody looks as if just returned from the North Pole and there had not been time to thaw, and the deacon, who "runs the church" (if anything so lifeless can be said to be run,) had been in command of the party. I suspect the boys sometimes say: "Well, I guess I ought to be good, but if I ever do, I won't be 'long with the deacon." They wait, poor boys, till some one comes along with heart—getting no good in the meantime—whose genial, life-like ways make them "feel kind o' good," and they catch the inspiration, "and run with gladness in the way of God's commandments."

Kindly words are a means of grace, when any Christian speaks them. They do good like a medicine, all the more if spoken unofficially; naturally, feelingly. Nor are they the less so when they are words of deserved rebuke. A lad at college used some Scripture language lightly and for a common purpose. An older student merely said: "Don't use Scripture language irreverently; it is not right." It was said firmly but kindly, and it was never forgotten. One's place sometimes gives unusual weight to one's words. If Mr. Burton, the eminent lawyer, for example, should inquire about the interests, for time and beyond, of the poor woman who cleans out his office; if Mr. Gordon, the great dry goods man, should take the porter into his office, when he comes to explain that his little boy is dead, and talk to him straight out, as a man who was also a Christian might talk to his fellow man, his words would derive weight from his position, and be a means of grace to his poor friend, such as even the clergyman cannot employ. But Mr. Gordon never thought of it. He gives $100 a year to the City Mission, and leaves Mr. Mingins and his staff to attempt on the neglected masses what he and the rest like him should do in detail, and, meantime, he reads an essay, now and then, on the problem of our great cities, and how are they to be evangelized? Build us more chapels, give us more preaching; but, meantime, Christian men and women I consider that, as the masses are fed, by you and others like you employing and paying them in families and companies, so they might possibly be evangelized, if you did your duty to them. Do not fear being compromised as an employer. At present, perhaps, you are compromised as a Christian. That man who travels for you is wondering in his head if you really mean religion, since you never opened your lips to him. Only have true sympathy for others. Make them feel that you love them, and you may say anything to them without loss of character, position or influence. Books lent or given, introductions of a judicious kind, timely acts of good will, expressions of sympathy in seasons of sorrow; these, and a thousand things like these—for which there is no room here just now—may be means of grace to human spirits, through which such thoughts may flow into the soul as will terminate on God in Christ. Too many do not believe the best of all good news, "for anguish of heart and for sore bondage." He who lightens that anguish may be their Moses, leading them out of Egypt, and through the wilderness, and within sight of the promised land.—Methodist.

THE SCHOOLS OF PRUSSIA.

The best schools in Europe are found in Bavaria, in Saxony and in Prussia, and the best in these countries are found in Munich, in Dresden and in Berlin. In these cities the schools are conducted with primary reference to mental development, and as a means to this end, the subjects of study are so classified and taught as to lead to the acquisition of knowledge in a scientific manner. I notice, as I go about to the different school rooms of a large educational institution, that they are all well supplied with the means of illustrating every topic that is taught. In one school room in which botany is studied, I saw the plants for analysis, all growing in pots, which were arranged on shelves about the room. In another room, where zoology is taught, the students were supplied with specimens of the objects they are required to study, and these specimens are so arranged that they are always before the student as he studies, or near him to be used as illustrations as he recites. The teachers do not require rules to be committed to memory at first, and then all mental operations to be performed in a blind obedience to the rule, but they require the rule, or general principle, to be derived from an observation which the pupil is led to make for himself.

In the study of language the pupil is led to the principles of construction by a study of constructions he has himself been led by his teacher to make, and the language is in no case to be used by the pupil until he possesses the ideas and thoughts which the language expresses. The teacher of geometry first teaches by object lessons the principles upon which geometrical reasoning depends. Then the pupil is led to the solution of problems by means of his own reasoning, in which he himself makes an application of the principles he himself has learned. The pupil is trained to observe by observing, to reason by reasoning, and to do by doing. In the principal German schools I have visited, the teachers have for the primary objects of their thoughts, as they teach, the wants of the human mind. The German mind is naturally metaphysical. There is, accordingly, in all plans of German education, a thorough classification of subjects of study. The schools are graded, and the different grades are related to one another in accordance with the plans of study. In Bavaria, Saxony and Prussia there are schools called Volks schools or people's schools, in which the common branches of learning are taught, and which all the German youth are required by law to attend, from the age of seven to ten years in some States, and from six to thirteen in others.

The law is popular with all classes, and is rigidly enforced. The common people, as well as the upper classes, all give a cordial support to the common schools. At eight o'clock in the morning the streets of the city are filled with pupils of the primary schools and students of the higher grades, each with his satchel of books tied to his back, marching cheerfully to his appointed place for study. After eight o'clock no children of school age are to be found away from their classes. Each parish of a town must have at least one primary or elementary school, and most towns, in addition to these elementary schools, have at least one upper burgher school, as it is called.

The German children at school all appear neatly dressed, and, what I am sorry to say, is not always true in my own country, these children are trained to good manners. When a stranger enters a school room the children all rise and remain standing until the stranger is seated, or until they are invited to be seated; and when the visitor leaves, the children all rise and remain standing until he has closed the door behind him. This practice is observed in all the grades of schools, from the first primary up to the senior class in the university.

If a parent is not able to clothe his child properly for school, then he is clothed at the public expense. The children of the rich are found sitting on the same seat with those of the poor, and the noble do not hesitate to allow their children to receive elementary training in the same classes in which the children of the humble are trained, and the boy who has the most brains and explains his lessons best, is the best fellow while his school days last, whatever distinctions may be made in after life. After leaving the common schools, the German youth can enter upon the duties of active life, or they may enter the trade school, where they remain three years, and prepare for the various trades they may choose to follow. Then he can follow his trade, or he can enter the industrial school, and in two years graduate an architect, an engineer, a chemist, etc; or, if he wishes he can pass from the industrial school to the polytechnic school, and prepare to take a high position in the mechanic arts. The student may leave the common school also and enter the gymnasium where Latin, Greek, mathematics, rhetoric, history and chemistry are taught. From the gymnasium the student can take up the study of a profession, or he can go thence to the university, where he can fit himself to take the highest position in the profession he chooses, and where he can know all the subjects of his study as sciences.

In the gymnasia the students are required to study and recite thirty-two hours per week, and before graduating to pass over a course of study which requires nine years to complete. The German teachers, as a class, are better prepared for their work than the teachers of any other country. They are encouraged to fit themselves for a high excellence in their profession by the preference which is always given to teachers who have a professional training, and by the honor which is everywhere accorded to teaching as a profession. In Germany the boys are always educated apart from the girls, and a male teacher is always placed over a class of boys, and usually a female teacher over a class of girls. In the graded schools of the cities the teacher continues over the same class from the time it enters the school until its graduation. The plan requires every teacher to be qualified to teach all the topics found in the whole course of study. Teachers of one State are encouraged by the government to visit the schools of other States, so that any improvement made in the schools in one section may be rapidly introduced into the other sections. Teachers are also encouraged to hold conventions for mutual improvement.—Dresden Cor. Springfield Republican.

Thoughts of God.—Suppose two persons equally desirous to gain your affections—one far distant and not expecting to see you for a long time; the other always present with you, and at liberty to use all means to win your love, able to flatter and gratify you in a thousand ways. Still you prefer the absent one; and that you may keep him in remembrance you often retire by yourself to think of his love to you, and view again and again the mementoes of his affection, to read his letters and pour out your heart in return. Such is now your case: the world is always before you to flatter, promise and please. But if you really prefer to love God you fix your thoughts on Him, often retire for meditation and prayer, and recount the blessant gifts of His providence, and especially His infinite mercy to your soul; you will read frequently His holy word, which is the letter He has sent you as really as if it were directed to you by name.—Payson.

SCIENTIFIC.

Objects of Interest on a Guano Island.

A recent writer from Baker's Island, in the South Pacific, off the coast of Peru about two thousand five hundred miles, gives an interesting account of life on that little patch of terra firma which carries upon its bosom nearly a million tuns of guano.

THE FEATHERED INHABITANTS.

Among the chief objects of interest on the island to a visitor are the birds; and they are all well worthy of study. The sea-fowl are at all times a noisy set, but at night, while the older ones are engaged in the quarrels of love-making, and the young are complaining over their scanty rations, the Babel of their chattering is destructive to the sleep of one unused to such disturbance.

During the first night of my stay on this forlorn spot, it seemed at times as if the house were besieged by innumerable tom-cats; then the tumult resembled the suppressed bleating of goats, and I heard noises as of bats grinding their teeth in rage; again, it was the querulous cooing of doves, and soon the chorus was strengthened by unearthly screams, as of ghouls and demons in mortal agony. But on going forth into the darkness to learn the cause of this infernal serenade, all was apparently calm and serene, and the radiant constellation of the Southern Cross, with the neighboring clouds of Magellan, looked me fully in the face, while, from another quarter of the heavens, the Pleiads shed their "sweet influence" over the scene.

The most quiet time of night with the birds is about daybreak, when they seem to subside into "cat-naps," preparatory to the labors of the day.

By day many of the birds range on tireless wing, over leagues of ocean, in quest of fish. But still the number of those that remain about the island is so great as to defy computation, and as you pass through their haunts, in some places they rise in such clouds as actually to darken the air above you.

The eggs of some of the birds are of fine quality, and are much esteemed by the Americans as well as the Hawaiians on the island. Those of a bird called the nu-e-ko are most valued. This name is an imitative word, derived from the cry of this restless creature, and is applied to it by the Hawaiians, who have quick intuitions in the onomatopoetic matters.

The nu-e-ko is a bird of moderate size, bearing a strong resemblance to the piping plover. It is less phlegmatic and stupid than most of the other birds, and does not waste so much of its time in droning and crooning and love-making.

Yet it is not undomestic in its habits. While the father is engaged in the business of the island, providing for the wants of the family by fishing, the mother is ever hovering near her half fledged young, now inviting them to try their wings in flight, and now hustling them out of sight under some clump of brown grass, and teaching them to lie close in order to escape observation.

The nu-e-ko does not make its home on the guano fields, but prefers the sandy shingle nearer to the ocean. The plumage of its back is brown, spotted with gray, a color so nearly resembling that of the sand upon which it makes its nest, that it might almost escape detection. But, when danger approaches it rises on the wing, uttering its shrill, peculiar cry of "nu-e-ko! nu-e-ko!" and leaves its egg or its young to the tender mercy of the intruder. As it spurns the ground it shows its throat, breast and wings, lined with sheeny feathers, while it whirls and curvets in the air. This bird is plain in its tastes, and for a nest is content with a simple hollow, scooped out of the sand, the warmth of which assists in the incubation of its speckled egg.

The gannet (Sula bassana) is a bird of great power and beauty. The color of the grown bird is white, with wings that are tipped with black. It has a long sharp beak which is serrated and slightly curved at the end, a formidable weapon of attack as well as of defense. Its wings are of immense strength, and when fully spread they span about seven feet from tip to tip. In their fishing expeditions they range for hundreds of miles from their nesting places, and late in the day ships in mid-ocean often see long files of them returning home like heavy laden treasure vessels speeding to port. This sight is regarded by seamen as a sure indication that land lies in the direction of their flight, though it may be scores of leagues away.

In regard to moral character the birds may be divided into two classes—those which make an honest living, and those which are robbers. The gannet stands at the head of the respectable birds, and is a thrifty and honest citizen of the air.

The representative of the thievish class is the frigate pelican, or man-of-war hawk, (Tachypetes aquilus.) This bird has a dense plumage of gloomy black, a light wiry body that seems made for fleetness, and wings of even greater spread than the gannet's. Its tail is deeply forked, its bill is long, sharp and viciously hooked. Audubon regards the frigate-bird as superior perhaps, in power of flight, to any other. It never dives into the ocean after fish, but will sometimes catch them while they are leaping out of the water to escape pursuit. It is often content to glut itself on the dead fish that float on the water, but it depends mostly, for a subsistence, upon robbing other birds. It is interesting to watch them thus occupied.

As evening comes on these pirates may be seen lying in wait about the island for the return of the heavily laden fishing birds. The smaller ones they easily overtake and compel them to disgorge their spoils; but to waylay and levy blackmail upon those powerful galleons, the gannets, is an achievement requiring strategy and address. As the richly laden gannet approaches the coast of his island home he lifts himself to a great height, and steadily oars himself along with his mighty pinions, until he sees his native sands extending in dazzling whiteness below. Now sloping downward in his flight he descends with incredible velocity. In a moment more he will be safe with his affectionate mate, who is awaiting his return to the nest.

But all this time he is watched by the keen eye of the man-of-war hawk, who has stationed himself so as to intercept the gannet in his swift course.

With the quickness of thought the hawk darts upon him, and, not daring to attack boldly in front, he plucks him by the tail, and threatens to upset him, or he seizes him at the back of his neck and lashes him with his long wings. When the poor gannet, who cannot manœuvre so quickly as his opponent, finds himself pursued, he tries to buy his ransom by surrendering a portion of his fishy cargo, which the hawk, swooping down, catches before it has had time to reach the earth. If there is but one hawk this may be a sufficient toll, but if the unwieldy gannet is set upon by a number of these pirates, he utters a cry of real terror and woe, and, rushing through the air with a sound like a rocket in his rapid descent, he seeks to alight on the nearest point of land, well knowing that when once he has a footing on terra firma not even the man-of-war hawk dare come near him.

The man-of-war hawk is provided about its neck and chest with a dilatable sack, of a blood-red color, which it seems to be able to inflate at pleasure. On calm days, about noon, when the trade-wind lulls, giving place to a sea breeze that gently fans the torrid island, these light, feathery birds may sometimes be seen at an immense height balancing themselves for whole hours without apparent motion on their outstretched vans.

Whether they are able to increase their specific levity by inflating their pouches with a gas lighter than the atmosphere, or whether they are sustained by the uprising column of heated air that comes in on all sides from the ocean, is a question I am unable to answer. While floating thus, this bird has its pouch puffed out about its neck, giving it the same appearance as though it had its throat muffled in red flannel.

The most unique and novel bird on the island is the tropic bird or marlin-spike (Phaton phanicurus.)

Its wings are long and its flight very rapid. It is distinguished by two slender, tapering feathers, of rare beauty, which project like a long steering oar from its wedge-shaped tail.

I cannot resist the temptation of alluding to one other bird that abounds here. It is the Mother Carey's chicken (Talassidroma Wilsonii)—an ocean butterfly—the pet and favorite of every true sailor. This bird is about the size of a chimney swallow. Its pretty ways and seemingly innocent affectations are enough to win the heart of almost any one. The society and study of these birds are not without an inspiration.—Scientific American.

How Make Use of Little Opportunities. Dr. Payson once, when traveling, having occasion to call on a lady when she and some of her friends were sitting down to tea, she would have him stay, and treated him very hospitably. When he left, he said: "Madam, you have treated me with much kindness and hospitality, for which I sincerely thank you. Allow me to ask you a question before we part. How do you treat my Master?" This led ultimately to the conversion of the lady and her household.

THE ONE HOLY SPIRIT.

The peculiar mission of John Wesley was to witness to the work of the Holy Spirit. The doctrines which he held differed in no wise from those which were to be found in the Articles of Faith as held by the Church of England. In her homilies were imbedded those great truths of the Reformation which distinguish the Protestant faith; but whatever force they had when uttered by her martyrs and defenders, the time had at length come when a demonstrator of their original meaning was required. That demonstrator Providence raised up in the Wesleys and their coadjutors. To the Church of England Mr. Wesley was no more indebted for his conversion than was St. Paul to the church at Jerusalem for his. While in the other ends of the earth, and when entirely disconnected with all his usual sources of religious knowledge, he received the truth of the doctrine of the new birth; and this must have given to it, in his own mind, the force of an independent discovery. He revolved it, and evolved it experimentally from his heart and his closet, and then preached it as one who had suddenly come into the possession of some momentous lost principle. The place which the Holy Spirit holds in the new dispensation was again recognized. The church was like the Magi when the star disappeared for awhile and left them at fault in the city of Jerusalem; but to the mind of Mr. Wesley the doctrine and experience of the new birth was like the reappearance of that glorious light.—His finger pointed the nation to it. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the sons of God," was the single blast with which his bugle shattered the Alps. The cold barriers of formal religion were burst by the divine power of the life of the word. His own heart was transformed, and the hearts of thousands pulsated with a new being. The spirit of the power of life raised great multitudes from the death of sin to the life of righteousness with the quickness of the last trump. The candlestick, seven-branched, was once again seen in its place, and the "stars" in the hand of the Master. The Shekinah which for generations hung resplendent over the mercy seat, in the golden chamber, its only light, now shone in the hearts of men—"our hearts"—"giving the light of the knowledge of the glory of God"—again discovering the blood that was sprinkled there! Then men felt indeed that they were the temples of the Holy Ghost. Pentecost itself scarcely gave greater witness to the immediate presence of the Holy Spirit.

This, we say, was the one great mission of Mr. Wesley, to declare the work of the Holy Spirit. That he and his followers were looked upon as a species of fanatics or religious enthusiasts is as certain as that the apostles were thought to be drunk at the "third hour" of Pentecost; and, so far as the finding of the world is concerned, this has been its deliberate verdict, from that hour until this, in regard to Methodism. To be sure many other denominations have truly set forth and do now profess faith in the immediate work of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts of men; yet wherever men are converted in any number there are not wanting scoffers and unbelievers—as a recent Episcopal paper quotes, with much satisfaction, the opinion that Methodist revivals and converts do so fall off that it is much "like carrying water in a sieve." And yet if water is not carried this way, woe to this same Episcopal Church that mainly gathers and lives off of those multitudes of Methodists who straggle or faint by the way; for the waste and debris of Methodism give constant employment to the rag-men of the "succession," and they may always be seen, book in hand, stirring among its outside channels, attaching a new value to everything they may chance to pick up. They refuse nothing.

Despite all the ridicule of the world, Satan and sanctified churchmen, Methodism is a revival or nothing. She has no glory but that of the Holy Spirit. Her architecture, her learning, her numbers, her charities, are equaled, may be outstripped, by other Christian churches. If she has only these to show then is she poor indeed. But if she can point to myriads won from the world to Christ, rescued from death and made heirs of eternal life; if her people live godly lives, and then "die well;" if she holds forth the doctrine of justification by faith, and by faith only; if she stands forth as a witness that God has power on earth to forgive sins, so that a sinner may "consciously believe," and feel in himself that he is healed; and if, above all, she realizes and demonstrates that this is the dispensation of the Holy Ghost, then indeed may she be seen standing at her Lord's right hand in all the beauty of Ophir.

It is upon this sublime doctrine that she reposes her faith—the presence of the Spirit; His life working upon the minds and the consciences of men; His truth enforcing power; His quickening energy; His co-operative light shining upon the One Victim for sin; His revealings of the "Beloved;" His searchings of the deep things of God; His tenderness and encouragings, and groanings unutterable; as the One who has in hand all the truth, and all the blood, and all the love, and all the life there ever was, or is, or ever will be in heaven or earth for the benefit and salvation of men. To get a clearer view of this benign ONE Holy Spirit as the Lord now at work, was the design of this week of prayer. To feel that all the material and resources of Moses, Elias and Christ are placed at his disposal; that he takes of the things of Christ as he will, and shows them unto us; that this is His prerogative and that He consummates the work of Christ, and that without Him the mighty labor of the Son of Man would have been in vain—this is the keystone of our faith, and to this we point with an earnestness that earth calls enthusiasm.

PARENTAL QUALIFICATIONS.

The want of qualifications on the part of parents for the care of their children is almost universal. There are few who have sufficient knowledge of physiology and medicine to minister to the wants of the body in sickness or in health. Few have any acquaintance with the nature and causes of disease, or of the most common remedies. Physical education, having for its object the development of the highest degree of health and muscular power, is neither studied nor thought of by the majority of parents. It may be said that an accurate knowledge of these matters is not possible, except in the case of professional men, whose business it is to understand them, and that the ignorance of parents is rendered harmless by the employment of the educated physician. This is partly true.—Some acquaintance, however, with medicine and the laws of health is possible with a great many who are ignorant because they are indifferent; and the mischief which their ignorance does is, much of it, beyond the reach of the doctor's skill when he is consulted. The greatest harm is done in the diet, clothing and exercise, rather than in the sick room and in actual acute attacks of disease. Such information as almost every mother might have acquired would have warded off the disease or have allayed its virulent character. The diseased and suffering lives of thousands are traceable to the parent's ignorance of the most simple principles of hygiene, and the most obvious demands of physical education. Half the children who die may owe their premature death to the same cause. Considering how great and general the want of qualifications is on the part of parents to take care of the bodies of their children, it is rather wonderful that so many of them reach adult age. Affection, as well as accountability, should lead parents to inform themselves on those subjects which may aid them in preserving the lives and health of their children.

In the education of the mind the absence of parental qualifications is general. This, to a large extent, may be the parent's misfortune.—They were themselves without early advantages, and they must depend entirely upon other teachers for the instruction of their children. It is a misfortune to be compelled to leave this so entirely to others as not to be able to judge of the attainments of the children or the capacity and faithfulness of their instructors. That all, or that most parents should be qualified to take their children through a literary and classical course is not reasonable to expect, nor would time and circumstances permit their personal attention to this extent. But if they were thus competent they would be in a condition at least to overlook and direct with wisdom, and to judge of that course of instruction which is best for each child. In these matters most parents are absolutely at the mercy of teachers, publicly or privately employed, who may be, and often are, without either the interest or the discretion needful to do justice to the subjects of their care. Parents are often terribly deceived concerning the progress of their children, and are wofully cheated by those whom they pay to instruct them, because they are incapable of detecting the negligence of the one or the fraud of the other. It is too late, however, for parents generally to acquire an education, that they may be capable of educating their children. Much, however, can be done by many in the study of the subject of education, and by a course of self-instruction with a view to the better education of their offspring. There are not many who may not qualify themselves to carry their children through the first ten years of their schooling, in the way of oversight and thorough examination. The mother may store her memory with such mental food as the child-mind hungers for, and the father may shape his reading and observations with reference to the inquisitive fledglings who are beginning to adjust their pinions for the flights of thought. With due allowance for what paid teachers and schools can do, the parent's office in the mental education of children is exceedingly important. Low as is the standard of qualification, it is often the result of negligence and culpable indifference.

Turning to the moral interests of the young, we have to consider a different class of parental qualifications, and the most important of all. Personal piety is the grand essential here. No parent can lead the young to Christ unless he has himself become a disciple. Beyond the fact of a personal and experimental knowledge of religion there is a demand for knowledge of the Bible, and acquaintance with the doctrines of the Gospel. An enlightened and intelligent Christian experience is requisite for the instruction of others. Conscientious parents will certainly give attention to reading in the standard religious literature of the church; they will thoroughly inform themselves in the history, biography and doctrines of the divine Word; and they will seek a more profound spirituality in their own souls, with distinct reference to the better instruction and the salvation of their children. The church, in her ministry and Sunday schools, cannot supply the lack of parental qualification. The children of neglected homes, and of ungodly parents, find in the Sunday school and the ministry instruction, and many are saved by these means. But there is no efficient substitute for the care of religious parents. Home is the real beginning and nursery of piety, and parental influence is the most potent of all instrumentalities. Religious parents do not always feel this truth so as to incite them to special effort in qualifying themselves to instruct their children in righteousness. When we reflect upon the culpable negligence of many religious people to prepare themselves for the moral education of their children, and when we consider the blemishes and infirmities of others in their private walk, it is not strange that some go out from homes of reputed piety without the abiding impress of a regenerated nature.

Unbelieving parents are the greatest sinners of all. We can think of nothing affecting human accountability which more aggravates the sin of impenitence. They are without any qualification whatever to guide their children religiously, and the force of example is against the claims of the Gospel. No matter what professed friendship they may have for religion, nor what moral influences they may invoke, nor what may be the tenor of their precepts, the fact that they are themselves not Christians neutralizes all. If the parental relation in such cases be not a crime, it at least is the occasion of the most aggravated guilt. To younger parents these reflections have an obvious application. They must improve their qualifications to discharge their duties in the physical, mental and religious education of their children. In none of these respects can their responsibility be altogether devolved upon others. Parents must seek to combine in themselves something of the doctor, the school teacher and the preacher. They must aim to qualify themselves for the most difficult and the most responsible of all human relations. In the spiritual welfare of their children, especially, their prayerful study should be to reach the piety and wisdom so much demanded. In this, more than in any other means, lies the regeneration of the world. Christian parents can do much by faithfulness in the instruction of their children, and by enlightened and hearty co-operation with the church. The culpable negligence and inefficiency which are found at the fountain of all human influence, are enough to account for the comparative failure of other gracious instrumentalities, and the widespread wickedness of the times.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BRIEF NARRATIVE OF FACTS RELATIVE TO THE NEW ORPHAN HOUSES (FOR 2,050 CHILDREN) AT BRISTOL, and the other Objects of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad. By George Muller. London: J. Nisbet & Co. 1868.

We are indebted to the Hon. J. McVea, who is now in Europe seeking health, for this interesting report of the year's operations of that most wonderful man of faith, George Muller. Besides the immense orphan asylum under his care, he now supports, by the same power of daily trust in God, eight missionaries in British Guiana, four in China, five in the East Indies, nine in Italy, and eighty-two in Great Britain. We quote a passage from the first page of this annual report. For fuller information we refer the reader to a work which we have sent to us for notice by R. J. Harp, agent Southern Methodist Publishing House, 112 Camp street, entitled MULLER'S LIFE OF TRUST, written by himself. The practical test of what prayer and faith are worth in supplying a man with the means of doing good to the bodies and souls of men was never demonstrated more impressively or thoroughly than in the experience and success of the author. "How to feed two thousand children every day in the year, by the right use of one clause in the Lord's prayer, and by that alone, is the discovery which this godly German has made. We cannot pretend to track him along this spiritual pathway, so that the reader can even see dimly the steps of his ascent; but we advise every man who is afraid, for himself or his children, that they will yet come to want, to buy this book and gird up the loins of his faith.

My soul does magnify the Lord, for the help which He has so graciously been pleased to grant to me during another year! Difficulties, greater than ever I had them for the previous thirty-three years, have been overcome during the past year, by praying and faith; work, which is increasing with every year more and more, has not been allowed to overwhelm me; and expenses greater than during any previous year, amounting altogether from May 27, 1867, to May 26, 1868, to £41,310 16s. 8½d., have been met, without my ever being unable to satisfy to the full at once all demands, though sometimes amounting to more than £3,000 at a time. We are now going on in the thirty-fifth year of this institution, proving, day by day, that the living God of the Bible is still the living God. Elijah has long since been taken up into heaven, but the God of Elijah lives; and all, who truly depend upon Him, will find Him ever ready to help them.

By the grace of God we hold fast the principles on which, in March, 1834, the Scriptural Knowledge Institution was formed, of which we would here only refer to the following. 1. God himself was from the beginning sought to be the Patron of this institution; and He alone is our Patron still. We are grateful for any kindness manifested toward this institution, even the least, whether in the way of donations or otherwise; but we are with every succeeding year more and more convinced, that, if we would really prosper, God must not theoretically only, but practically, be honored above every one, even the most exalted or rich persons; and He must be confided in, and not any human being. And how have we succeeded, you may ask, esteemed reader, with the living God alone as our Patron? All who know the small and most insignificant beginning of the institution bear us witness that we have not in vain set up our banners in the name of our God, and confided in His power and willingness to help us. About £400,000 the Lord has been pleased to send into our treasury, in answer to prayer, since we began to confide in Him alone. 2. We decided, in particular also, from the beginning, never to go beyond the means which we had actually in hand, whilst enlarging the field of labor. To this we have adhered, and habitually adhered; which has kept us from going before the Lord. Sometimes we have had to wait on God a long time before the means were obtained, which it appeared to us desirable to have; but they have always been sent to us in the end. We judged it to be for the glory of God, patiently to wait His time, and not to make haste in doing His work, by contracting debt. This happy way, this peaceful way, this prosperous way, this scriptural way, we affectionately commend to all our brethren in Christ, especially to our younger brethren, who seek to work for God; for we have proved its blessedness for about thirty-eight years.

The reader who is unacquainted with the previous reports, and who might ask, "And what has been done with the about £400,000 which has been given for the funds of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad?" is respectfully informed, that above sixteen thousand five hundred children or grown up persons have been taught in the various schools, entirely supported by the institution; more than forty four thousand and five hundred copies of the Bible, above forty thousand and six hundred New Testaments, and above twenty thousand other smaller portions of the Holy Scriptures, in various languages, have been circulated since the formation of the institution; and about thirty one millions of tracts and books, likewise in several languages, have been circulated. There have been, likewise, from the commencement, missionaries assisted by the funds of the institution, and of late years more than one hundred and twenty in number. On this object alone £76,137 have been expended from the beginning. Also two thousand four hundred and twelve orphans have been under our care, and five large houses, at an expense of above £110,000, have been erected, for the accommodation of two thousand and fifty orphans. With regard to the spiritual results, eternity alone can unfold them; yet, even in so far as we have already seen fruit, we have abundant cause for praise and thanksgiving.

We have from the publishers, through Mr. George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, the following new books:

THE PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. By Nathaniel Sands. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 8vo, pp. 60.

This well bound essay is an argument in the interest of the natural science course as against the ordinary college curriculum.

THE PARSER AND ANALYZER By Francis A. March. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869.

An 18mo of 86 pages, with diagrams and suggestive pictures, such as were used in teaching grammar to deaf mutes. The analysis of sentences is exhausting and minute.

HETTY. By Henry Kingsley. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Pp. 69

This is No. 325 of the Library of Select Novels, and is, in tone and style, a good sample of this excellent writer.

From the same publishers :

CORD AND CREESE. By the author of the Dodge Club. With illustrations. Octavo pamphlet. Pp. 190. 1869.

A sensational, harrowing tale of strangling, drowning and shooting; full of despair, suspicion, jealousy and thwarted love.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP ON HIS WAY THROUGH THE WORLD. By William M. Thackeray. With illustrations by the author. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 8vo, pp. 265.

Everything from the pen of this dissector of human frailties has interest for those who continually say: "Who will show us any good?" The author was the embodiment of worldliness; he believed not in either men or women, and we fear that he has added nothing to earth but a livelier expression of its own hollowness and misery. One cannot be truly benefited by the discovery of the extent of his own evil nature, or of the sin there is in the world, unless with this knowledge he can be shown how to escape the evil, and how to possess the good. We cannot commend any writer who persistently ignores the great truths of the Gospel, and the remedy which God has provided for the ills and the evils of humanity. Mr. Thackeray does this, and his creations are, therefore, not true to nature, because they are human beings without any genuine religious sentiments.

From the same publishers :

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG By Charles Reade. 8vo, pp. 140.

An awkward young fellow of honest mold at length succeeds in wedding a fashionable, rich young lady against her own original prejudice, and that of her friends—pleasantly spun out—is the sum of the story. If life were five times as long as it is there might be found time to read such a book, say once in five years.

We have from the Southern Publishing House, 112 Camp street, R. J. Harp, agent :

THE PILLAR OF FIRE, OR ISRAEL IN BONDAGE By Rev. J. H. Ingraham. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1869. 12mo, pp. 596.

A Tyrian prince visits the court of Egypt during the time of the Pharaohs. He there sees "the son of Pharaoh's daughter"—Moses. All the grandeur of the Egyptian civilizations furnishes the substance of the author's pages. The field is a most interesting one, and the rich discoveries of modern times in those hieroglyphic records upon the deep cut obelisks, the painted catacombs, the grand avennes and propylons of the valley of the Nile furnish the author with a vast amount of material for reproducing to the imagination the daily life of the Lawgiver before he had identified himself with the fortunes of Israel—"choosing" their affliction rather than the "pleasures" of Egypt.

THE THRONE OF DAVID.

This we have also from 112 Camp street. By the same publishers The author illustrates the grandeur of Hebraic history, when it was in its flower—the time of David and Solomon, especially the more eventful life of David. Those who seldom read the Old Testament may be attracted to it by this familiar presentation of the gorgeous facts that Israelitish history everywhere offers.

THOUSANDS of Christian hearts in the four quarters of the world will be touched at hearing of the death of a poor old blind man in eastern Turkey—a humble preacher, whose meagre salary was less than $100 a year, but whose influence for Christ's cause has been greater than that of many an eloquent and fashionable pulpit orator. Blind Hohannes died March 12, at Havadoric, an out station of Bitlis, in eastern Turkey. He was a man mighty in the Scriptures, and, though blind, could quote almost any passage by chapter and verse. But he was especially remarkable for the influence which he exerted among the mission churches of Turkey for independence of outside aid. His efforts in behalf of the practice of voluntary tithee have been the key note of those churches' success, and the remarkable sermon on that subject, reported by Miss West in the Missionary Herald for October, and reprinted so many times in England and America, has made him widely known and honored in places of which he never heard. The missions in India are assuming new success as they adopt the principles of that sermon which has been read in the Hindoo churches. He died a sweet death in that Koordish village of forty houses, where now are sixty just learning to read, though it is but a very few years since those mountaineers, like their neighbors, were notorious for their robberies and murders. Armenians, as well as Protestants, were genuine mourners at his grave, and hail him buried in their own burial ground. When his faith and his self-denial shall animate our churches, every good work will go on apace.—Independent.

THE rays of the sun shine upon the dust and mud, but they are not soiled by them. So a holy soul, while it remains holy, may mingle with the vileness of the world, and yet be pure in itself.

MARRIED.

On the evening of the 29th July, at the residence of the bride's mother, by Rev. Thomas J. Upton, Mr. T. T. ZIMMERMAN to Miss EMMA ANGEL, both of Minden.

OBITUARIES.

REV. S. LEE has gone to his rest. He was born November 25, 1816, in Poughkeepsie, New York. At an early age he came to the Southern States; was converted in and soon connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Being licensed to preach, he was an active local preacher up to the time of his demise. During the last few years he was pastor of various little flocks in and around Pointe-a-La-Hache, Plaquemine parish, Louisiana.

His death occurred on June 24, 1869—just five weeks after losing his only son, who was accidentally drowned in the Mississippi. J. B. A. AHRENS.

PATTIE BOYD, youngest daughter of John J. Price, deceased, and Sister Sarah R. Price, was born in Marengo county, Alabama, March 11, 1850; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Enterprise, Mississippi, October, 1866; was married to J. E. Boyd, January 28, 1869, and died June 16, 1869.

For several years she was a member of the Sunday school in this place, where she was beloved by both scholars and teachers. Truly, her life on earth was but a span—

"An inch or two of time."

Still she lives in the memory of many friends, who feel that they, too, are homeward bound; and not only so, but her redeemed spirit lives in reality in the home of the blessed, high up in that kingdom prepared for all who love the Lord Jesus Christ.

Her clay tenement was deposited in the cemetery at this place, there to "—— slumber in the ground

Till the last trumpet's joyful sound;
Then burst the chains with sweet surprise,
And in her Saviour's image rise."

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

OUR MOTHER.

Fourscore years and ten!
She has passed the waters cold;
Now resting in her Saviour's arms,
She is no longer old.

Long she listened for his footsteps,
Echoing from those streets of gold--
Now just within the pearly gates,
She is no longer old.

The pilgrim staff is broken--
The worn out garment fold
And lay away forever;
She is no longer old.

Farewell, farewell, our mother!
Our greatest joy is told
As we fold her aged hands and say,
"She is no longer old!"

THE DYING HEIRESS.

Alice was an only child, an heiress. Lovely and accomplished, she lived for this world, and this world offered her no ordinary attractions. Idolized by her parents, and beloved by an accepted suitor, she knew not the meaning of a wish ungratified. But an unexpected visitor arrived at the mansion. A pale messenger came to Alice. A hectic flush suffused her beautiful face, rendering it, if possible, more lovely still. The eye of affection soon perceived that the seeds of consumption had been laid. Alice sank by degrees, and as she lay on her couch, surrounded with all the luxuries that wealth could procure, began to think how sad it was to leave her loving friends and all her brilliant prospects, and to go—where? where?

She could not find an answer satisfactory to her soul.

She sent for the High Church clergyman. He came. The family was assembled.

He produced a missal. They all kneeled round the bed. He intoned the service for the sick. Having received her confession, and pronounced absolution, he with peculiar genuflexions, administered the sacrament, and placing his hands on her, blessed her, and pronounced her a good child of the church. He departed, perfectly satisfied with his own performances, and assuring the parents that all was right. Was Alice satisfied? She had submitted to all. She had endeavored to join in the service, but in her inmost soul she felt a blank.

"Father," said she, "I am going to die. Where am I going?"

The father gave no reply.

"Mother, darling, can you tell me what I am to do to get to heaven?"

No reply save tears.

"William, you who were to be the guide of my life, can you tell me anything of the future?"

No response.

"I'm lost!" she exclaimed. "Am I not, father? Is there any one who can tell me what I must do to be saved?"

At length the father spoke.

"My child, you have always been a dutiful daughter, and have never grieved your parents. You have regularly attended the Abbey church, and helped in its services, and the minister has performed the rites of the church, and expressed himself satisfied with your state."

"Alas! father, I feel that is not enough. It is no rest to my soul. It is hollow—it is not real. O! I am going to die, and I know not where I am going. O, the blackness of the darkness! Can no one tell me what I can do to be saved?"

Blank despair was depicted on her countenance. Misery overshadowed the circle. They were overtaken by a real danger. Death was in their midst. Eternity was looming before them. They knew not how to answer the appeal of an immortal soul, awakened to a sense of sin—to a dread of appearing before God, to the terrors of hell.

Alice was attended by a little maid, who was in the habit of frequenting a meeting held in a barn in the village, where prayer and praise were offered up in simplicity, and where they sang the old hymns:

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains;"

and

"I lay my sins on Jesus,
The spotless Lamb of God;
He bears them all and frees us and where she heard words that reminded her of the good old pastor.
From the accursed load;"

She longed to tell her mistress that she might "wash and be clean," but felt diffident. At last she took courage, and just as the Israelitish captive said unto Naaman's wife, "Would God my lord were with the propbet that is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy," she told her mistress, "There is a preacher in the village who proclaims salvation through faith in Jesus Christ, and urges us to accept the forgiveness freely offered in the Gospel."

"O that I could see him!" exclaimed the dying girl.

Alice besought her father to invite the strange preacher to their house; though he thought it extraordinary, her wish was law.

Again the family were assembled, and the man of God entered the room. The dying girl, raising herself, appealed to him. "Can you tell me what I must do to obtain rest for my soul, and die in peace with God?"

"I fear I cannot!"

Alice fell back. "Alas!" said she, "and is it so? Is there no hope for me?"

"Stay," said he, "though I cannot tell you what you can do to be saved, I can tell you what has been done for you.

"Jesus Christ, the Saviour God, has completely finished a work by which lost and helpless sinners may be righteously saved. God, who is love, saw us in our lost and ruined state. He pitied us, and in love and compassion sent Jesus to die for us. 'God so loved the world that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' He shed His precious blood on the accursed tree, in the stead and place of sinners, that they might be pardoned and saved.—'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.'"

"And have I nothing to do?"

"Nothing but to believe. No doing, working, praying, giving or abstaining, can give relief to a conscience burdened with a sense of guilt, or rest to the troubled heart. It is not a work done in you by yourself, but a work done for you by another, long, long ago. Jesus has completed the work of our redemption. He hath said, 'It is finished.' Through faith in Him you have pardon. It is impossible for a sinner to do aught to save himself. It is impossible to add anything to the perfect work of Christ. Doing is not God's way of salvation, but ceasing from doing, and believing what God in Christ has already done for you. 'God has given unto us eternal life, and this life is in His Son.'"

"I do believe that Jesus died on the cross for sinners; but how am I to know that God has accepted me?"

"Jesus, the God man, has ascended into heaven. He has presented His blood before God, and has been accepted for us; and when you believe, you are accepted in Him."

The awakened sinner listened with breathless attention. She received the word of God, which revealed Christ to her soul. The glad tidings fell as balm upon her wounded spirit. Her face was lit up with heaven's sunlight. Looking upward, she exclaimed, "O, what love! what grace!

'Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress.'"

And in a few days she departed to be with Christ.

Reader, were you in similar circumstances—were you on your death-bed—could you die happy, believing in Jesus? Are you now resting on His finished atoning sacrifice?—British Herald.

The Bustee district of India, between Bengal and Oude, is infamous for the practice of infanticide, which does not seem to have been mitigated since the British took possession in 1801. A late official report says that "a large portion of the district is, in fact, a vast charnel house, and the wholesale murder of infant daughters is merely an ordinary domestic arrangement." The per centage of boys to girls is found to be seventy-nine to twenty-one. In eighty-five suspicious villages of these Lurujbansis, a very high Rajput caste and the greatest offenders, Mr. H. found one thousand and eighty-six boys to one hundred and sixty-eight girls. In eight villages of the Goutums not a girl was found, and in fifteen there had not been a marriage for more than ten years. Ramjeawan Pandit, a loyal and respectable native of a Lurujbansi village, said: "I have lived near the place, man and boy, close on eighty years; and I never saw a marriage in it." The gravest reflection, however, is that the government—though the existence of the practice has been reported officially—has during the space of a dozen years employed no special agency, reformatory or coercive, to put down the crime. We have heard of no missionary in that district.

The Presbyterian tells of a man who lived many years ago in Clyde, Wayne county, New York, of good education and considerable property, whose besetting sin was penuriousness. He was a sound Presbyterian, but strenuously opposed to all societies requiring contributions of money to keep them alive—not even excepting missionary societies. Once he attended the monthly concert of prayer for foreign missions, when the minister asked him to pray. He complied at once, and made a prayer after the usual style, entirely unexceptionable until the very close, when his ruling idea came out in these words: "O Lord, may we all act in such a manner that by our lives we may preach Christ and Him crucified to the whole world, and thus save considerable expense."

FARM AND GARDEN.

PROPAGATION OF FISH.

A very good degree of success is attending the efforts of commissions appointed by several States to propagate choice varieties of fish lately menaced with extermination. The waters of the Merrimack river are being rapidly restocked. A large number of young salmon, artificially propagated by Dr. Fletcher, of Concord, New Hampshire, are now in the head waters of the river, and will descend next spring to the ocean over the fishways, and return in the fall weighing from five to seven pounds each. J. S. Robinson, of the same State, has forty thousand embryo fish in the hatching boxes and one hundred thousand trout ova, all promising well; and the commissioners will build fishways on the Connecticut, Saco and other rivers of New England next year, preparatory to stocking them with salmon, trout and shad.

S. H. Ainsworth, of West Bloomfield, New York, who has given much attention to the subject, writes at much length through the columns of the Rochester Union and Advertiser, referring to the remarkable successes achieved by Seth Green, of Mumford, New York, in rearing fish, and predicting a great increase among the piscatory tribes, if efforts to this end are continued. We copy as follows:

He put from fifty thousand to one hundred thousand spawn in the box at a time, and hatched in some instances as high as nine hundred and ninety-nine in one thousand! In this manner he hatched from two million to six million daily, and continued to do so until he turned over forty million young shad into the river.

With Mr. Green's hatching boxes a thousand millions of shad can be turned into each river yearly with little expense to each State, when everything is well systematized and arranged for business.

These commissioners, with energy and perseverance, will soon improve and restock all the rivers of the Eastern States with salmon, brook trout and shad, which in time will be worth millions of dollars as food, and revenue to the inhabitants.

It costs nothing to feed these fish; salmon and shad get their living and make all their growth in the boundless ocean, where there is abundant room and food for untold millions. They come from their feeding grounds in the ocean each year, fat and delicious, and return, after spawning, poor and worthless.

All of the rivers in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, once filled with this variety of fish, can be restocked as cheaply and abundantly as the rivers of New England or Europe.

The State of New York can improve the Hudson and its tributaries, and all the rivers discharging their waters into Lakes Ontario and Champlain, and the St. Lawrence, and restock them without the assistance of any other State. The Hudson can be filled with shad at once as high as Troy, as there are no dams to impede their passage to that point. By constructing fishways over the falls and dams on the Mohawk and upper Hudson, and placing young shad and salmon in their head waters, they will soon be plenty to the very sources of these rivers.

The writer remembers when salmon were taken in the Oswego river at Fulton by the hundred in an evening with a single spear, by torchlight; and when large numbers were taken in scoop nets at the Oswego Falls, as they fell back when trying to jump over them. They were so numerous some seasons that salmon weighing from twelve to fifteen pounds were sold for one shilling each. They then ascended all the tributaries of this river where dams did not obstruct their passage.

The dam built by the State to improve the river for the Oswego canal cut off the ascent of this fish, and there have been none seen above the big dam since, and now all have left the mouth of the river.

Salmon, Black and other rivers farther north, abounded in this fish until obstructed by mill dams. By constructing the needed fishways the finny tribe may be restored to these rivers as in former years.

Fishways can be erected over the fall of the Genesee, so that salmon can ascend them with ease to the spawning grounds in its head waters. This fish delight to haunt and sport in just such rapid, foaming waters as the Genesee below the falls at Rochester and Portage. Only build the necessary fishways and introduce the young fry, and true to instinct they will return yearly.

Years ago shad were plentiful in the Susquehanna and its branches in this State. At Elmira they were taken in the Chemung each spring by the thousands, but the dam drove them back long since. Improve this river and the Delaware, and place the ova of the shad, salmon and brook trout in their head waters, and we shall have the pleasure of seeing them very abundant at no distant day.

To improve the rivers of the States enumerated, it will be necessary for each one to appoint commissioners to build the requisite fishways and stock the rivers, and make appropriations to meet the expense; also to enact laws and penalties, compelling the owners of dams to place fishways over them and to protect the fish, etc.—Day Book.

The Wheat Crop.—Before the end of this week nineteen twentieths of all the wheat crop of North America will be harvested and secured. The breadth sown may be assumed to be greater by twenty per cent. than that of any former year, and the average yield per acre will in all probability prove much larger than the average of former years. This enormous crop is due mainly to these causes:

1. The high price of wheat last winter has stimulated this production.

2. The dullness of trade in cities and the diminished profits on manufactures has drawn capital and enterprise into farming.

3. Labor-saving machines have improved in quality, lessened in cost, and become more generally used. On most of Western farms of three hundred acres or more will be found a reaper, a mower and a thrasher. Even the smaller farms, by co-operation, have each the use of these valuable adjuncts, although not able each to own them independently.

4. While improved and cheapened machinery has enhanced the effect of labor, that labor has been more plentiful than ever. "Hard times" drove many thousands from cities to seek a subsistence by a new form of labor. Emigrants who formerly stopped in the Eastern cities, or sought homes east of the mountains, have this year gone directly to Western farms.

5. The extension of railroads has made grain growing profitable on millions of acres of rich virgin soil heretofore neglected for want of access to market. From the cheapness of transportation a bushel of wheat in western Kansas is worth but a few cents less than in eastern Ohio.

6. There is a growing appreciation of scientific and thorough farming, and an increased desire to employ fertilizers wherever profitable.

7. That form of accumulation that is realized in the steadily increasing money value of lands from year to year is beginning to be better understood and more justly valued. To get a section of good land anywhere and keep it fifteen years is to make a small fortune. This conviction is going home to the minds of very many thousands of Eastern farmers of small means who desire to improve their condition, and who cannot afford to pay the prices asked for lands in the older States of the North. They are transferring their labor, their families and their capitals to the West year by year, in a steadily increasing tide of emigration.—New Orleans Bulletin, August 9.

Antidote for the Poison of Snakes. About twenty years ago the Smithsonian Institute embarked in a series of experiments testing the practicability of neutralizing the poison of snakes, founded purely on chemical bases, which developed great results. The fact was illustrated that the poison of the most venomous rattlesnake can be neutralized in an incredibly short time. After the most extraordinary results from all the experiments witnessed, there was promulgated from the Institute, at the time above mentioned, the following simple but certain cure for snake bites, and for the sting of all kinds of insects: Thirty grains of iodine potassium, thirty grains of iodine, one ounce of water; applied externally to the wound by saturating lint or batting, the same to be kept moist with the antidote until the cure is effected, which will be in one hour, and sometimes instantly. The bitten limb should be corded tight to prevent circulation. The liquid should be kept in a vial with a glass stopper.

Miss Sheddon is a lady famous in England because she always appears as her own advocate in an interminable cause known for years back as the "Sheddon Legitimacy Case." Lately she addressed the judges for fourteen successive days, and at last only came to a stop because she got sick and fainted. Miss Sheddon is rather an attractive-looking woman, very lady-like in manner, and might still be called young by those who were disposed to compliment her. She has perfectly mastered all the legal arguments and technicalities of her case, and we need hardly say that she has a very pretty gift of speech.

There is a plow in Peoria, Illinois, that will cut thirty-two inches wide and eighteen inches deep. From the point to the hinder end of the mold board it is seven feet, and it requires sixteen oxen to draw it. It was built for ditching purposes.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the fire is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a shallow Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. For sale by G. W. W. GOODWYN, which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.

All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed. Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

In her outfit each pupil should be provided with toilet boxes towels, napkins, sheets, pillow cases and blankets or comforts. She should also bring knife, fork, spoon, cup and napkin ring.

All articles and clothing brought to the Seminary should be distinctly marked, lists of which should be permanently placed on some part of the trunk convenient for reference. The scholastic year commences OCTOBER 1 and ends in July.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.
ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

Letter from Major J. T. Hester, of Alabama:

AUBURN, ALA., April 4, 1869.

MESSRS JOHN DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents.: I have received so much benefit from "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid" that I feel it my duty to let you know it. I had an attack of Typhoid Fever, and with it a most stubborn case of Erysipelas, and (was confined to my bed near two months, suffering the most intense pain all the time from Erysipelas; and after exhausting the many prescriptions of my physician, he finally commenced the use of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, and soon found that I was being improved by its use, and continued to use it, and am nearly well. I consider it the most valuable medicine for the diseases and purposes for which it is made that is sold. I also used it most successfully on my little son, who was severely burned, and I do assure you that it was from this medicine alone that I could get any relief from my distressing attack of Erysipelas.

I do not write you this as a certificate for publication, but as a duty that I feel I owe to Professor Darby and his invaluable medicine.

I shall never be without it again if I can by any possible means get it.

I hope you are succeeding, and will make a fortune.

Very truly yours,
J. T. HESTER.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited very little change since our last report. Only a limited business has been done in the wholesale trade. Operations in our leading staple have been restricted by the supplies being nearly exhausted. There have been further receipts of new crop, and, excluding the two bales from Texas, forwarded to New York through this port, the receipts thus far embrace 14 bales, against 40 to the corresponding date last year. Only a trifling business has been done in sugar, there having been very few receipts, and the stock on hand held at full prices. Nothing of any moment has been reported in molasses. Western produce has continued quiet, with no supplies to bring out buyers for export. There have been further receipts of bulk flour and corn, but the sales have been to limited extent.

The weather has been very warm, with daily showers. The accounts from the country continue to report worms at various points, but thus far without any damage, unless in one or two exceptional cases. There is, nevertheless, no little uneasiness, and the most sanguine admit that the crop is yet subject to contingencies which may curtail it. We meet with few or none in our cotton circles who estimate over 2,750,000 bales, and many are much lower in their views. There is a good deal of speculation with regard to the injury the crop has suffered in South Carolina Florida and Georgia. From other districts the intelligence is so far highly favorable. The accounts from our sugar districts are more cheering, and there is a general anticipation of a liberal yield.

The river has risen four inches since our last report, and is now three feet two inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 13th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	125
Lake		20
Mobile		192
Total		337

On Saturday the sales were confined to 109 bales, at 28½c. for good ordinary, and 29, 29½ and 30c. for low middling but including two bales new crop—one which classed low middling at 32c., and one of strict middling to good middling at 33c. The former was shipped to St. Louis, and the latter to New York. On Monday only 75 bales changed hands, barely good ordinary selling at 28 to 28¼c., a good style of good ordinary at 28½c., good ordinary to low middling at 29¼ and 30c. On Tuesday there was more inquiry, and most of the supply on sale was taken at 28, 28¼ and 28½c. for good ordinary, 29, 29½ and 30c. for low middling, and a higher rate for strict low middling. The sales embraced 326 bales, leaving barely 75 unsold.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 510 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 795,117 bales, against 587,189 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 82,796 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 25,019 bales to France, and of 6,443 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 244,346 to Great Britain.

SUGAR.—Last season's crop of Louisiana sugar is now about all in, and there have been very light receipts since our last review.

CORN.—The market is in better supply, but the demand is limited.

MONETARY.—Gold opened at 132½ to 132⅝, (against 133½ at New York,) and closed at 132 to 132¼.

Operations in silver have been of limited extent, the sales reported being $500 in American half dollars at 130, $2,600 at 129½ and 129⅝, and $10,000 Mexican dollars at 137¾. American half dollars are quoted at 128¾ to 129, and Mexican dollars at 3⅛ to 3⅝ per cent. premium in gold.

The only sales of stocks reported are 125 shares Slaughter House at $18 25, and 100 at $18.

The sales of bonds include $3,500 United States 5 20s of '65 at 120½, and $10,000 Jackson Railroad first mortgage at 80¼.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Judge Lewis Dent, brother-in-law of the President, and an applicant for gubernatorial honors in Mississippi, is on the war path. The judge says he represents the Conservative Republican party, of which his brother-in-law, President Grant, is the head and centre. He blames Boutwell for Grant's defection in the Tarbell conversation, and has addressed that gentleman the following highly interesting and spicy letter:

"Hon. Geo. Boutwell, Secretary of Treasury:

"SIR: I shall make little apology for asking your attention to my letter, and less for the nature of its contents. You were the first to deny the political orthodoxy of my friends and myself, and by all the rules of the forum I am entitled to a defense. Again, you hold an office of the Republic, and your acts, therefore, are legitimate subjects of criticism by the humblest citizen thereof. But in some respects we are alike; for instance, we are both aspirants for place, with this difference—you aim to be the next President, with every assurance of success, except in the opinion of the people; while I seek an humbler place, with my hopes in disastrous eclipse, except in the judgment of Mississippi. So, in the probable results of the future we both stand adverse to the judgment of the country.

"In the pursuit of your ambition you are unscrupulous as to the means of your success. Your organ, the New York Sun, in the same breath ridicules the capacity of your master, and dwells with emphasis on your peculiar fitness for the office.

"Your execllent tool, Mr. Tullock, became so reckless in the manipulation of your department in the interest of your ambition, and so defiant of the wishes of the President and the country, that to save yourself from an explosion of popular indignation you found it convenient to transfer him to another sphere of scandalous activity, where his talents might be exerted with equally good effect, and less effrontery.

"Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi and Texas, not to mention anything so humble as myself, were obstructions in the way of your success, because, through President Grant's intervention in excluding the proscriptive clauses from their organic laws, these States are brought into the Union firmly welded to his support. Now, this is in direct conflict with your systematized plans; for what General Grant gets in the next election, clearly, Mr. Boutwell will not get; and therefore you have denounced the Conservative Republicans who are for Grant, that you may obtain the proscriptive Republicans, who are for Boutwell; and by some strange, dexterous management, and occult political strategy, you have so worked upon the confidence of the President as to cause him to flourish the club with which you intend to break his head, by inducing him to join you in denunciation of the Conservative Republicans, a party created by his magnanimity, and triumphant through his management.

"But, sir, your purpose is easily discerned, and has a twofold object, namely, to destroy the National Republican party in the South, and then to reconstruct from its shattered fragments a Boutwell party, with no Richmond in the field to strike for your crown. But if you cannot succeed in this scheme of desperate enterprise, you mean to ruin—a result, from present appearances, much more likely to be reached.

"Your official intervention for Wells, for instance, gave thirty thousand majority to Walker.—Your letter to Stokes gave Tennessee to Senter by an overwhelming vote of seventy thousand. Your marvelous political sagacity, now active in Mississippi and Texas, will report your calamity, and again overwhelm you with discomfiture and defeat. Superadd to these results of your unapproachable folly the imposition on these States of your iron-clad oath, and the alienation is complete, landing them all-in the outstretched arms of Democracy.

"But the consequence of your folly does not end here. Ohio and Pennsylvania and others will follow, decide their political status in October, and the North will echo back the condemnation of the South, and peal in your ears this fact, that there is still left enough of the incorruptible virtue of the Republic to rebuke you for a wanton repression of that most sacred right, the elective franchise.

"But, sir, this will not deter you from your mad course. You will still persist until every prop that supports our party is stricken away, and the whole grand superstructure tumbles about our ears in hopeless ruin.

"When you were appointed Secretary of the Treasury and unanimously confirmed by a Senate of every shade of political opinion, did you not take an oath to administer your office impartially, and for the exclusive objects of its creation—to collect the revenue and control the finances of the country? Is not that office the property of the nation, and yourself only clothed for a time with a little brief authority? Then, sir, how do you explain this perversion of its legitimate uses and functions into a means and instrument of oppression, and compel the election of obnoxious rulers upon the people of the South? Is such a course consistent with your oath of office, or do you call this a great moral idea? But, Mr. Boutwell, though you have thus prostituted the powers of your office for purposes of oppression, without the warrant of conscience or law, it may be that you can tell me by what authority you presume to pronounce upon my political orthodoxy. Who constituted you the infallible hope for Republicanism? Who gave you the authority to hurl the political anathemas of the party? Again, what right had you to commit the administration to your policy? Have you to learn yet that you are only a part of the administration, and not the whole of it, though your friends believe that a monomania has seized your mind on that subject, and that you verily believe yourself the State?

"Very respectfully,

"LEWIS DENT"

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—Mr. Buckley comes again to judgment, appearing in print here to-day to dispute with Judge Sargeant upon the unconstitutionality of removing the capital. He thinks it cannot destroy the District of Columbia any more than it could do a State, and it cannot compel us to abdicate from any territory to which national sovereignty has once attached. He frankly volunteers his opinion, as a lawyer, that it is doubtful whether that part of the district receded to Virginia was ceded in a constitutional manner, and concludes his article by the characteristic statement that his suggestions are thrust before the public without a moment's investigation.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23.—Colonel Rafael Quesada, a brother of the commanding Cuban general, arrived in New York by the steamer Arizona, from Aspinwall. He reached Jamaica a month since, from Cuba, in a sailing vessel, and is the bearer of important dispatches. He gives a glowing account of the situation of the patriots, and says that there are now forty-two thousand men in the army, and that there will be thirty five thousand more armed by the middle of September. Slaves are voluntcering by thousands; they are willing to work in trenches and do camp drudgery; they procure and cook all provisions, giving the armed troops their entire time for drilling and discipline. A number of machinists who went over with Jordan made a foundery near Palma Sarino, and have cast very fair specimens of artillery. There is in the Interior $7,000,000 worth of produce, which will be offered in exchange to Americans as soon as a port is opened. Quesada does not disclose his object beyond that it is diplomatic.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—The report that Rawlins had returned turns out to be untrue. The capital is still without a cabinet officer.

Advices from all parts of Virginia state that the drouth is unprecedented, and the loss therefrom incalculable.

UNSAFE LOCKS.—There is much excitement among treasury officials over the discovery that no further confidence can be placed in the lock adopted by the government for its own use and prescribed for banks which keep its funds. One in use is known as the Dodd lock. A locksmith of Rochester informed the department some time since that he could open any lock it had in a short time without breaking it, and that he was ready to demonstrate it any time. On Saturday he visited the city, and after the close of the treasury building he made his first attempt upon the safe in the Improvising Architect's office. This was opened in one hour and twenty minutes the first time, and a second time, after Treasurer Spinner had been summoned, in twelve minutes. The process, it seems, is one known to a number of artisans, and, after the performance, those present ceased to wonder at the late skillful bank robberies reported in New Jersey and New York. All the plates for government currency and bonds have been kept under these locks, and any workman having access to the room where the safes containing them were, and knowing the process, which involves no breaking or noise of any kind, could readily gain access to the plates. The Treasury Department will give immediate attention to the matter.

CUBA.

HAVANA, Aug. 25.—Insurgents with their families, numbering one thousand six hundred, applied to the Spanish authorities near Holguin, asking forgiveness and protection. Twenty other insurgents presented themselves before the Spanish authorities in the Cinco Villas.

EUROPE.

LONDON, August 24.—The Morning Telegraph, discussing the cession of Cuba to the United States, says: England would feel no jealousy at this aggrandizement, which would complete the abolition of slavery as an institution. The loss of Cuba to Spain would be an unquestionable gain to the mother country, the colony and the cause of mankind.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—The Emperor has almost entirely recovered from his recent illness.

A colliery explosion occurred today near St. Etienne, by which fourteen persons were killed.

M. ROUHER'S SPEECH.—M. Rouher, the president, delivered a speech, in which he said that the Senate had been convoked to examine important modifications of the constitution of the empire, which had been brought about by a fortunate understanding between the government and the legislative body. No sovereign had followed the movement of public opinion more faithfully than the Emperor, who had always considered power as being the property of the nation. M Rouher dwelt upon the continual movement which had been going on transforming an authoritative empire into a liberal empire by the initiative of the Emperor himself, pointing, in support of this view, to the amnesty and the reforms of 1860, 1863 and 1867, the whole terminating to-day in a perfected equilibrium between the powers of the State, and a better distribution of their rights and privileges.—Alluding to the impatience and regrets recently manifested, the president said: They are both equally unjust. To wish that France should remain at a standstill, while liberal doctrines take possession of the whole of Europe, would be to disregard the necessary law of our influence throughout the world, and to weaken the sacred ties which unite the Napoleonic dynasty to the French nation; but to let oneself glide with indifference down a decline which leads to an abyss, would be to forget that France has a right to require from the government absolute security against violent passions, mad wishes, and implacable hatred, for, in the words of Augustus, "The Empire is sufficiently popular to go hand in hand with liberty, and strong enough to preserve it from anarchy." [Applause.] The Senate will, therefore, approach the discussion of these constitutional reforms without experiencing a misplaced timidity, and, at the same time, without yielding to thoughtless impulse; but with the firm intention of interpreting and consecrating the will of the country. The combined efforts of the government and of the Senate will establish a more genuine harmony and a more fruitful solidarity between the powers of the State and the institutions of the empire, and will give them renewed strength, lustre and popularity.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 25.—The first bale of new cotton was received to day, from Harris county, Georgia. It was classed middling and sold at forty cents.

AN ENGLISH society which coddles infant or sickly episcopates proposes to give $5,000 to endow a bishopric of Madagascar, if sufficient can be subscribed by individuals to raise the amount to $50,000. The fate of the similar attempt in the Sandwich Islands ought to warn them against trespassing on the mission field of the London Society. Our readers will remember that Bishop Staley's flock have written from Honolulu to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel that they do not want anything more of him nor his cathedral.

TETZEL REDIVIVUS.

Do any of our readers know how cheap they can buy salvation of the Romish sect? For three dollars (just think of it!) they can buy a fifty years' Mass for themselves or a friend; and for twenty five a perpetual one!

Salvation is regularly advertised for sale, with boots and shoes, Kinnahan's malt whisky, patent medicines and washing machines, in the columns of our Romish exchanges!

Tetzel has come again, in the persons of Dr. Rosecraus, Bishop of Columbus, and the Rev. Stumpe, of Erie, and blessed is the man with three dollars in his pocket! But blessed, above all, he who has twenty-five!

What a pity that anybody should stay in purgatory an hour, when release is bought so cheaply!

There is one thing that puzzles our "heretical" understanding.—Should we give the twenty five dollars for a perpetual Mass for a good Romish friend of ours who died last year, and should he get out of limbo in twelve months, will it not be rather foolish to keep on "offering" that Mass for him perpetually when he has been in glory a thousand years? If the Bishop could tell us when the person "intended" is delivered, or about how long it will take, the thing would be more strictly business-like; for, in that case, the "fruits" might be transferred to some other unhappy soul, and so on, indefinitely. At present it is a great waste of material. For the offering up of Masses for those so happy as to have got out of purgatory perpetually, seems too bad when there may be still so many who had no twenty five dollars to spend, and no kind friend to give it for them.

Still, considering the cheapness of the thing, we wonder that purgatory has not been emptied long ago! Either our Romish brethren are very penurious, or those perpetual Masses are very ineffectual.

If any of our readers should wish to invest for themselves, or a friend, to the extent of a few dollars' worth of salvation, we wish to inform them where the wares are for sale, duly certified to by Pius himself.

We print the advertisements gratuitously, as we find them in the Boston Pilot. For the genuineness of the article we refer them to Tetzel, the most famous dealer in these wares, an old acquaintance of Martin Luther.

A RARE CHANCE!—For the greater Glory of God and the Salvation of Souls. During the coming fifty years o Mass (missa cantata) in honor of St. Joseph shall be offered every Thursday, in St. Joseph's Church, Erie, for the intentions of all who shall contribute $3.

The whole of the money so contributed shall be expended in building a new church and paying the heavy debts of the old. Let all who can, contribute to this holy work. JOSEPH STUMPE,
Pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Erie, Pa.

I approve and highly commend the above foundation.

† TOBIAS, Bishop of Erie.

The above is, in substance, a copy of a foundation for Masses, approved and made binding by the Rt. Rev. Bishop on the present pastor and his successors. These Masses are offered according to the intentions of the donors, either for themselves or others, living or dead. Let contributors direct to

REV. JOSEPH STUMPE,
St. Joseph's Church, Erie, Pa.

PERPETUAL WEEKLY OFFERING of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass in the Cathedral of Columbus, Ohio.—Having been burdened by the Apostolic See with the charge of the new Diocese of Columbus, Ohio, in which the Catholics are poor and scattered, and the non-Catholics are numerous, rich, yet kindly disposed, we are forced to appeal to the charity of Catholics without as well as within our jurisdiction for aid. The foundations of a Cathedral not unworthy of our holy religion in the capital of a great State, have been laid; and for the means of completion we rely, through God's goodness and the intercession of His Blessed Mother, on the charity of those whom this appeal may reach.

In gratitude to those who aid us, with no matter what amount, we bind ourselves to offer, or cause to be offered, every Saturday, the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, according to their intention, up to the day when, with God's blessing, our Cathedral shall be consecrated.

After the consecration of the Cathedral this weekly Sacrifice will be permanently established, for the intention of all who may contribute $5 or more; and we will send to each one, in a form suitable for framing, (to donors of $25 and upward,) on parchment, the following certificate:

COLUMBUS, O., ——, 186

M——

We acknowledge the receipt of your contribution of —— dollars for

ST. JOSEPH'S CATHEDRAL,
COLUMBUS, O.,

And do hereby certify, that your name has been entered as a full sharer in the fruits of a PERPETUAL MASS, to be offered every Saturday, not simply for your spiritual and temporal good, but according to your intention; applicable, at your option, to yourself or your friends, living and dead, and an heirloom in your family unto the end.

† SYLVESTER H. ROSECRANS,
Bishop of Columbus, Ohio.
G. H. ADAMS, Chancellor.

—American Churchman.

WE copy the following article from the New York World. It is both timely and easy of accomplishment.

Now that the Southern States are about to commence a new cotton year, they ought to transact the whole of their cotton business on a gold basis, just as the foreign bankers have always done in their dealings in bills of exchange. In this way the whole Southern States might gradually place themselves on a gold currency basis precisely the same as practiced in California, thus ignoring the legal tender act of Congress, just as the loyal State of California always has done, from the beginning until now. The Southern States, by following the example of California in buying and selling only for gold, would then accumulate a gold and silver currency, which would bring about a practical resumption of specie payments and protect them from danger of loss from any fluctuations that may arise in the market value of the greenback currency. Cotton commands gold in every market at home and abroad, and it is a better basis for the practical immediate resumption of specie payments in the Southern States than the gold and silver mines of California. Every Southerner is interested in this question, and every journal in the South ought to exert its influence to bring about this result without delay. Let the South sell its products for gold, and gold only, and let them keep their surplus in gold as the only currency to use, just as California always has done. This will be some progress on the road to specie payments, and it will tend to keep gold in the country.

STAY AT HOME, BOYS.—A Southern friend of ours, who is temporarily sojourning in New York, writes as follows: "Tell our people, especially the young men who contemplate a search for fortune in this metropolis, to stay at home. Of the thirty thousand Southerners in and around the city, probably not one-third are earning their salt. As light porters, subordinate clerks on microscopic salaries, or as bashful 'drummers' among their home acquaintances, a portion of these unfortunates are worrying out all the ambition which constituted their stock in trade, and cursing the hour in which they left friends and hearthstone. New York is no Eldorado for any one without capital."

Let Virginia boys treasure this up, and bear in mind that the same energy displayed at home that is required in New York to keep soul and body together would net them a respectable competency.—Virginia paper.

NOT long ago a young married lady in Illinois was found dead in her bed, and a coroner's jury rendered a verdict of "died of convulsions, aided by tight lacing."

OBITUARIES.

SEVENTY YEARS A METHODIST!

MRS. JAMES TOOLEY, widow, from Natchez, Mississippi, some time a resident in New Orleans, died August 13, 1869, at her daughter's residence in this city.

She was born near Newbern, North Carolina, in 1785; born again at a camp meeting near home, in 1799. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church just seventy years ago. Her name is now on the church record at Natchez, Mississippi.

By request of the family, a funeral sermon was preached in the Methodist Episcopal church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, on Sabbath morning, August 22, by Rev. L. C. Matlack, pastor.

Departed this life, near Oak Ridge, Warren county, Mississippi, August 1, 1869, Miss MARGARET ELIZABETH STAFFORD, aged eighteen years.

Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors. We have known the subject of this notice from childhood. She was a kind and devoted daughter, and an affectionate sister—true and constant in friendship; and, above all, she was a true and devout Christian. None knew her but to love her and to admire her Christian virtues. A large circle of friends and relatives mourn her loss; but they mourn not as those who have no hope, but because they could not keep the good, the pure and the noble to themselves.

Alas! alas! the dreaded messenger came, and God claimed His own jewel, and called her home in the bloom and beauty of youth. Weep no longer, dear relatives and friends! Wish her not back to earth again, for we have every assurance that she has safely anchored her bark in the haven of rest, and is now realizing the full enjoyment of peace and happiness with the angels around the throne of God.

A. M. H.

CHARLOTTE MUSE, wife of Western Muse, of Wilkerson county, Mississippi, died August 5, 1869, of carbuncle and erysipelas, in her sixty-fifth year.

Hers was truly a useful life. She became religious and joined the church when quite young, and she maintained a firm, consistent Christian character until the day of her death. The loss of such a woman is sorely felt by her husband and family, her neighbors and her church. I do not say she was perfect, but that she was an earnest Christian, an honor to her sex, a blessing to her husband and family, and an ornament to the church.

I have known many more comely in person, but none more lovely in conduct. I have known many richer in goods, but none larger in heart. I have known none who had drunk deeper of her Master's spirit. Hers was not the sympathy that said, "Be ye warmed and clothed," and gave nothing to relieve; but hers was the heart to feel and the hand to give. Many have been the times after she had retired at night, if she knew any of her neighbors were in want, that she could get no rest until she had planned and arranged to have those wants supplied, and at early morn the messenger was found on his way with the meal and the meat that brought relief. She was a safe counsellor, and emphatically a peacemaker.

While we deeply mourn her loss, it is sweet to contemplate that grace of God which can make so lovely a character out of fallen humanity.

We buried her in Bethel camp ground. Near the spot where so many have been born into the kingdom of God will her eyes first open upon the glories of the resurrection morn.

To the Presiding Elders of the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences:

JACKSON, TENN., Aug. 7, 1869.

It having been made my duty to co-operate with you in the organization of a Colored Conference within your bounds, will you please give me such information as relates thereto in your several districts, with the most suitable place of holding said Conference. By so doing you will save much travel and expense, and oblige

Yours fraternally,

THOS. TAYLOR,
Supt. Colored Work, South,
Jackson, Tennessee.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: You will please give the following notice a place in the order of business for our District Meeting:

What relation do baptized infants hold to our church? Rev. William G. Millsaps, chairman.

ABIDE WITH ME.

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens; Lord with me abide;
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me.

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
O thou who changest not, abide with me.

I need thy presence every passing hour;
What but thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who like thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through clouds and sunshine, Lord, abide with me.

I fear no foe with thee at hand to bless;
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness;
Where is death's sting? where, grave, thy victory?
Triumph still, if thou abide with me.

Hold thou thy Cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies;
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee;
In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me.

TOBIAS GIBSON.

EARLY METHODISM IN THE SOUTHWEST

In the History of Methodism in Kentucky it is stated that Tobias Gibson went to the State of Mississippi, where he died in the neighborhood of Natchez. This may be sufficient information for Kentucky, but when the history of Methodism in Mississippi is to be written it is too brief a notice of the person named; besides, it is not correct.

The writer will give a detail of circumstances which may throw light upon the subject, and probably be of such interest as to secure an insertion in your paper.

The Mississippi Annual Conference, perhaps twenty years ago, appointed a committee of its ministers to make inquiry as to the places where Richmond Nally, Tobias Gibson and Enoch Tally were buried, and, if found, then to have erected a stone or marble monument, with suitable inscriptions, at the expense of the Conference.—There appears to have been no success up to the Conference of 1856, when the committee was reappointed or continued, Dr. B. M. Drake being one of them. He was presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, and reports seem to have reached him that the place of burial of Tobias Gibson was known and could be identified. The writer was requested to make inquiry, which he did. The following facts may be accepted as fully established by statements of persons altogether entitled to credit, and who could have no interest in making statements other than true.

Tobias Gibson came to Mississippi, from Tennessee, in 1799. Natchez was not only the chief town, but the Territory was often called the "Natchez country."—There was a road running northwardly up the Mississippi river, as near to it as the low or overflowed lands would admit. Settlements were being made along and up this road as far as the present site of Vicksburg, though this city was not then thought of, nor were there roads into the interior and eastwardly at all. Mr. Gibson traveled that public road up and down the Mississippi river, from Natchez to a settlement just below Vicksburg, and at this last place he selected a home for himself.

In April, 1804, he was busily engaged working on his place; became heated and fatigued by labor, and stepped down to the spring or bayou, where he no doubt drank to excess, and bathed his face, neck, chest and hands in the cold water. The effect was at once a chill and hoarseness, which compelled him to go to his room, where he soon died. Medical advice was wanting, as well as the tender nursing of woman. A few new settlers like himself prepared him for his burial, and committed his body to the ground at a place not far from his rude house. This place became a neighborhood grave yard from that time.

Soon after this period settlers came into this neighborhood, and among them kindred of the deceased preacher. His cousins, James Jordan and Mary E. Gibson—the latter afterwards Mrs. Durden—are now dead. John B. Gibson is still living. All were well known to the writer. This became known as the Gibson settlement, and is still so called.

In 1828 Jordan Gibson died, and it was decided to bury him by the side of his cousin, Tobias Gibson, of whom we are writing. The grave of the latter being at the public burying ground, was as well known then as any other, perhaps more so. Mrs. Durden and Mr. James Gibson were living in 1857, and each saw their mother buried, in 1828, by the side of the grave of Tobias Gibson.

Dr. Drake was so well assured of the fact that the grave had been identified that he proceeded to carry into effect the resolution of the Conference. Himself and one or two Methodist friends, including the writer, selected at a marble yard a head and foot stone of reasonable cost, on which an inscription, written by Dr. Drake, was to be engraved. This was to be put up at the place of interment on the 13th of May, 1857, and notice was given that religious services were to be conducted, and an address by Dr. Drake would be delivered, biographical of the deceased and historical of Methodism in Mississippi for the last half century.

The cousins of the deceased preacher and their descendants at this time volunteered to contribute to aid the committee, and thus have a much finer and more costly monument. They were rich and could well afford to do so. Dr. Drake was then at Nashville as delegate to some church convention, but was advised of this intended change in the marble to be erected. For some reason he declined to accept the proffered aid. He would act as the Conference directed, and put up a simple stone, or have nothing to do with it. The large and more costly monument was ready by the 13th of May, 1857, and a large crowd had gathered at the grave; but Dr. Drake, though near, did not attend. It was a moment of disappointment and painful solicitude. The writer suggested to the kindred that religious services should take place, to which they gladly consented. After singing and prayer, the Rev. W. P. Barton made an excellent address, under the circumstances of disappointment and embarrassment.—Then the Rev. George H. Clinton was, as usual, felicitous in his remarks about the pioneer preacher, whose death, at so early an age and under such privations and exposure, authorizes the title of martyr as well.

The place is as pretty a situation and as beautiful by nature as one could wish to be buried in. It appears to be a mound, more than an acre on top, and a hollow nearly all around. On this mound has grown up a grove of oak trees, nearly ever green in their foliage. It is in full view of the road, three or four hundred yards distant, and east of the road, about five miles south of Vicksburg.—Around it are fields unattended, because worn out by more than half a century of cultivation.

In that grove of oak trees may be found a tall, square marble monument, nearly twelve feet high, surmounted with an urn of the same material. On the east side will be seen the following inscription:

"Sacred to the memory of Rev. Tobias Gibson, who settled in Mississippi in 1799. Was emphatically the father of Methodism in this country, being the first minister who organized a church in this then Territory. Born in South Carolina, A. D. 1776. Died in the county of Warren, 1804. Erected by his nieces, his nephew and their descendants, May 13, 1857."

EDUCATING PREACHERS.

MR. EDITOR: At the last session of the Mississippi Conference an association of lay and clerical members was formed, the object of which was to procure means to send to school such young men as might need aid in preparing to preach. Not long since the president of that association called attention to the importance of speedy and concerted action in behalf of the proposed object, indicating that nothing had been done up to that time.

This Conference, as a body, has not a single young man at school in preparation for preaching; yet there are young men within its bounds who need aid and are anxious to be educated as preachers.—One young man sought recommendation to the Conference last year, but his Quarterly Conference rightly refused to recommend him because of his literary deficiency; and he was advised to go to school. But he had not the means to pay his way. If there had been the will and the proper effort it would have been easy enough for the people of the district in which he lives to have met all his expenses and given the invaluable benefit of two or three or more years' schooling. Is that an object so indifferent that it can be excusably neglected?

Another young man, in another district, attended college the last scholastic year under great embarrassment, and must now stop with an unfinished course, unless he gets aid from some quarter. He might and may borrow the money he needs to finish his course, and afterward teach to pay the debt; or he may teach first and then return to college. But how much better would it be on all sides if he could proceed unhindered to his graduation, and then be free to take his place in the active pastoral work?

If the association had the money in hand, both these young men could be taken under its care and furnished with what they need in the pursuit of their literary preparation to preach. The men will not be wanting when we have the willingness and energy to provide the means. Let every member of the Mississippi Conference send forward to the treasurer, J. C. Kittrell, Jackson, Mississippi, whatever he or she can give for this noble purpose, however small it may be.—Cannot every adult member of the church send from fifty cents to $5? Governor Humphreys, the president, will see that it is rightly applied. Meantime, let this association go vigorously to work throughout the Conference, and make itself a real force.

No other interest in the church need be neglected for this; but this should be made second to none.—Other Conferences are moving in this matter. The demand of the times is upon us. We must meet it or lose our place. If our people would devote a tithe of what they spend for unnecessary things to this object there would be no lack of means.

THE WOORALI, or curare poison, when applied to a wound, produces a strange paralysis, which gradually creeps from limb to limb, depriving the animal of motion, and yet without in the slightest degree affecting its intellectual faculties or power of volition, which remains unimpaired to the last moment. Death is caused by the paralysis of the respiratory organs, which cease to provide the blood with the quantity of oxygen it requires. This being the case, a poisoned animal may be restored to life by the mechanical injection of air into the lungs. This important fact Dr. Bernard has proved by actual experiment, finding that in the course of a few hours the poison was eliminated.

A LADY in Sarnia was recently reading to her little son that passage of Scripture quoted from the Mosaic law, "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," when the boy exclaimed, "Mamma, what a time the dentists must have had then!"

BIOGRAPHICAL.

MRS. LUCY FALCONER.

BY BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

That elect lady, Mrs. Lucy FALCONER, of Montgomery, Alabama, died in peace July 14, 1869. She was a widow of more than three score and ten years. Her strength being firm and her will, she resisted the encroachments of disease; but two weeks before her death her body refused longer to be at her command, and she was confined to her bed for that length of time. She was such a one as Paul would have made honorable mention of in the personal notices that grace his Epistles. The pastors of the Methodist Church in Montgomery, for thirty years past, will respectfully and affectionately remember her. Her experience of conversion I have often used, without a name, for the comfort and confirmation of others. Early in married life her husband remarked: "I perceive you read other books a great deal, but I never see you reading the Bible." To which she replied: "I cannot understand the Bible." Her attention being directed to the subject, the Spirit of God led her on to meditation and to prayer. Praying alone in her chamber, her heart was filled with peace, overflowed with love; all condemnation was taken away, and she joyfully accepted the will of God in all things. She was seeking religion, but it did not occur to her that this was religion. She had prayed to be converted, had risen from her knees, and was consciously enjoying this state; but she did not think of it as conversion. It seemed possible and very probable that she would soon be blessed! Like Mary, she was talking with the Saviour, and knew it not. But this new life asserted itself, and being instructed in the way of the Lord more perfectly, she was satisfied that He had had mercy on her. Thus she dated the forgiveness of sin—the passing from death unto life. How that experience was afterward developed, and became rich and varied, and a source of instruction to those who enjoyed her Christian fellowship! How that Bible became a book of delights, opening its wondrous truths for her guidance and comfort and sanctification! Without effort, and almost against it, she was critical—so largely were the higher elements of taste present in her mental and moral constitution; yet her remarks on sermons and ministers were always toned with reverence. From her I derived the most satisfactory and discriminating estimates of the preachers and preaching—of all denominations—that went before me, as far back as 1836. She relished, in a very high degree, the genuine, the sincere, the unselfish, the pure—for such she was; and no qualities in persons or performances, however brilliant, could atone for the lack of these. They who were favored with her friendship prized it, for it was felt to be not only a pleasing sentiment, but a delicate and high compliment. Hers was a beautiful old age, and she served the Lord in the beauty of holiness. If you preached for the first time, where with exactness and intelligent attention she filled her usual place in the congregation, you would very likely ask, after service, Who was that? If you habitually ministered there, she was one of the persons that would occur to you, in the preparation of the sermon. She was not made perfect without suffering. The war brought calamities, and among them the death in the army of a grandson—a young man of fine character and promise. I saw her when that last stroke fell. It was a touching, but silent grief—the grief of age. The wound was deeper than it seemed. Her stroke was heavier than her complaint. After that, impatience of life, rather than fear of death, seemed to be the point to be guarded. She was quite weaned from the world—dead to it. Only in hearing and reading sermons, in prayers, in her Bible, and in the quiet recesses of Christian conversation and heart-communion, she took any pleasure. In one of her letters, a year ago, speaking of the troubles of a friend, she says: "What a poor, sin-stricken world this is! We see and feel the effects of it in everything; annoyances, at every turn, invariably growing out of sin. Sorrows give us an additional claim on the Saviour, and so does sin, as He died for it; but these trials seem to be the work of man altogether, and have a tendency to embitter us, as well as make us suffer. God has mercy on us, for we are very helpless! What a rest heaven will be—deliverance from sin being the greatest, from the effects of it in ourselves and others." Speaking of a new religious book she had been reading, and after a terse and even sprightly review of it, she adds: "I go to the old commentaries sometimes and think them incomparably better than anything I now get. Thank God, my Bible always interests me." She loved her children and her friends but she loved her Lord more than these. Her adoring spirit stands in His presence. The busy mind no more revolves the great problems of Providence. All mystery is cleared up. She has entered into rest. Having been made meet for it, she is now a partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light. It was remarked that upon her face, as she lay shrouded for the tomb, there lay an expression, serene and placid, as though in dying the aged Christian had caught a glimpse of eternal life.

ARKANSAS CORRESPONDENCE.

CAMDEN, ARK., Aug. 10, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: For a few days previous to the great eclipse the thermometer in this region had an upward tendency, and on the 4th, 5th and 6th reached ninety five and one hundred degrees in the shade. This was a warm climax to one of the coolest, pleasantest summers we have ever experienced. The afternoon of the 7th was cloudy, with thunder showers, lasting until four o'clock, when through the thin cloud-reefs the sun came out, looking very much like a new moon. Smoked glass was in universal demand, and the king of day has, perhaps, rarely had such attention paid him as he received on the afternoon of the 7th instant.

For three long weeks your correspondent has been in the saddle, journeying through northwest Louisiana and southern Arkansas.—Through the parishes of Jackson, Claiborne and Union the crops of every kind are fine. From all other parts of north and northwest Louisiana I hear the same gratifying reports. Cotton never promised so abundant a yield, and the corn is more than sufficient to meet the largest demand at home. We bless the "God of the rolling year" for the "former and the latter rain." Through the counties of southern Arkansas we find abundant corn crops, and the cotton extraordinarily fine. A good crop of wheat and oats has been harvested.

I am looking in, for the first time, on the city of Camden, the main object of my visit being to attend the Grand Council of the Temperance Reform, which met here on the 5th instant, and continued in session until a late hour on the night of the 6th. About sixty delegates from various parts of the State were in attendance, and I suppose nearly half of these were ladies. The ladies took no part in the debates, made no public speeches, (no true woman would,) but they seemed much interested in the cause, and surely they should be.

Our good brother, Rev. W. H. Browing, president of Camden Female College, is the first officer of the Reform in Arkansas, and is doing a great good for the people.

Rev. Horace Jewell has been for some weeks confined to his bed, but so far recovered as to leave for Kentucky on the 9th. By advice of his physician, and with the consent of his charge, he seeks health in travel, and a visit to the "old folks at home."

Dr. Winfield is pretty generally from home, attending to the business of a very large presiding elder's district. I believe the Methodist is the only church in Camden with a pastor and a congregation. The Baptists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians all have houses of worship, but no regular supply of ministerial labor. The Methodists have a live church, a live preacher and a live Sabbath school. There is nothing fine about the Camden Methodist church; but there is an air of neatness, airiness and comfort, that strikes a stranger most agreeably. The congregation does not give up the singing to the choir. Have they a choir in Camden? Yes, and a good instrument, and very sweet music do they make. And then when the Sabbath school children meet in the afternoon to sing, and their prompt, efficient and devoted superintendent leads the music on the instrument, they make the building ring with those pleasant, lively Sabbath school songs. Camden is a pleasant place to spend the Sabbath, and one rarely looks upon a congregation so still, quiet and orderly as the congregation worshiping here.

The negroes, under carpet-bag rule, have a school house and church, but these people now look with a degree of suspicion on all the maneuverings of the carpet-baggers. In every part of the country the negroes are drifting back to their old owners. Weary and foot-sore, and doubtless sick at heart, from hope deferred, was an old man whom I met a few days since, trudging back to the home of "old master," the home he had left when the "mystery of freedom" just came out. Five years of toil among strangers had gone by, and left him poor and penniless, and now he returns sadder and wiser to the only true friend he ever had, and to the only place he could ever call his home.

The negroes are much troubled on the Chinese question, and call upon the white folks for deliverance from these "man eaters."

They don't care for his eating the rats, but then to eat all the puppies! how can Sambo endure this. Every dog must have his day, and every darky must have his dog. If John Chinaman comes, and won't underwork the darky, and especially if he won't eat the darky's dog, then the darky will "reqniesce."

The white people of Arkansas look with very little favor upon the new free school system sought to be foisted upon them by the carpet bag Legislature. If nothing else in all the system could be objected to, the single fact that the law prescribes the text books, and allows none to be used save such as carpet-baggers prescribe, is a sufficient objection. A history of the war, which is false in all its details, must be used—Webster's dictionary, Radical edition, with the meaning of every political term altered to suit Radical views. These are insignificant items. The people of Louisiana, who remember General Steadman's report on the management of negro schools in that State, need not be told how carpet-baggers use school funds.

In all my journey I have heard of no revivals in the churches. Many camp meetings are announced for September and October; protracted meetings in various parts of the country. Let us hope and pray that before the summer is ended, and the harvest past, that the benign influences of a general revival may be felt.

Yours truly, PILGRIM.

THE refusal of the Catholic prelates in Austria to recognize the jurisdiction of the secular power has just led to a collision between prelate and policeman, in which the latter triumphed. One of the Bishops, who had been summoned as a witness to a court of justice, persistently refused to appear. At last the court sent the police, who brought the reluctant prelate nilly-willy into the presence of justice. The Austrian government was appealed to by the outraged churchman, but calmly declined to interfere with the jurisdiction or proceedings of the court.

A DUTCHMAN was once relating his marvelous escape from drowning when thirteen of his companions were lost by the upsetting of a boat, and he alone was saved.

"And how did you escape their fate?"

"I did not go in to pote!" was the Dutchman's placid answer.

THE best way for parents to train up children in the way they should go, is to travel that way occasionally themselves.

DE PROFUNDIS.

BY WM. R. BLISS.

My God, my Father, and my Friend,
To thee I cry:
My path is dark, my feet are sore,
My heart is fainting, and the door
Of hope is shut across my way;
My anxious eye
Searches in vain for any ray
To guide me to the morning.

Give me thy hand, and let me feel
That thou art near,
To keep me through this gloomy night,
To lead my halting steps aright,
With thy dear love to wipe away
This bitter tear,
And all my doubts and fears allay,
And guide me to the morning.

And when the morning light has come,
My earliest breath
Shall sing thy praise, O faithful Friend,
Whose arm can shield me to the end
Of life, and gently lift me o'er
The stream of death,
To place me on that peaceful shore
Where all is morning.

GREEK LIFE IN THE HEROIC AGE.

The following is from Mr. Gladstone's recent work, "Juventus Mundi:"

The youth of high birth, not then so widely as now separated from the low, is educated under tutors in reverence for his parents, and in desire to emulate their fame; he shares in manly and in graceful sports, acquires the use of arms, hardens himself in the pursuit, their of all others the most indispensable, the hunting down of wild beasts; gains the knowledge of medicine; probably also of the lyre. Sometimes, with many sided intelligence, he even sets himself to learn how to build his own house or ship, or how to drive the plow down the furrow as well as to reap the standing corn; and when scarcely a man he bears arms for his country or his tribe, takes part in its government, learns, by direct instruction and practice, how to rule mankind through the use of reasoning and persuasive powers in political assemblies, attends to assist in sacrifices to the gods. For all this time he has been in kindly and free relations, not only with his parents, his family, his equals of his own age, but with the attendants, although they are but serfs, who have known him from infancy on his father's domain.

His early youth is not solicited into vice by finding sensual excess in vogue, or the opportunities of it glaring in his eyes and sounding in his ear. Gluttony is hardly known; drunkenness is marked only by its degrading character and the evil consequences that flow so straight from it, and it is abhorred. But he loves the genial use of meals, and rejoices in the hour when the guests gathered in his father's hall to enjoy a liberal hospitality, and the wine mantles in the cup. For then they listen to the lay of the minstrel who celebrates before them the newest and dearest of the heroic tales that stir their blood and rouse their manly resolution to be worthy, in their turn, of their country and their country's heroes. He joins the dance in the festivals of religion; the maiden's hand upon his wrist, and the gilded knife gleaming from his belt, as they course from point to point, or wheel in round on round. That maiden, some Nausicaa or some Hermione of a neighboring district, in due time he weds, amidst the rejoicings of their families, and brings her home to cherish her "from the flower to the ripeness of the grape," with respect, fidelity and love. Whether as governor or as governed, politics bring him, in ordinary circumstances, no great share of trouble. Government is a machine of which the wheels move easily, for they are distinguished by simplicity of usages, ideas and desires; by unity of interest; by respect for authority, and for those in whose hands it is reposed; by love of the common country, the common altar, the common festivals and games, to which already there is large resort. In peace he settles the disputes of the people; in war he lends them the precious example of heroic daring. He consults them, and advises with them on all grave affairs; and his wakeful care for their interest is rewarded by the ample domains which are set apart for the prince by the people. Finally, he closes his eyes, delivering over the sceptre to his sons, and leaving much peace and happiness around him.

It is not what we eat, but what we digest, that makes us fat—not what we make, but what we save, that makes us rich—not what we read, but what we remember, that makes us wise.

Keep up the habit of being respected, and do not attempt to be more amusing or agreeable than is consistent with the preservation of respect.—Sidney Smith.

Moss-Agate Hunting in the West.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial writes from Sherman, Black Hills, Wyoming Territory:

"Pretty nearly every visitor to these hills and the plains is an anxious and excited seeker after 'moss-agates'—a name applied to a species of silicious formation that has been wonderfully and beautifully figured and flowered through the united agencies of iron solutions penetrating it, and then, becoming exposed to the action of the air, going through a sun and wind drying process after the waters of some river bed or lake had evaporated. Some of these moss-agates are very tastefully inlaid with exact imitations of pine trees, vines, cedar forest, hedges, trains of cars, stars, figures, and almost every imaginable drawing. The agates found along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad are of four different colors, partaking of the names of the places where found, as follows: The Cheyenne brown agate, Granger Water agate, Church Buttes light blue agate, and the Sweetwater cream agate. The two latter are the most valuable, and most delicately formed.

"The most extensive agate beds are found in the vicinity of Church Buttes and Granger, distant about eight hundred and eighty miles west of Omaha. These beds are about fifty yards wide and nearly one hundred yards long, being isolated from each other at a distance of from one to two miles. As you approach them you observe a large path of smooth, black, round cobble stones, and between these lie, almost concealed, the different sized and shaped moss-agates, and, occasionally sparkling among them, a bright topaz, and brown and yellow streaked carnelian. The intrinsic value of the agate consists in its display of moss, the vine and cedar forest being the most prized for jewelry sets. In one hour's time I have gathered a half gallon, some of which are extremely pretty, and I know of no pleasure, either in hunting buffalo or catching trout, half so exciting and so full of glory as the finding of a choice agate. I have seen staid old men search in silence for a few minutes for a 'real shiner,' and when they came upon it pick it up suddenly, take off their hats, swing them in the air, jump up and shout along, like schoolboys that had just been let out for a two weeks' vacation. The very novelty of finding precious stones among black rocks, far out on the plains, many miles from home or habitation, is a delight so pleasing and intoxicating that it takes a mighty nerve to resist the pressure of one's making a most stupendous fool of himself. Good agates are worth, as jewels, from $3 to $5 apiece. As novelties they are invaluable."

Mysteries of the Bible.—All vital processes are mysterious. No one knows what life is, in many of its gradations: vegetable life, animal life, spiritual life, eternal life.—These are beyond definition and comprehension. No sillier argument has ever been urged against Christianity than this, that it has mysteries. Before you attack the Bible on this score, take a kernel of corn, a grain of barley, a seed of mustard, and tell us its life secret, unfold the mysteries of its life, and build up for us the theory of its generation. Everywhere through the domains of nature, we tread in awe, we are encompassed with mysteries. We go through her dark caverns with feeble torchlight, and see only a little, though that little is full of glory. Our footsteps have a hollow sound, and the sound floats away, reverberating among mysterious spaces and abysses around us, which we cannot enter and explore. The student of nature seems to me like a man in the Kentucky cave with only a box of matches in his pocket. He scratches one on the wall, and a dome of glittering stalactites breaks in a feeble flash upon the eyes. Thus he gets here and there a glance, while all beyond is unseen, unknown. The lower you go down in your research into animal and vegetable life, the greater the mysteries. One would think the minutest would be the simplest; but the smaller objects carry in their diminutive being the mightier mysteries. The border land between the vegetable and animal forms is full of mysteries. In those aggregated animals called the Polyzoa, out from the cell starts a gemmule. It is an animal germ; it swims hither and thither, finally anchors itself somewhere, and when it grows and puts forth buds, as though it were imitating a vegetable, and builds up a new animal household. On the other hand, in some plants with no flowers nor seeds, a microscopic atom, answering to a seed, sallies forth, swims about as though it were an animal, which it is not, and at last settles down into the steady unlocomotive life of a vegetable. When we come to a vital process, we stand within God's inner temple, and are constrained to exclaim: Here is the hidden glory of the Creator, the Author of life. His ways are past finding out. We reach the threshhold of the divine operation, and we are not able to cross the boundary; we stand this side, and worship. A Scripture, a religion, without mystery, would be confuted and contemptuously driven out from among men, by every voice of nature, and every syllable of life.—Dr. M. Scudder.

It is not often that anything very valuable or practical comes from the Convocation of Canterbury. But this dignified and generally faineant ecclesiastical body has just now somewhat surprised the English public by ordering, preparing and publishing a long and elaborate report on intemperance in England, its progress and extent, and the best means of eradicating or at least diminishing it. The report is that of a committee who applied to and obtained evidence from clergymen, recorders, police magistrates, prison governors and chaplains, superintendents of lunatic asylums, coroners, landed proprietors, workhouse officials, policemen; and others throughout England and Wales. A large mass of information is thus obtained from persons who must be supposed to speak with some knowledge and authority; and the sum of the whole is to show the existence of a very miserable condition of things in England and Wales. The committee find that, while the evil of intemperance has greatly diminished in the upper and middle classes, it has not diminished to any appreciable extent among the poorer or lower classes, and is in fact apparently on the increase among women and the young. The principal causes of drunkenness they trace to the beer shop system (that is, the legislative measure which exempts houses selling only beer and ale from the necessity of obtaining such a license as the spirit shops are required to have;) the paying of wages at public houses and holding clubs and meetings of workingmen there; the continuance or revival of the old-fashioned Statute Fairs for the hiring of servants; the serving out of intoxicating drinks to the army and navy; the adulteration of liquors and the defective character of the licensing system as regards public houses. The remedies they recommend are chiefly non-legislative—measures of social reform and education, in fact. But they also recommend such legislative measures as the repeal of the beer shop act; the early closing of public houses on week days, and their closing altogether on Sundays; the placing the issue of licenses in the hands not of the magistrates, but of the inhabitants of each town and district; and the repeal of all duties on tea, coffee and sugar. The report is, on the whole, sensible, practical and moderate; and the evidence collected is full of deep and painful interest.—Independent.

Table Manners.—When to eat, and what, and how much, are questions which have been abundantly answered, well and ill: but it is not considered, as it ought to be, that the attendants of the family table have a much larger share in promoting a healthful digestion than is generally supposed.

A good appetite is essential to a good digestion, but a snow-white table cloth is a great promotive of a good appetite. No one can eat in comfort if any member of the family appears at the table in a slatternly dress; with unkempt hair; showing a breadth of black under the finger nails, with a hawking and a spitting, and a blowing of the nose, and their tremendous associations.

But the spotless napkin, the most splendid roast, and faultless concomitants all, what do these amount to if sadness is written on the face of the wife; if an angry scowl gleams from the corrugated brow of a morose husband, or a dissatisfied look comes from a child's eye, and the meal is partaken of in ominous silence?—Away with such unloveliness!—There is no sunshine in such a household; and the members of that family, if they grow up at all, will become the refrigerators, the bane of every company into which they may be thrown in after life.

Rather let the family table be the place of glad reunions; as much looked forward to as the promised coming of a cherished friend; let courtesies more than courtly be ever cultivated; let smiles wreathe every face; let calm satisfaction sit on every countenance; let light hearts, and cheery words, and obliging acts, and watchful attentions be the order of the day; these are the promoters of a healthy digestion, and these are they which largely help to make happy homes, and good hearts, and generous natures.—Hall's Journal of Health.

DIRECT ANSWER TO PRAYER.

"Before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear."—Isaiah lxv, 24.

There lived in the West India Islands a class of men who are called wreckers. Their custom is, for the support of their families, to go out either before or during the storm, for the purpose of carrying relief to those who may have been wrecked during its prevalence. Many of these hardy men, who live by this perilous means, are pious Wesleyans. Many years since a long and very protracted series of storms passed over these islands, when one of these pious men was detained so long from his home that all the provision he had made for his wife and children was exhausted. After partaking with her little ones of the last of her store, the poor woman took her Bible and the bag in which she had been accustomed to keep her bread, and retired into an adjoining room, for the purpose of laying before the Lord her straitened circumstances. While engaged in the act of prayer she opened her Bible, and the first passage that struck her eye was "The Lord will provide." She directly placed her finger upon it, and with the other hand holding up the empty bag, said, "Lord, here is the bag, and here is thy promise." The bag was empty, but there was the positive promise of her God, and on its fulfillment her soul relied. While she was engaged in these exercises, some person unknown to her, left in the next room enough to meet all her wants until the return of her husband.

Who can doubt for one moment that this was directly in answer to her prayer of faith?

God indeed saw that the bag was empty, and while she was yet speaking with Him, provided plentifully for her.

Child of God, are you in distress; are you in want, even of bread to eat? Simply believe in Him; rely solely on that Word; go instantly in the simplicity of your faith, and tell it unto Jesus, and you shall be relieved without the shadow of a doubt.

Humbly trusting that the above truthful instance of a direct answer to prayer may prove a blessing to some of God's dear children, I send it for the columns of your paper, accompanied by prayer that it may so eventuate.—George C. M. Roberts in Methodist Protestant.

The Pity of God.—The following extract from an article in the Independent, on the tender mercies of God that are over all His works, is as poetical in language as it is grand and truthful in conception:

"God's pity is not as some sweet cordial poured in dainty drops from some golden vial. It is not like the musical water-drop of some slender rill murmuring down the sides of Mount Sinai. It is wide as the whole copo of heaven. It is abundant as all the air. If one had art to gather up all the golden sunlight that to-day falls wide all over this continent—falling through every silent hour; and all that is dispersed over the whole ocean, flashing from every wave; and all that is poured refulgent over the northern wastes of ice, and along the whole continent of Europe, and the vast outlying Asia and torrid Africa; and if one could in any wise gather up this immense and incalculable outflow and treasure of sunlight that falls down to the bright hours, and runs in liquid ether about the mountains, and fills the plains, and sends innumerable rays through every secret place, pouring over and filling every flower, shining down the sides of every blade of grass, resting in glorious humility upon the humblest thing—on stick, and stone, and pebble; on the spider's web, the sparrow's nest, the threshold of the young foxes' holes, where they play and warm themselves—that rests on the prisoner's window, that strikes radiant beams through the slave's tear, that puts gold upon the widow's weeds, that plates and roofs the city with burnished gold, goes on its wild abundance up and down the earth, shining everywhere, and always since the day of primal creation, without faltering, without waste or diminution; as fresh, as overflowing to-day, as if it were the first day of its outplay—if one might gather up this boundless, endless, infinite treasure, to measure it, then might he tell the height and depth, and unending glory of the pity of God! In light—in the sun, its source—you have God's own figure of the immensity and copiousness of His mercy and compassion. Psalm lxxxiv, 11, 12; Isa. lv, 6-12."

Great excitement was created last week in Cracow, Austria, by the liberation of a nun who had been confined in a convent there for over twenty years. A popular demonstration which was made on the occasion led to a series of disturbances. The military were called out to restore order, and many arrests were made. The city is now quiet.

Wanting to be a Great Christian.

"Some twenty years ago my attention was seriously called to the subject of personal religion. I felt that I was a great sinner, and that in Christ alone I could obtain forgiveness. I had some hope that my sins were pardoned; But instead of acting upon that feeble evidence, I waited for a greater experience. I wanted to be a great Christian. I would delay communion with the church till I had greater light, till I had something to tell more worthy of being listened to. I was despising the day of small things. It went on thus year after year—occasional gleams of hope with long intervals of darkness; resolutions publicly to profess Christ, followed by cowardly fears; daily prayer, with some sweet experience of Christ's presence, but oftener with little comfort. I was all the while trying to be a great Christian—when I should have reached that point I would seek communion with the church. But somehow the light did not grow brighter, my hope would not become stronger, I made no progress. I was not a happy Christian. I now see that I was neglecting my duty; that I was refusing to walk in the light according to the degree which Christ had granted me, and so it did not grow brighter as I was looking for too much—for some great thing. My heart was proud and full of unbelief. I did not understand the ways of God. But God, who is infinite in mercy, at length sent one of His servants to reason with me, and to show me that I was despising the work of grace in my heart. He told me that to have the love of God shed abroad there I must obey His commands. Then the little light would increase. I asked God to help me do my duty. My prayers have been heard. And to-day I appear before you, brethren, as a little Christian! That is all I can say of myself. If you can accept me as such, I shall thank God."

Such was the simple, artless recital uttered by a man about sixty years of age, when seeking admission to communion with one of the churches of Christ. Spoken in calm and measured words, with every appearance of humility, it found a response in every Christian heart present. He was gladly welcomed; and on the day in which he publicly joined himself to the Lord his days of darkness were ended. He entered at once upon a course of Christian activity, honoring God by his consistent life. After a few years he "fell asleep."—British Messenger.

Importance of Spiritual Things.—We are sometimes told of the mighty doings which go on within the walls of an exchange, where the bargains that are made from week to week, the commercial transactions which are settled, bear on the state and fortune of whole classes of society; or within the walls of a university, where the lessons daily given are deposited in the minds of assembled youth, who, in the coming age, are to fill the highest departments of public usefulness; or within the walls of a court house, whose sentences are passed by which character, and property, and life, the dearest of all earthly interests, are disposed of; or within the walls of a Parliament, on whose votes and decisions hang the fate of nations, and those great events which figure on the arena of this world's large and visible history. But to a man of larger vision, who has an eye and a comprehension for things still larger than these, all that we have now spoken of is eclipsed and cast into the shade by the might and the magnificence of those doings which take place within the walls of a church, and which concern a far sublimer history than that of nations—even the history of souls subsisting in immortal vigor after all the empires of earth shall have fallen; and on the high scale and reckoning of eternity, the annals of our entire species, from the creation to the day of judgment, shall appear like a tale that is told, or but a brief evolution in the progress of an administration that never ends. They are words of eternal life which are spoken here, and on your reception of these words it depends whether that life is to be laid hold of, or that life of blessedness and glory is to be forever forfeited. They are the seeds of an unfading vegetation which are falling abroad and being scattered here; and it will depend on the soil of your own hearts whether they shall germinate into the briers and thorns whose end is to be burnt, or into trees of righteousness, to be afterward transplanted into the paradise of God.—Chalmers.

A little youngster, two and a half years old, who had heard some complaint in the family about pegs in shoes hurting the feet, approached his mother the other day, with his fingers in his mouth, and said, "Mamma, me dot pegs tumming in my mouf and dey hurt me." And sure enough, the little fellow was cutting two or three nice teeth.

To be Read While Sipping One's Wine.—Mr. W. J. Flagg, of Ohio, has just published a book giving the result of his investigation during a recent tour in Europe into the wine producing districts. He tells us what they do, for instance, in the wine press house of La Tour, "one of the three reigning houses of Haut Medoc, by decree of the Bordeaux of Commerce, and the suffrage of princely drinkers the world over:" A pile of grapes, ready stemmed, was headed in conical form on the pressoir (a large shallow box) and five or six men with trowsers rolled above the knees, were trotting about in a circle, trampling the pile under foot, beginning at the outer circumference, and gradually contracting their circuit until they meet in the middle, and on the top of the cone. This they call "fouler a pied," (crushing with the feet.) There might be a cleaner way of doing the thing—I don't think there might be a fouler. * * * Inquired of the workmen if they washed their feet before tramping the grapes, and was told they did not. One of them enlightened my ignorance by explaining that wine had the power to fling off all impurities, so that it was no sort of consequence how free they made with it.

There is a mode of rousing up the sickening process, and at the same time bringing other skins and seeds which have settled to the bottom in contact with the new made alcohol, so that the latter may combine well with the coloring matter they attain. This consists in stirring up the whole mass from bottom to top. It is done twice during the process of fermentation. It needs a good hour's hard work each time. It is done by men. It takes four men to do it well. They all strip naked—naked as Adam when he was good—into the wine vat—chin deep they go in; and there, with feet and hands, fingers and toes, turn it over, stir about, and mix the liquid that was getting clear with the pomace that was depositing itself, and—

Make the gruel thick and slab,
And like a hell broth boil and bubble.

The nice, sweet Bordelais man only puts his foot in it, but the Burgundian does the whole figure. It is done to give the wine a full body. They call it fermenting on the skin. Nor is the custom confined to Burgundy alone. * * * Stirring up with poles they tried, but the warmth of the human body was wanting, and the result, they say, was not good. Besides, it was hard work.

Where Woman's Power Lies.—The true power of woman is in the resistless power of affection! In asserting this, am I attempting to mask the great questions of the day with "a glittering generality?" Am I disposed to deny any lawful claim which woman may make for a more extensive recognition of her rights, or a larger field for her powers? No; I am not doing any such thing. Let woman do whatever her faculties can achieve—let her go wherever her instincts demand. If she truly follows her instincts, I am sure she will not go wrong. I am sure of this also, that wherever man may lawfully go, woman may lawfully go. Wherever woman ought not to be, it is a shame for man, it is a shame for humanity to be. I merely insist upon this, that whatever woman may accomplish in the world, with brain or hands, will draw its vital efficacy, its talismanic virtue from the heart; and that her strength in all these various shapes of action and of influence, in its root and essence, will be the strength of the affections. The hiding of a woman's power must ever be in the fervor and steadfastness of her love. And her most triumphant characteristic is love, culminating in its highest expression—that of self-sacrifice. A thoughtful writer has observed the contrast between the sexes even in their play. "The boy," he says, "gets together wooden horses and a troop of tin soldiers, and works with them. The girl takes a doll and works for it." This is woman's great peculiarity—the work of self sacrifice—working for others.—Rev Dr. Chapin.

The truffle is a peculiar kind of mushroom, growing under ground which is produced in France, where about $4,000,000 worth are annually sold. They grow only in well-drained land, over limestone rock, and under a very few trees and shrubs, mainly oak. They are found by having dogs trained for that purpose, which smell them out and which indicate by their scratching where the master is to put in his spade. Another way is to allow a hog, held by a string fastened to his leg, to search for them, and he will begin to root where they may be found. The attempt to cultivate them has been hitherto unsuccessful; but it is said that M. Rosser of Carpentras, has at last succeeded.

The Indians are reported to be down on Grant's Quakers. "Uncle" cried Hole-in-the-Bottles, chief of the Arapahoes, "Quakers no good; bring water, no whisky."

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

To the Ministers and Members of the M. E. Church South—DEAR BRETHREN: 1. Of the ministry. Have you lifted your collection for domestic missions for the current year? If not, do not delay longer; your Conference is close at hand, and the drafts of your board must be paid, or our missionaries suffer. 2. Of the membership. Have you made your contributions this year to the Board of Domestic Missions? If not, do not delay. Do not bestow a meagre sum; the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

MOBILE, August 23, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I write you a brief note to inform you that the week of prayer has been observed at Franklin street church with profitable results. We expect to protract the services through the present week, with prayer meeting at six o'clock in the morning and preaching at night.

We are favored with the presence and labors of Brother J. C. Wills, of the Southern University, who has greatly endeared himself to all our people. They feel that the mental and moral training of their boys is most happily secured in such hands.

The Lord give us all "the spirit of power." God bless you!

Fraternally yours,

J. BANCROFT.

ISAAC KEENE, of Duxbury, lately visited the school in his district, and on being asked to talk to the children, offered each an acre of good land to plant "on shares," he furnishing the manure and plowing the same, and at the end of two years he promised to give a clear title of the land to such as had industriously improved it in a good and farm like manner.

LIVE TO-DAY.

Our mental life lies mostly in the past and the future. We are struggling to invest the present hour with the brightness of more youthful days, or we are looking for something more satisfactory in the time to come. The earthly career of men is exhausted in reflecting upon what they have been, or in making plans for subsequent consummation. It is a rare thing, indeed, to find any one who believes in the present and enjoys it—who extracts from it the greatest good, and who does not allow this good to be alloyed or discounted by the pictures of memory or of hope. Both of these faculties have a most beneficent office, and without them our being shrinks nearly to the level of the brutes. Memory and hope are the nearest approximations to the divine prescience in man. In some sort past, present and future subsist at once, and at least the shadow of "the Eternal Now" is reflected by the human soul. But when all has been said of these most divine capabilities, we are not justified in neglecting the realities of to-day.

The former days may have been better for some of us than these.—Because we were younger, and because then every aspect of life was clad in halos of orange and rose, and chiefly because they are numbered amongst the things of the past, these former days lie behind us as banks of golden clouds and crimson twilight. It is, however, a wrong to ourselves to be so lost and absorbed with the images of memory, and to dwell so completely amidst the shadows of yesterday, that we are unconscious of the providential gifts which actually surround us. The truth is, we were just as dissatisfied with the former days as we are with these, and they have reached their apotheosis in our minds, not that they were better, but because they are dead and gone. It was hard work for the heathen to deify their heroes until they had been some time dead, and but few saints bear canonization until their memories are somewhat obscured by the lapse of time.

It is a merciful law that we most easily forget the sad and afflictive, whilst the joyous makes the most lasting impress. Owing to this law the scars of the storm and the flood are not revealed, whilst the sunshine lies always upon the fields we have traversed. The darkness and gloom are gone, and only "the light of other days" remains. The discord of passion and the wails of sorrow have passed into silence, whilst every cheerful melody sings on in the heart forever. Time surely matures our pleasurable sensations, and throws a mellowing mantle, like the haze of an Indian summer, over our deepest sorrows. It is more characteristic of the aged to dwell fondly upon the past, and the encroachment of years is pretty fairly marked by this tendency. It is, however, always most refreshing to meet with old people who are able to sympathize with the young, and to appreciate the progress and spirit of the times. After passing the middle of life there is danger of living too much in the past. There is a blessing in the present moment, and real good and happiness where we are, and it is the part of wisdom and duty to seize them ere they pass beyond our reach.

Whilst so much of life is spent in the past, to the neglect and loss of the present hour, there is another source of waste in the future. Here the younger are involved in mistaken views of life and its true philosophy. Time is wasted in dreams of the future quite as much as in the reveries of the past. To the young there is no retrospect, and the present is nothing but a point of departure into the Utopia of coming days or years. Very few pause and resolve to be happy now; few improve the passing moment as if they realized that it comes laden with all manner of store for the mind and the spirit. If it is true that ought it so to be? Is it not a false life and a sinful one, from beginning to end, that is ever trampling under foot the blessings we have, in the hurried and blind pursuit of some better thing which is supposed to lie before us? The present day may be just as full of happiness for us as any to come. It has its troubles and vexations, its toil and anxieties; but to-morrow may not be any better, and it may be a great deal worse. Probably the most of us, whatever may be our ages, will never be any better off in this world than we are now. The elements of real happiness will not be greater at any subsequent period of life. Restless and dissatisfied, the majority press on after wealth, position, knowledge and fame. But whether successful or not, they will have reached a condition of more thorough discontent than ever. We cannot, however, persuade ourselves that we shall never see more favorable days, and that we may lose what little good there is in life by depreciating the present. Our earthly life, up to a certain point, is in the future—beyond the horizon of to-day. Its forms are all crowned, and wield sceptres, and move in an atmosphere of intoxicating light. Later in the voyage the golden age—the Elysian of our hopes—becomes the Hesperides of memory. The aureola of the future now rests upon the brow of the past, and we have moved as by enchantment from one sphere of illusion to another, scarcely less gorgeous and bewildering.

We believe the true philosophy of our temporal being is to live to-day, while memory and hope play around us as the auroras and twilights of our earthly horizon; but in the direction of religious duty and experience the subject has a most important application. Living to-day solves the entire problem of duty. What the hand finds to do is to be done "with thy might." No call of the hour can be postponed without guilt. Christ did not allow one of His disciples to go and bury his father, and He did not permit another to bid them farewell which were at home. The call of the Gospel to sinners comes with the demand of an instantaneous surrender, and the proffer of a present salvation. The state of religion in the soul is determined by the present grace. Delightful are the recollections of the hour of conversion, when the light of heaven shone upon us for the first time, and the divine baptism melted and transfused the soul. Such an experience is to the believer what the scene of the transfiguration was to the three favored apostles—calculated to exalt, confirm and strengthen. But the life of faith cannot be sustained by the past. There must be a present hold on Christ, and present holiness and communion with God. The hope of heaven is as an anchor of the soul amidst the tempests of these storm-beaten shores; but this hope must rest upon a state of present regeneration and acceptance.—Sinners are expecting to become religious; Christians are intending to become more holy and useful. They are waiting for signs, and for the more convenient season. To-day is the time of all promised grace—"As thy day"—dying grace for the dying hour, grace for affliction when it comes, grace for each new occasion and for every relation and burden. As the manna was given to meet the present actual wants of the hosts of Israel, so is the grace of God promised. Christians must live to-day. To-day they must be holy, and aim at the maximum of usefulness; and to-day they must gird their loins and trim their lamps. Now is the only Gospel tense.

DR. WILLIAM SMITH, who has become so well known by his ably prepared Dictionary of the Bible, is now engaged in preparing, by various hands, a Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, extending more particularly over the period of time from the apostles to the days of Charlemagne. It cannot but be an interesting work.

MANY have puzzled themselves about the origin of evil. I observe there is evil, and that there is a way to escape it, and with this I begin and end.

CAMP MEETING HINTS.

We have quite a list of camp meeting notices, which we hope to see lengthened. One or two are awkwardly written, and remind us of some of the heartiest hospitality we ever experienced; for a hearty welcome is not always a smooth one. While "preachers" are specially invited, we doubt not the "people" also were included in the writer's mind. As for ourself, we shall not stand upon the style of the card, but go right along to any camp meeting within reach, and feel at home the very moment we get within the first circle of tents, and advise everybody else to do the same thing. A camp meeting, by its very constitution and intention, is a pressing solicitation to saints and sinners to partake of the "fatness of the Lord's house." If one attends, but lives so far off as not to be able to tent, he should not fail to take with him a pocket Bible, a Zion's Songster, a cheerful countenance, and a heart full of joy and faith. He will then be ready to impart or to receive of the good things which the Holy Spirit has prepared for the people of God. Let him leave behind every care and worldly concern, as if he were leaving Egypt, and go up bravely, as if he were going by appointment to meet the Lord in the wilderness. For one week abandon absolutely the affairs of earth, or trust them to Him who, with enriching dews, waters the corn while men sleep. As the great crops wave their leaves in the air, or pierce the dull earth with their fibres in search of food and life, let men immortal reach forth to receive the gracious gifts of the Holy Ghost, and open their hearts to drink in the life which He sheds abundantly upon assembled saints.

Take all the children, if you tent, from the eldest even to the least. Strive to bring all who have come to years of responsibility to the altar; urge upon them the necessity there is that they become new creatures in Christ Jesus. Work for the conversion of your neighbors' children, as well as your own. Let the camp meeting kindle first upon this point, and we will answer for it that there will follow a time of power which will shake the stontest and oldest sinners.

Attend well to all the conveniences for lighting the ground at night, for comfortably seating the congregation, and for entertaining strangers. Often petty annoyances, such as smoking lights, badly arranged seats, and an imperfect supply of good water, or a want of good fencing or curbing at the spring, have seriously affected the comfort and the success of a meeting. When we take pains in great things to serve God, why fail for want of attention to small matters? So, too, do not have musty straw for bedding, or a tent roof that will not turn water.

In the "stand" do not preach everything; but rather men of prayer, experience and known power. Much is to be done in a little time. What, therefore, mainly is needed is concentrated faith—sermons with an edge and an unction from the Holy One. Young preachers have sometimes the fire of a whole life in the first years of their ministry.—Those who have the control of the preaching had well have this also in mind. Time and the occasion are too valuable to be wasted in compliment upon either D. Ds or licentiates. Preach the men who seem fittest to do the work.

Just a little way "down the mount" stand the elders of Israel, and to them we must of all look for success—that is, to those venerable ones who sit about the altar; whose "amens" give emphasis to the word, and whose upholdings sustain the mind of the preacher as Aaron and Hur did the arms of Moses. As they pray, so will the shout of triumph be heard. Among these, too, we expect to find the chief singers. Every Psalm of David was addressed to some master of holy song. Oh! what a divine art is that which can render words of gratitude, and love, and faith in sweet chords, and bear the soul half way to heaven upon the anthems of God's house! Have an eye to the singing. Do not let everybody volunteer to lead this important part of a good meeting, but give it in charge to one or two who are capable of managing this delightful part of worship. Selah.

THE MATERIAL WELFARE OF THE SOUTH.

The material prosperity of the Southern States promises to be greater than ever before. Though not intended by its foes nor expected by itself, the effect of the war may already be seen enhancing many fold its resources for the production and the accumulation of wealth. The system of slavery fixed a vast amount of capital annually, which in all other countries remained available and free. No other system forces the employer to invest in the muscles of the laborer. But the Southern planter was shut up to the necessity of putting, year by year, his earnings in this form. The character of the institution drove away all competition.—The vast multitudes of immigrants which poured themselves into this country from Europe could not be tempted to visit fields which were cultivated by slaves; so that the evil propagated itself. This form of capital was subject to many disabilities, and, as has since been demonstrated, was in its nature of all values the most artificial and uncertain. Liable to constant attack from without, it had to be maintained in the face of the public opinion of the world, with the abiding conviction within that its ultimate destruction was only a question of time—though it proved to be, alas! one also of blood. The energies of the South, political, commercial and industrial, were all strained and taxed to the utmost to sustain this unnatural form of labor, for it largely excluded every other form of capital. For threescore years she has had to content herself with agriculture, and agriculture only, because the laborer she had was incapable for use in manufactories, foundries, ship yards or machine shops. The whole inventive genius of the past, and the brilliant arts of the nineteenth century were to her as though they never had been, because the skull of the negro was too heavy and his fingers too clumsy for anything but field work. The value of her single product was regulated in the mart of Liverpool, and her laws were determined in the halls of Massachusetts. She was chained down by barbarous hordes that had been placed upon her soil by the rovers of New England and England—hordes by nature imbecile, and wholly incapable of the life and forward movement of other races. Adjusting herself to the situation, she at length became content with the largest evil that ever oppressed the energies of man. But the covetousness and ambition of those who originally fastened upon her this social, economical and political manacle worked out for her a deliverance. The war did not free the slave half so much as it did his master; and the South never knew what it was to breathe freely until these shackles of New England's forging fell from her limbs. Little, too, did the selfish Northern politician and people, who sought power and money by the abolition sensation, imagine that they were letting go and breaking up that wonderful monopoly which constituted them the sole artisans and manufacturers for ten millions of agriculturists. At the recent commencement at Greensboro one of the orators exclaimed: "Thank God! we are freed from the negro;" and the whole audience involuntarily applauded. This we believe to be the settled estimate of the situation, that the South was never so free before. Political disabilities will pass away as mists before the golden sun when that full prosperity, which is now about to burst forth, challenges the admiration and envy of the world. In a country where justice, law and position are regulated by money, it is not difficult to imagine the place which this end of the Union will soon hold. Long repressed, the boundless energy of her soil and her sons will now shoot up like the aloe. Her delightful climate, her mines, her gold-producing plants, her water power and her valuable forests will attract men from every country, and in twenty years the mills of Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi will make protection a tax upon the North and West.

We have no desire to see the African immigration and the European immigration now supplemented by a third. We need no greater facilities for cultivating the soil than those we now have. If the white man cannot encounter the heat of the cotton field, so much the better; let a share of our capital be turned into the workshop, and find in the check upon agriculture its greatest ultimate advantage. Let us keep this country for the Anglo-Saxon—at any rate for the Caucasian. Let us not entail upon our children those conflicts which have come upon us through the constant and large infusion of strangers and races which we could not assimilate. A large number of the barbarous people from the cities of Europe and of Asia will find their way here. We need not go out to seek them. We need not organize to attract them. We have a full proportion of field laborers. We need no more success in that direction, for a small crop of cotton will bring in as much money as a large one. We want now to diversify our sources of income, and not put all our eggs in one basket. Let us learn to make locomotives and railroad iron, to build ships, and to manufacture woolen, and cotton, and silk fabrics. Let us carry our own products over every sea in our own bottoms. Then we shall be strong with the strength of the nineteenth century.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the Southern Publishing House, 112 Camp street, Rev. R. J. Harp, agent:

THE PRINCE OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID. By the Rev. J. H. Ingraham, rector of Christ church, Holly Springs, Mississippi, author of Pillar of Fire, etc. Boston: Roberts Bros. 1869. Pp. 472, 12mo.

This work has been before the public since 1859, and has been received with many expressions of admiration, the most marked of which is the great demand there is still for it. A Jewish maiden from Alexandria visits Judea during the days of John the Baptist and Jesus of Nazareth. She, in a series of letters, describes to her father the wondrous event of that period. The author has assigned to himself a difficult task: to satisfy the imagination, and with due reverence bring out the grandeur and beauty of the life of the wondrous Son of Man, so as not to repeat merely the words of the Scriptures, but to elevate our conception of His person and His coming by lights and incidents both probable and new. We can recommend it as an interesting and instructive book, and admirably adapted for drawing on the mind to a far deeper mine of truth—the New Testament. It is worthy of a place in every Sunday school library; and in these days of unmeaning or vicious fiction it might displace in any library a shelf full of modern romances.

SINCE the Queen of Madagascar was baptized almost all the higher officers are coming forward as candidates for baptism. Mr. Toy now has at Ambohipotsy more than a hundred under weekly instruction. Among these are the chief of the idol keepers, the late Queen's astrologer, several of the present Queen's household, the head of the civilians, and other members of the government, many of whom are getting quite old men. This great influx of those who were a short time ago idolators, and some of them fierce persecutors of Christianity, is not without its risk; but the missionaries are doing what they can for the purity of the church. Last year twenty thousand persons joined the Christian congregation. The missionaries expect the same addition, if not a larger one, during the present year. Everywhere, therefore, church building is most active, and the mission press has its hands more than full. A hundred congregations are building churches, of which one-third will hold from eight hundred to twelve hundred each.

THE MYSTERY SOLVED.

The times are pregnant with startling events; old isms, theories and fallacies are fast disappearing beneath the gigantic wheels of progress and human development. Change is written with the iron finger of time upon all matter seen and unseen, material and spiritual. The mighty, omnipotent power that fashioned the stupendous orbs that revolve in the immensity of space, created all things in wisdom and purity. The majestic ocean, the deep blue sea, the beautiful earth and all things therein contained, were planned and created by virtue of that universal law of harmony, whose power holds away over all. Intelligence is manifested in all created things, both great and small—the tiny insect, the beautiful butterfly, and God-like man, are each endowed, according to their kind, with that instinct or intelligence ordained by Him who "doeth all things well."

Wisdom, justice and love are the three great standard-bearers whose sumptuous hands mete out to each individuality the measure of divine, universal law, designed by that mighty Mind who fashioned alike noble man in His own image and all lesser created things. The beauties and wonders of nature never cease to the progressive human mind. Eternal progress is written with the unerring finger of Deity upon all. The theme of human life is laden with sweet incense to all who, like angels of mercy and goodness, are ever busy, ever ready to devise means for the alleviation of human woe and the prolongation of life. The unceasing march of individual and national progress is alone due to the bold and fearless thinkers and actors upon the stage of mundane life. The stern exigencies that confront and imperil the gigantic minds of all countries cannot awe or swerve them in the path of duty and power. Disease and death now hold carnival throughout the land; suffering humanity calls loudly for the "Balm of Gilead," whose subtle, mystic power can heal and save from wreck and ruin. A saving and skillful hand may be found ready to administer to the suffering at all times, in Prof. Hamilton, at his old medical emporium, where thousands, from all countries and climes, have received the healing balm for every ill.

In Harper's Monthly Magazine for February, 1868, may be found a life of Prof. R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, M. D., whose discoveries in reference to

are now attracting the attention of the whole medical world, and whose success is carrying joy and restored health to thousands.

His well attested cases of liver diseases, lung diseases, blood diseases and diseases of the kidneys, bladder, spine, stomach and other organs, are now well known all over the United States and Canada, the West Indies, Europe, Mexico, Sandwich Islands, and in many of the commercial and missionary settlements in every part of the world.

For the benefit of the sick who may wish to know positively when they have derangements of the liver, of more or less severity, a combination of the usual symptoms found in such cases will be found below:

SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

A sallow or yellow color of the skin, or yellowish brown spots on the face and other parts of the body; dullness and drowsiness, with frequent headache; bitter or bad taste in the mouth, dryness of the throat and internal heat; palpitation of the heart; in many cases a dry, teasing cough, with sore throat; unsteady appetite; sour stomach, with a rising of the food and choking sensation in the throat; sickness and vomiting; distress, heaviness, or a bloated or full feeling about the stomach or sides, which is often attended with pains and tenderness; aggravating pains in the sides, back or breasts, and about the shoulders; colic pain and soreness through the bowels, with heat; constipation of the bowels, alternating with frequent attacks of diarrhea; piles, flatulence, nervousness, coldness of the extremities; rush of blood to the head, with symptoms of apoplexy; numbness of the limbs, especially at night; cold chills, alternately with hot flushes, with dullness, low spirits, unsociality and gloomy forebodings; and with ladies, female weakness and irregularities.

DISEASES CAUSED BY LIVER COMPLAINT

The human system, the most perfect of all the works of the Creator, is so constituted that, to be entirely healthy, it must throw off the waste, worn out and poisonous materials as fast as it takes on new materials from our food and drink. The food is assimilated and made into nourishing and healthy blood principally through the offices of the stomach, liver and lungs. The worn out materials are mostly excreted by the liver, lungs and kidneys; but all medical men have heretofore failed to recognize the vast importance of the liver as a blood-purifying and excreting organ. The most learned German physiologists, who base their assertions upon actual experiments only, state that the amount of bile which should be manufactured by the liver and poured into the intestines each day is two and one-half pounds. All persons interested to know this fact, and the experiments to prove it may consult Verhaungs-saefte und Stoffwechsel, Leipzig, 1862, or they may see a resume of these facts in Prof Dalton's Physiology.

Remember one thing more: The bile is something more than the natural physic of the bowels, as has heretofore been thought by eminent medical men. The bile is mostly made up of the waste matter of the blood—effete worn out and injurious materials. If the liver does not make this bile and pour it into the intestines daily, it remains in the blood as a poison. It poisons the blood itself, and circulates as irritating and poisonous matter in the blood, to every organ in the system.

The blood, poisoned with the daily accumulated excess of bile, returns from the liver to the heart, and the nerves of the heart are affected, and we have an oppressed feeling at the heart and palpitation; and if this cause is long continued we get a chronic irritation, undue excitement and morbid nutrition of the heart, developing many forms of heart disease.

Just so with the lungs. The bile-poisoned blood goes from the upper and right cavity of the heart to the lower cavity, and the ee directly to the lungs, circulating all through these most delicate organs. The lung tissues are poisoned and irritated and they invite the scrofulous humors of the blood, because they are thus irritated. Hence consumption, which is local scrofula, so defined and proved by Lugol and all the most scientific authors. The lungs try to oxygenize and purify the blood, and they do in a great measure; but they are overworked and irritated, and you smell the blood-poison matter in the man's foul breath. Catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, nervous cough and consumption itself are the results. If the liver had done its duty—made and excreted that bile—the lungs would not have been diseased.

Just so with the blood itself. It goes from the lungs back to the upper left cavity of the heart, thence to the lower cavity, and thence through the arteries and capillaries to every organ and tissue of the system. Among the most important of these organs are the kidneys, purifying the urinary secretion a most important secretion. But the kidneys themselves are irritated and congested by the presence of this bile-poisoned blood, and they become diseased. Every person who has had a liver disease knows that the urine is scanty, high colored and loaded with red deposits at times, or other diseased products. Hence diseases not only of the kidneys, but also of the bladder.

But this is not all—far from it. The poisoned blood goes to the brain and affects the great electrical centre of all vitality; and the brain, stimulated by unhealthy blood, cannot perform its office healthfully. The person has dullness, headache, incapacity to keep his mind on a subject, cannot remember, has a crowded and dizzy feeling, is sleepy, becomes nervous, gloomy, easily irritated and often has a zillions or neuralgic headache.

And the blood itself becomes diseased; as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin it is so irritating and poisonous that the person has discolored brown spots, pimples, blotches and other eruptions, sores, boils, carbuncles and other scrofula tumors.

Disease of the liver itself is the most common of all diseases. The sudden changes of the New England climate, the malarial influence of the West, and the heat also of the South, as well as the dietetic habits of the people of this country, and other causes, all tend to develop the liver disease, in some of the varied forms, throughout the United States. This is true of both man and beast, as every butcher knows that he finds the livers of cattle, sheep and swine diseased ten times where he finds any other organ diseased once. Almost every person is bilious at some time, and many are constantly bilious. It may be mere congestion of the liver and torpidity of its function, or this may result in some structural or organic affection. But the liver can never be diseased without affecting the stomach, bowels, and the other organs we have spoken of, and costiveness, piles, dropsy, diarrhea and impoverished blood are among the necessary results.

CHRONIC DISEASES

Prof. Hamilton will also inform the afflicted that, having been written to by thousands of patients, his office has become the greatest centre for the treatment of novel, interesting and peculiar cases of any place in the world. No hospital in Europe or America has one tenth the number of singular and remarkable cases as are presented, either personally or by letter, at No. 546 Broadway. It is, indeed, an emporium of clinical medicine. Among the thousands of cases arising from diseases of the liver, lungs and blood, which he treats, the following receive a prominent and most successful attention: Sick and bilious headache, nervous and neuralgic headache, chronic diarrhea and dysentery, costiveness and piles, pimples, eruptions and brown skin, dropsy and diseases of the kidneys, consumption of the blood, scrofula in all its forms, spinal irritation, salt rheum and erysipelas, cancers, asthma, epileptic fits, nervous diseases of the heart, diseases of females, and all diseases arising from impurities of the blood, rheumatism, catarrh and throat diseases, etc.

SYNOPSIS

For the greater convenience of those wishing to write me about their diseases, I insert the following, which embraces nearly all that I require to know in most cases: Have you constipation of the bowels? Have you attacks of diarrhea? Have you pains in the back, sides, or shoulders? Have you a pain or tenderness about the stomach? Have you a dry, teasing cough? Have you sallow or yellow skin? Have you brown spots on your face or any part of the body? Have you a headache? Are you dull, heavy or sleepy? Have you a bitter or bad taste in the mouth? Have you an irritation or dryness in the throat? Have you palpitation of the heart? Have you cold chills or hot flushes? Is your appetite unsteady? Is your stomach sour? Do you raise or spit up your food? Have you any choking spells? Are you troubled with sickness and vomiting? Do you feel bloated about the stomach? Have you a tired or sore feeling on rising in the morning? Do you have colic pains? Have you wind in the stomach or bowels? Have you piles or fistula? Have you nervous and all-gone feelings? Have you cold feet and hands? Have you a rush of blood to the head? Have you uneasiness on lying on the sides? Have you fainting or epileptic fits? Have you great lowness of spirits? Have you gloomy forebodings?

PLEASE READ THE FOLLOWING, AND SEE WHO ARE CURED.

R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, M. D.—Dear Sir: Duty prompts me to a most grateful acknowledgment of the astonishing success of your treatment in my case. For nearly three years I have suffered from catarrh, nervous rheumatism, liver complaint and extreme nervousness, insomuch that life had become an intolerable burden, and death was looked for as my only release. Physically and mentally broken down, I was utterly unable to do the duties of a minister, and was preparing to retire from the ranks, when providentially my eyes fell on your advertisement in the New York Methodist. I had already traveled far and expended so much in the vain effort to secure a cure that it was with great reluctance and little hope that I addressed you. Your reply inspired me with hope—your remedies were received and taken, and the result was as marvelous to those who knew my condition as it was gratifying to myself. In THREE WEEKS I was again in the pulpit, preaching with unusual vigor, and if my services are of any value to the church it is indebted to you, under God, for their continuance. You may refer to me at any time, and I shall be ever pleased to bear testimony to your extraordinary skill.

Yours truly,

REV. JOSEPH JONES,
St. Joseph, Michigan.

CASES OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

It is with much satisfaction that I invite particular attention to the following voluntary statement of the eminent divine and missionary, the Rev. A. A Constantine, recently located in the interior of Africa:

No. 43 Ann St., New York City.

DR. R LEONIDAS HAMILTON, No 546 BROADWAY—My Dear Benefactor: A sense of duty impels me to say that your medicines have done for me what no other physician has been able to do. I have been a sufferer for many years from diseases contracted while laboring as missionary in Africa. Last fall I was declining fast, and had all the symptoms of quick consumption. I applied to you for help. You remarked: "Before I get through with you I will make you feel several years younger than you have ever felt since you left Africa." I thought but little of that, as I had often received similar assurances from eminent physicians, both here and in Europe; but in less than two weeks all my symptoms were entirely changed, and my health and strength improved very fast. In a few weeks I found myself in the enjoyment of better health, and able to perform more labor; mental and physical, than at any previous time since I left Africa. May God bless you in all your researches in His great laboratory, and make you His agent in restoring thousands to health.

REV. A. A. CONSTANTINE.

TO THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE

During my labors in publishing and editing a newspaper for many years in this city, and also in the performance of my duties as a clergyman in this and other cities, I have become thoroughly and intimately acquainted with R. Leonidas Hamilton, M. D., the justly celebrated Liver, Lung and Blood Physician of this city, who is located at No 546 Broadway. The Doctor was for many years a regular practicing physician, and also for many years a professor in one of our best medical schools and during such extensive experience he fully realized the inadequacy of the ordinary treatment made use of in all chronic diseases, more especially that class of troubles arising from deranged functions of the liver and digestive organs. He at once set himself about the study of the class of diseases, determined to make them a specialty. Laying the vegetable world under tribute he has made discoveries and compounded specifics on sound philosophical principles, which have made the most wonderful cures in the annals of medicine. Liver, Blood, Lung and Nervous diseases are now virtually under his full control and yield to the magic, subtle power of his remedies. I have myself seen numbers of those who have been saved from the hand of death by his power, when the unfortunate sufferers seemed doomed to an early grave and all other treatment was of no avail. In addition to what I can vouch for personally, I have ample evidence from other clergymen, physicians and eminent men of the highest character, who have also been saved by this wonderful treatment, and who speak in the highest praise and gratitude of Dr. Hamilton as a physician and a gentleman of honor and integrity. It is but simply stating the positive truth when I say that it is well known throughout this country that where his works are known and the fruits of his skill have been witnessed, he is highly esteemed by the people as the most eminent and remarkable physician in the treatment of chronic diseases, of the age.

As the result of a long personal and familiar acquaintance with Prof. Hamilton and his unparalleled success as a professional man of the highest order, I frankly express the hope that diseased humanity in every part of our land may avail themselves of his most remarkable skill, and thus share the noble blessings so kindly and freely bestowed upon all.

Most respectfully,

REV. W. H. JACOBS.

THE WORK GOES BRAVELY ON.

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN CURED!

The eminent divine, Rev. J. W. Hinkley, of Athens, Maine, writes:

"My health has so far improved from the effects of your treatment that I am able to resume my pastorship. Had it not been for your medicine I should not be living now. To you, with God's blessing, do I owe my worldly existence. I am a living exponent of the worth of your matchless remedies, and I shall hereafter deem it a part of my religious duty to recommend all sufferers with diseases of the Liver or Lungs to speedily apply to you. May God's blessing attend your worthy efforts for the relief of diseased and suffering humanity."

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN HEALED.

BOONTON New Jersey.

R. L. HAMILTON, M. D.—Dear Sir: It is with pleasure that I communicate the result of the use of your medicines. When I first visited your office in New York I could scarcely walk into the office without exhaustion. With all your prestige as a successful physician I had but little hope that you could cure me. There was nothing strange in this. Four years and four months had passed away, but during that period I had suffered constantly with chronic diarrhoea and piles. I had some of the best physicians, and used everything I heard of that I could procure, but all in vain. Why should I think that you could do me more good than others? But, sir, justice and gratitude compel me to say that after the use of your medicines the result was a complete cure. I cannot expect to be freed from liabilities to attacks of disease any more than other men. I wish I had the voice of seven thunders, and could assemble the sick in the world. I would direct them to you, sir, as one fully competent to heal, and whose generous and noble nature would not allow exorbitant charges. Yours truly

REV. GEORGE H. JONES.

A CLERGYMAN CURED OF RHEUMATISM

POINTVILLE, New Jersey.

PROF. R. L. HAMILTON—Dear Sir: I have purposely delayed writing in order to give you the results of your remedies. The medicines came to hand in due time, and I commenced using them as instructed, and have persevered. For the first week I could notice no change; the second week there seemed to be a giving way of the disease, and at the end of the third week a decided change for the better was manifest. I am now able to walk about with ease and comfort. I send you my sincere and many thanks, and pray that God may bless and preserve your life for many years. I feel that under the blessing of Divine Providence you have done great things for me. Yours truly,

REV. ISAAC HUGG.

A CLERGYMAN'S WIFE!

Mrs. Rev. George C Haddock, of Ripon, Wisconsin writes:

"The remedies you sent me last spring worked like a charm throughout my entire system. I do not believe I should have lived until the present time had I not used your medicine. It is my sincere prayer that God may bless and spare you many long years to minister to the physical being of diseased humanity. All that I can do to extend your field of labor shall be done earnestly and willingly."

A HARD CASE!

SPINE, KIDNEYS, LIVER AND BLADDER DISEASED.

DR. HAMILTON—My Best Friend and Brother: You have saved my life! This is not only certain to my own apprehension, but all my personal friends, who have known my sufferings so long and so well, join in this opinion. From a spinal disease I have suffered for years what no tongue can tell. Besides this disease, I have been afflicted with aggravated affections of the liver and spleen; and my kidneys and bladder have been so diseased that other physicians have tried their skill in vain. I have laid in hospitals for months, and I have again and again consulted the most eminent physicians and surgeons in Boston, New York, Charleston, Cincinnati, Chicago and other cities, without regard to expense. They were men of learning and great reputation, but in all honesty I must say they did me no good. After trying thoroughly their skill, they have had to acknowledge my case as complicated and hopeless—"incurable," as they have termed it. In nine weeks you have cured me—made me a new man. I had no hope, nor had my friends; but I am now right; I am well; and rejoice that, after eighteen years of suffering, I know what it is to enjoy the blessed, joyous feeling of health, vigor, life, freedom from pain, and with the power to work think and enjoy myself. I offer you this testimonial gladly. I hope it will lead hundreds to you. I know that whereof I here testify; and I shall ever take the greatest satisfaction in recommending you to all the afflicted, for to you I owe my life.

Your true friend and brother,

A. G. HUTTERFIELD,
Monroe street, between Reiford and Franklin avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

William McNellis, Eagle Rock, Venango Co., Pennsylvania, writes:

"I return my sincere thanks for having permanently cured me of rheumatism, after having suffered severely for seven years. When I had doctored with other doctors, and tried all the patent medicines that I could get, with no avail, and was so bad that I could hardly get out of my house, and part of the time not able to get out of my bed, as I was affected in nearly every joint, I thought I would try you as a last resort. To my great joy, in less than three weeks I was able to go out and jump with the most active man in the place. In one month I was perfectly cured; and had gained seventeen pounds; and I never had better health in my life than I have enjoyed for the last six months. May God bless you and your miraculous remedies."

CASES OF ASTHMA.

AKRON, New York.

TO PROF. R. L. HAMILTON—Dear Doctor: It was between six and seven years I was afflicted with that dire malady, the asthma, and after employing the best medical skill in the country and taking all the patent medicines recommended, without avail or any permanent relief, I began to think there was no cure for it; but noticing an advertisement of yours in one of the New York papers, I was with the greatest reluctance I wrote to you, as I then expected it would not benefit me, and would be worse than useless. To this I was greatly disappointed as I had not taken the medicine more than two weeks before I was able to do light work on the farm. Before this I could not attend to any business being completely prostrated, and after taking two packages, considered myself perfectly cured and my health fully re-established, the bronchial difficulties and all bad symptoms being entirely removed. All this is attributable to your unrivaled medicine, under the Divine sanction, which I trust with me will ever be remembered with gratitude. I cannot close this communication without expressions of my heartfelt gratitude and thanks for the timely aid you rendered my daughter in consumption. The efficiency of the medicine in her case has been truly miraculous. That hectic cough and flush on her cheek, with the other consumptive symptoms, have entirely left her, and now, after a period of five months, she is enjoying good health and is quite robust, so much so that she has engaged to teach school this summer. You are at liberty to show this letter to any similarly afflicted or publish it, as you think proper. Any letter of inquiry I will cheerfully answer. I am, dear Doctor, with many thanks, your humble servant,

JOSEPH LITTLE.

IMPORTANT CASE OF EPILEPTIC FITS

Read the following evidence of what my treatment has done in a case of this disease, hitherto considered incurable:

BUCKHART, Illinois.

DR. HAMILTON: My wife was afflicted with fits for ten years, attended with great spinal and nervous debility. She doctored with several physicians, but all to no purpose. I read one of your circulars, and was so impressed with your new and simple theory of disease that I determined to try your remedies. Every one in the neighborhood cried "imposition;" but, thank God, failed to persuade us from our purpose. As you know, we sent for some of your remedies, which, with the help of God, have completely and permanently cured her. She has not had a fit since; her look is strong, and her nervous vitality and strength have returned. As every attack she had was severer than the one previous, it is reasonable to suppose she could not have lived long but for the timely interference of your wonderful skill. To God be the praise; for so speedily and miraculously have your remedies worked that I can but recognize you as an instrument of Divine power in rescuing my dear companion from a terrible death.

JOHN S. SHARP.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

NONE MORE GOOD THAN ALL THE PHYSICIANS.

Mrs. Catharine Anderson, of Southampton, Bucks county, Pennsylvania, writes:

"Your medicines have worked wonders in my case. Previous to taking your remedies I have doctored with three different physicians, all of whom pronounced my disease consumption, and incurable. Cod liver oil and different kinds of syrups were taken in great quantities, but to no purpose. I was confined to my bed for six months, coughed continually, and raised great quantities of matter. My throat was swelled out nearly even with my chin, and my sufferings were most intense. I had not taken your medicines more than one week before I found great relief; my cough was much loosened, and I breathed with greater freedom and ease. My appetite was better, and I felt that a new life had opened before me. I owe my very existence to your great skill and invaluable remedies."

IN HIS MERCY HE SAVES THE AFFLICTED

Mr. John Lewis of Zollarsville, Washington county, Pennsylvania, writes:

"The medicine you sent me last spring acted like a charm. It relieved me very soon of a deranged state of the liver, stomach and bowels. The marked peculiarity of your remedies is while they act directly and thoroughly on the diseased organs, they do not depress or debilitate the system, like other liver remedies I have used. I consider you fully master of your profession; and, from your open, fair way of dealing with me, I deem you an upright, conscientious man, as well as an accomplished physician."

CURED AFTER "LONG YEARS"

DANDRIDGE, Jefferson County, Tenn.

DEAR DOCTOR: It is with great happiness that I take my pen in hand to inform you of the good effects of your truly valuable remedies. I really believe that I would long ere this have been in my grave had it not been for your timely aid. God only knows the long years of suffering I endured previous to adopting your treatment; and now, that I am free from pain, it seems as though a miracle had been wrought. I have recommended several to apply to you, and you may rest assured I will do all I can for you. May God aid you in your praiseworthy efforts in relieving poor, diseased mortals.

Ever gratefully yours,

DICY ELLISON.

CASE OF AGGRAVATED STOMACH DIFFICULTY.

Mrs. Mary A. Whitford, of East Florence, New York, writes:

PROF. HAMILTON—My Dear Sir: Your medicines were all promptly received, and taken according to directions. Louise is a well girl again. I never expected to see her so well as she is. She can do a good day's work, and can walk a mile to Sabbath school and meeting. She sends her most sincere thanks, and says you have done a "great thing" for her. You have restored her sinking health in a very short time. We shall be grateful to you as long as we live.

"TAKES PLEASURE IN MAKING KNOWN THE GOOD RESULTS."

Mr. J. H. Moshell, of Columbus, Georgia, writes—

"I received your medicine and took as directed. The effect was entirely satisfactory. Have handed out the circulars you sent me, and take great pleasure in making known the good result."

Mrs. Lethea A. Smith, of Evergreen, Avoyelles parish, Louisiana, writes—

"I feel and know that I am gaining rapidly all the time, and I know not how to express my gratitude to you for relieving me of pain and misery. I have no more gloomy forebodings; menses are regular, digestion good; in short, I feel like my former self again. Anything I can do for you, by influencing others to apply, shall be done with earnestness and great pleasure. Send me some circulars, for I feel that one should be in the hands of every diseased person throughout our impoverished Southern country."

RAISING BLOOD CURED IN FOUR DAYS.

Mr. L. C. Woodby, of Moultan, Texas, writes—

"For two months previous to taking your medicines I had been coughing up a good deal of blood and matter night and day, and could not lay my head down without this matter would run up in my throat, causing a very unpleasant sensation, and requiring a good deal of coughing and spitting before the throat could be cleared. I took your medicines three or four days when I ceased to cough up either blood or matter. I have been gaining ever since. My appetite and strength are being restored, and I consider myself in a fair way to fully recover, though my case for a long time has been regarded as hopeless."

TORRANCE, Yallabusha Co., Miss.

DR. R. L. HAMILTON—My Dear Sir: Six months ago, when I read your advertisement in the Metropolitan Record, my wife was, and had been for two years, suffering with liver complaint, chills and fever, and other ills so common in our low lands of the South, and was so reduced (having been confined to her bed for nearly a year) that I did not think she could ever recover. She commenced the use of your medicines, and to my surprise began to improve the first week and has steadily gained until the present time. She is now able to attend to her household duties, and I deem her permanently cured. She is lively and cheerful, and feels that your remedies should find a place in every Southern house. I am also happy to add that your treatment for rheumatism in my own case has been equally as satisfactory. Before using your medicine I had been subject to severe attacks for four years and, having tried all the different Pain Killers, liniments, etc., despaired of being cured.

The use of your medicine promptly, and I believe permanently, cured me. You can, if you please, make use of this letter, as I feel it my duty to do all in my power in this burning age to extend the practice of one whom I know to be capable of doing what he claims. I am well known here, as is also what you have done for me, and have already induced several to apply to you, and I shall not rest until I have made you and your wonderful cures known to all the diseased in this region. May God bless the efforts you put forth for the healing of the sick and the afflicted.

Yours truly, ROBT. E. WILBURN.

ANOTHER APPEAL TO THE INCREDULOUS!

So well knowing the general custom of the American people to denounce all advertising physicians as "humbugs," without knowing anything at all in regard to their merits, in addition to the numerous and wonderful testimonials from some of the thousands who have been cured by me, I publish below the names and addresses of a few reliable business men who know me well as a man of integrity and reliability:

John Proper, Waterford, N Y; Thomas H Slingerland, Rome, N Y; Timothy Train, attorney at law, No. 161 Broadway, New York city; A M Emerson, No. 83 Nassau street, New York city; Norval M White, clerk in New York city post office; Dr. Palmer, No. 78 Fourth avenue, New York city; Edwin Burlingame, Troy, N Y; Harvey Wilcox, Ridge Mills, N Y; Hon. R G McCreary, Gettysburg, Pa; G W Lord, attorney at law, No. 55 Liberty street, New York city; Charles Van Benthuysen & Sons, State printers, Albany, N Y; Joseph Anderson, No. 81 Adams street, Brooklyn, N Y; Riley Merrill, Sandford, N Y; Daniel Edwards, Otsego, N Y; Martin Becker, Roxbury, N Y; Thomas Colby, Moresville, N Y; Thomas Pitch, M D, Prattsville, N Y; A H Sands & Co, druggists, No. 111 William street, New York city; John E Van Etten, attorney at law, Kingston, N Y; Oscar Hamilton Sandford, N Y; Henry Hiers, Chicago, Ill; Coolidge & Adams, druggists, No. 108 John street, N Y; J Tillitson, clerk in the New York post office; E Harmon, Gettysburg, Pa.

It must be remembered that the above are all good, reliable business men, to whom any one may refer, by letter or otherwise, as to the reliability and honesty of myself as a man of business. Also below I give another list of responsible persons who have been medically treated by me with great success, any one of whom will answer any questions, by letter or in person, in regard to my treatment in their cases. Had I the space, and were it possible, I would publish the history and character of each case in full. Some of them were most wonderful cures, but for want of space can only refer to them in a general way. I do this to give the skeptical all the evidence in my power of my reliability and remarkable skill. I further wish it distinctly understood that I do not claim to cure all cases, for all reasonable people must realize that there is a point in diseased conditions which no human aid can reach, however well and skillfully it may be directed. In many instances of these grave cases the true physician can do much to soothe the pathway to the grave, and thus correspondingly elevate the undeveloped spirit and give time to prepare it for a higher existence.

REMEMBER ONE THING!

Reader: Do not think that you cannot be cured because you have tried other remedies. Let it be distinctly understood that many of my remedies are known only to myself, for many of them are discoveries of my own, and are compounded according to my own reasoning and extensive experience with the sick.

All sick persons must remember that if they wish to be put upon a course of treatment which will cure them, they can write to me their present symptoms; plainly; or patients can mark the symptoms they have, as above published. I can, in every instance, prescribe for them just as well as though I saw them, for I have constantly thousands under my treatment in various parts of the world, whom I never see, all of whom I cure as speedily and safely as those I see in person—in fact, some of the best cures ever made I have perfected in cases I never saw. All I wish to know in any case is the most prominent symptoms, and they can just as well be written as told to a physician, and he can treat the case as easily as though the patient were present.

Please write to me at once, all ye afflicted, and I will answer you promptly, and to the point, and state fully the facts as they appear, and whether you can or not be saved. Do not give up, even though your family physician has done you no good, for I have saved thousands after all hope had fled and the grave was near. The wisdom and goodness of a just Providence will not withhold the noble means for the salvation and happiness of His suffering and erring children. Also, if you expect a full and specific reply to your letter always enclose ten cents—postage must be paid in advance.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

Two Faces.—I know a little girl who has two faces.

When she is dressed up in her white dress and blue sash, and has on her blue kid shoes, and aronnd her neck a string of pearl beads, then she looks so sweet and good that you wonld wish to kiss her.

For she knows that company is going to call on her mother; and she expects that the ladies will say, "What a little darling!" or, "What lovely curls!" or, "What a sweet mouth!" and then kiss her little lips, and perhaps give her some sugar plums.

And the ladies who praise her think she is very lady-like too, for she always says, "Yes ma'am," and "No ma'am," when she ought; and says, "Thank you," so sweetly, when anything is given her.

But when she is alone with her mother, then she is sometimes very naughty. If she cannot have what she would like, or cannot do just as she wishes, then she will pout and cry and scream; and no one could ever think of kissing such homely lips.

And no one would think her to be the same little girl who behaved so prettily in company.

So, you see, this little girl has two faces. One she uses in company, and puts on with her best dress; the other she wears when she is alone with her mother.

I know another little girl who has only one face; and that is always as sweet as a peach, and never so sweet as when alone with mamma.

Which little girl do you like best? The one with two faces, or the other who has but one? And which will you be like?—The Nursery.

The Richest Boy in America.—The papers are telling about a boy in New England, now fourteen years of age, who is supposed to be the richest boy in the United States, because he has a great deal of money. To our mind the richest boy in America is the one who is good-hearted, honest, intelligent, ambitious, willing to do right. He is the one who loves his mother, and always has a kind word for her; who loves his sister or sisters, and tries to help them with true affection. He is the boy who does not call his father the "old man," but who loves him, speaks kindly to and of him, and tries to help him as the hairs of old age gather fast upon his brow.

The richest boy is the one who has pluck to fight his destiny and future. He is the one who has the manhood to do right and be honest, and is striving to be somebody; who is above doing a mean action—who would not tell a lie to screen himself or betray a friend. He whose young mind is full of noble thoughts for the future, and is determined to win a name by good deeds This is the richest boy in America. Which one of our readers is it?

This boy we like; we would be glad to see; would like to take him by the hand and tell him to go on earnestly, that success might crown his efforts. And if he is a poor boy, we should meet at the threshold, bid him enter, and give him good advice, well and kindly meant. That other rich boy, in New England, we don't care anything about, for there are fools and snobs enough to worship, flatter and spoil him.—New York paper.

The Persevering Boy.—'Sir,' said a boy, addressing a man, 'do you want a boy to work for you?'

'No,' answered the man, 'I have no such want.'

The boy looked disappointed; at least the man thought so, and he asked: 'Don't you succeed in getting a place?'

'I have asked at a good many places,' said the boy. 'A woman told me you had been after a boy, but it is not so, I find.'

'Don't be discouraged,' said the man, in a friendly tone.

'Oh! no, sir,' said the boy cheerfully, 'because this is a very big world, and I feel certain God has something for me to do in it. I am only trying to find it.'

'Just so, just so,' said a gentleman who overheard the talk. 'Come with me, my boy; I am in want of somebody like you.' He was a doctor; and the doctor thought any boy who was so anxious to find his work would be likely to do it faithfully when he found it; so he took the boy into his employ and found him all that he desired.

Yes! God has something for everybody to do in this world It's 'a very big world,' and there's room enough for all.

Dr. John Mason Good once asked a young scoffer who was attacking Christianity on account of the sins of some of its professors: "Did you ever know an uproar made because an infidel had gone astray from the path of morality?" The young man admitted he had not. "Then you allow Christianity to be a holy religion, by expecting its professors to be holy: thus, by your very scoffing, you pay it the highest compliment in your power."

FARM AND GARDEN.

Simple Plan for Curing Pea-Vine Hay.

I see in your June number, under the head of "Inquiries and answers to Inquiries," your two plans for curing pea vine hay. In some respects your plans are doubtless very good, but in others altogether, to my mind, impracticable. For instance, your "Rail Pen" plan requires the procuring of both rails and boards, to insure anything like success, before commencing to cure the hay; and that of hanging vines on the bows of a tree top set in the ground, to say the least of it, is attended with such labor and inconvenience in placing the tree top in position, as to render the undertaking almost out of the question. If by this article I can make myself understood, I will endeavor to give "Book Farmer" a simple plan for constructing pea vine stacks, and the curing of hay, that will never fail of success, however rainy the weather may be or humid the atmosphere, if carefully pursued. In the first place, procure six posts, (green pine poles will answer,) eight feet long; bore in each post with a two-inch augor three holes, two feet apart, beginning with the first hole four feet from the lower or ground end of each post; insert in the holes pins one foot long, made of hickory or other strong wood; lay off the stack thirty feet long by four feet wide. This will give three posts on each side of the stack in a straight line, fifteen feet apart one way, by four feet the other; dig the holes two feet deep, and putting in the posts turn the pins to the inside. Next procure twelve poles, sixteen feet long, (medium size;) place four of the poles on the lower row of pins, two on each side, lapped at the centre post. The stack is then ready for the first layer of vines; commence stacking by grasping the root end of as many vines as a man can well handle with both hands, throwing the vines across each pole if long enough to extend, leaving about one foot of vines at the root end on the outside of the pole; in this way pass up and down alternately on one and then on the other side of the stack; if the vines are not long enough to reach across from one pole to the other, it makes no difference, as the space will soon fill up as the stacking progresses. When the space between the first and second row of pins is well filled, lay up four other side poles as in the first instance, being careful to keep the outside of the stack perpendicular with the outer end of the vine, about one foot outside the poles. In pulling up the vines and in carrying them to the stack, care should be taken to keep the roots compact and even. After filling to the third row of pins, and placing on the last post, continue the stack in the same manner until nearly completed, when it will be necessary for the stacker to get on top and make a rounding shape to the top, so as to throw the water, during rain fall, off at the sides of the stack. Green pea vines stacked in this manner will keep perfectly sound and sweet in the open field until after the gathering of corn, and make hay far superior to any grass ever mowed, North, East or West. In this manner I have succeeded for years in saving pea-vine hay perfectly sweet, without mildew, or the loss of a pound by rot.

Stacks may after the same manner be made any size, from ten to one hundred feet long.—Quitman in Southern Cultivator.

CLOVER IN MISSISSIPPI.

I noticed last year one of your Mississippi correspondents made the inquiry, in the Cultivator, "if clover would grow upon the black lands of Mississippi?"

If I can satisfy him, or any one else who has any doubts on the subject, by giving my experience, and can induce them to try it, I shall feel that I have accomplished some good. Last February was a year ago I commenced sowing my clover, about 25th of the month. The ground was light and loose from the freezes we had. I started a number of hands to sowing, putting about one gallon of seed to the acre. The land that was sowed was in corn and cotton the year previous Some of it had been quite grassy. The land was not even plowed. The seed were dragged in with a brush, which sufficiently covered them, and gave a beautiful stand. It made a good growth the first year; this year it is from knee to hip high, and the most luxuriant growth I ever saw. My stock have grazed that portion next the houses, but have scarcely made any impression on it. I have been saving hay from it. It turned off from a ton to a ton and a half per acre. I can with my mowing and horse rake save more hay in five days than forty hands used to do by pulling fodder two weeks. I am so much pleased with it that I write this communication to induce all who have more prairie land than they can work, to try clover on it. It can be sowed in clover more cheaply than in oats; one is an annual, whilst the other may be kept up almost indefinitely. It will not succeed in post oak land. Never sow with any kind of grain, as many recommend; the grain shades it too much in spring, when it should be taking root, and when the grain dies down or is removed the tender plant dies from the hot sun. It is our cheapest renovator and fertilizer. As soon as a man gets a field of it, he wants next fine stock to eat it. Then comes as a natural consequence plenty of beef, pork, milk and butter.—C. F. Sherrod in Southern Cultivator.

SCIENTIFIC.

Restoration of Persons Apparently Dead from Drowning.

The following rules for the restoration of persons apparently dead from drowning, are those given by Prof. Benjamin Howard, of this city, and sanctioned by the Metropolitan Board of Health of the city of New York:

Rule 1.—Unless in danger of freezing, never move the patient from the spot where first rescued, nor allow bystanders to screen off the fresh air, but instantly wipe clean the mouth and nostrils, rip and remove all clothing to a little below the waist, rapidly rub and dry the exposed part, and give two quick, smarting slaps on the stomach with your open hand.

If this does not succeed immediately, proceed according to the following rules to perform artificial breathing:

Rule 2.—Turn the patient on his face, a large bundle of tightly rolled clothing being placed beneath his stomach, and press heavily over it upon the spine for half a minute.

Rule 3.—Turn the patient quickly again on his back, the roll of clothing being so placed beneath it as to make the short ribs bulge prominently forward, and raise them a little higher than the level of the mouth. Let some bystander hold the tip of the tongue out of one corner of the mouth with a dry handkerchief, and hold both hands of the patient together, the arms being stretched forcibly back above the head.

Rule 4.—Kneel astride the patient's hips, and with your hands resting on his stomach, spread out your fingers so that you can grasp the waist about the short ribs.—Now throw all your weight steadily forward upon your hands, while you at the same time squeeze the ribs deeply, as if you wished to force everything in the chest upward out of the mouth. Continue this while you can slowly count—one—two—three; then suddenly let go, with a final push, which springs you back to your first kneeling position. Remain erect upon your knees while you can count—one—two; then throw your weight forward again as before, repeating the entire motions—at first about four or five times a minute, increasing the rate gradually to about fifteen times a minute, and continuing with the same regularity of time and motion as is observed in the natural breathing which you are imitating.

Rule 5.—Continue this treatment, though apparently unsuccessful, for two hours, until the patient begins to breathe; and for a while after this help him by well-timed pressure to deepen his first grasps into full deep breaths; while the friction of the limbs, which should, if possible, have been kept up during the entire process, is now further increased.

Rule 6.—After Treatment—Externally.—As soon as the breathing has become perfectly natural, strip the patient rapidly and completely. Enwrap him in blankets only. Put him in bed in a room comfortably warm, but with a free circulation of fresh air, and except for the administration of internal treatment, let him have perfect rest.

Internally.—Give a little hot brandy and water, or other stimulant at hand, every ten or fifteen minutes for the first hour, and as often thereafter as may seem expedient.—Scientific American.

Our readers may wish to be informed of a part of the alphabet of spectroscopic observations of light. It should be remembered that a continuous spectrum with no bright or dark lines shows that the light comes from a bright substance, which is either liquid or solid. If the bright substance be gaseous, there will be bright lines or bands of various colors distributed in various colors of the spectrum. If the lines are black, it proves that the light has passed through vapors of a lower temperature than the source of light. Each element in the source of light will produce its characteristic colored lines, and, if in the cooler vapor, will also turn these lines black.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE
FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.
THE FASHION.
We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both
PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,
the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. For sale by G. W. W. GOODWYN, 62 Camp street.
ALSO, THE MOST Complete and Perfect Cooking Stove
FOR BITUMINOUS COAL OR COKE
ever invented, in the estimation of all who have yet seen it. Patented in 1869.
THE MONITOR,
which can be seen at 62 Camp street. The advantages possessed by this Stove over all the other Coal Cooking Stoves are so numerous and so patent to every sensible observer, that it is only necessary to examine it in order to be convinced of its superiority.
All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.
The operation of every Stove guaranteed. Directions for putting up and using same accompany each Stove.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Fires of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE OF THE CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

Letter from Major J. T. Hester, of Alabama:

AUBURN, ALA., April 4, 1869.

MESSRS JOHN DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents.: I have received so much benefit from "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid" that I feel it my duty to let you know it. I had an attack of Typhoid Fever, and with it a most stubborn case of Erysipelas, and was confined to my bed near two months, suffering the most intense pain all the time from Erysipelas; and after exhausting the many prescriptions of my physician, he finally commenced the use of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, and soon found that I was being improved by its use, and continued to use it, and am nearly well. I consider it the most valuable medicine for the diseases and purposes for which it is made that is sold. I also used it most successfully on my little son, who was severely burned, and I do assure you that it was from this medicine alone that I could get any relief from my distressing attack of Erysipelas.

I do not write you this as a certificate for publication, but as a duty that I feel I owe to Professor Darby and his invaluable medicine.

I shall never be without it again if I can by any possible means get it.

I hope you are succeeding, and will make a fortune.

Very truly yours,
J. T. HESTER.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited very little change since our last report. Only a limited business has been done in the wholesale trade. Operations in our leading staple have been restricted by the supplies being nearly exhausted. Only a trifling business has been done in sugar, there having been very few receipts, and the stock on hand held at full prices. Nothing of any moment has been reported in molasses. Western produce has continued quiet, with no supplies to bring out buyers for export. Last week some shipments of wheat and corn were made to New York, at 11c. per bushel for the former and 20c. per sack for the latter; but engagements cannot now be made for Saturday's steamer under 25c. for the latter. For next week, however, 20c. will be accepted.

The weather has been very warm, with frequent showers. The accounts from the country continue to report worms at various points, but thus far without any damage, unless in one or two exceptional cases. As the season advances without injury there is less uneasiness on the subject, and the prospect of a liberal yield becomes more encouraging. The accounts from the sugar parishes continue highly favorable.

The river has risen one inch since our last report, and is now threo feet five inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 20th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	191
Mobile		30
Total		221

On Saturday the sales were confined to 23 bales, in trifling lots, at figures indicating no quotable variation. On Monday 16 bales changed hands at about previous rates. On Tuesday the sales embraced 95 bales, of which 41 were new and the balance old crop. The former brought 32½ to 32¾ and 33c. for middling to strict middling, and 33 to 33¼c. for good middling. The latter sold at 30¾ to 31¼c. for strict low middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 134 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 795,987 bales, against 587,458 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 87,286 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 25,201 bales to France, and of 213 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 239,538 to Great Britain.

Sugar.—The market has been very quiet during the past three days. On Saturday there was nothing done. On Monday 100 hogsheads sold from first hands, part on private terms and the rest at 14½c. per pound for prime, 11¼c. for common, and 12¼c. for low fair. On Tuesday there were no sales. The retail trade for second hands has been very limited. The supply in the city is light, and held generally at higher figures. City refinery sugar is selling at 15 to 15¾c. per pound for yellow clarified, 16 to 16½c. for white, and 17½ to 17¾c. for crushed and powdered. Cuba sugar has been very quiet, and we hear of no round sales.

Molasses.—There is scarcely any Louisiana molasses coming in now, the receipts being only an occasional lot of from four to ten barrels. On Saturday 50 barrels sold on the landing at 60c., and 9 at the same price per gallon.

Monetary.—Gold opened at 132⅛ to 132⅜, (against 132⅝ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates.

Operations in silver have been of limited extent, the only sales reported being $500 in American half dollars at 128¾, and $1,000 at 129. American dollars are quoted at 128½ to 129½, and Mexican dollars at 3¼ to 3¾ per cent. premium in gold.

The only sales of stocks reported are 50 shares Carrollton Railroad, at $88 50, buyer ten days.

A New York telegram to the Picayune, on Saturday, reported a sale of $320,000 rity seven per cents. at 75. The Southern Bank has received no information on the subject, but the statement is no doubt correct.

STONEWALL INSTITUTE,

Located, Thirteen Miles North of Selma, Alabama.

This SCHOOL FOR BOYS, so favorably located in the quiet country, reopens on the

FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

Its officers are all experienced and devoted to teaching. It has no sectarian tinge; is not controlled by Trustees. The Principal alone is responsible to his patrons.

Pupils from its ha is have taken premiums this summer at three different Universities.—Extra attention is given to the English branches; all our students, of every age, are taught to spell and read well; to write a good hand. Boys of tender age, nine or ten years old, will be received, and will be parentally treated and controlled.

This school is permanent. Its founder and Principal has been identified with education in the South for twenty years, and he expects to continue to devote his ardent energies to the culture of Southern youth.

Parents can save time and money by patronizing such enterprises. We rarely change Teachers or text books, and being in the quiet country, cheap clothing will curtail expenses.

Charges.—$260 will cover a scholastic year's board, tuition and washing; half paid in October, the other February 1, 1870.

Payments may be made to Foster & Gardner, Mobile, Alabama. $15 to be deposited for books, etc., if all of which is not used, it will be refunded. Each student furnishes his own blankets sheets and towels.

Persons in sickly sections may send in by September 1, adding $30 to their regular remittance.

Hacks run from Selma to the Institute in October, conveying boys for $2 50 each.

In the city of Mobile we refer, by permission, to Messrs. Foster & Gardner, John K. Randall & Co., C. E. Thames & Co., Baker, Lawler & Co., Kirksey & Carpenter, Dexter, Dunlap & Wilson, Nabers & Hanks; also to Drs. R. L. Watkins, J. R. Bugett, A. S. Andrews; to Messrs. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—General Spinner has published a letter detailing the manner of opening the Dodd lock, as practiced by Mr. Sargeant. He closes as follows: "I am not aware that any change will be made in the locks of the department, except to alter those now in use so that the combinations cannot be surreptitiously obtained in the manner above indicated. Then I shall have full confidence in the locks by which the public treasure is secured in my office."

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The National Republican newspaper of this city, which has heretofore labored to prove the negro better than the white man, has a leader to-day against mixed schools, and proposing the establishment of separate schools for colored children equal in all respects to those furnished the whites.—Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The cabinet continued in session until four o'clock. Various matters of public interest were made the subject of conversation, but no action taken in regard to them. Fish read a dispatch from Burlingame, denying the rejection of the late treaty by the Chinese government.

Secretary Fish, in reply to inquiries from Cubans, states that he has no information as to any action of the Spanish government on the proposition to sell Cuba. It is believed in Cuban circles that the Serrano government will make no decision in the matter, but leave it to the King, who is to be chosen by the Cortes on the 15th of September.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Ruiz, one of the Cuban representatives, had an hour's interview to-day with Grant. Particulars have not transpired.

Baizigs, attorney for certain persons now under trial in Texas before military commissions, visited the President and acting Attorney General, and received verbal assurances that the arrangement in the Yerger case would be adhered to in the matter of habeas corpus in all similar cases.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The tenth Spanish gunboat was launched to-day.

Thirty Cubans have gone to Halifax to join expeditions fitting out there. There is no law under which they could be stopped.

EUROPE.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The Pall Mall Gazette, referring to the difficulties of the Albert Life Insurance Company, says: "It is idle to ask whether Englishmen or Americans are best situated with respect to life insurance. Of all the guarantees and precautions exacted in the State of New York, hardly one is contemplated by English law."

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The Paris correspondent of the Times writes as follows: "Most of the Spaniards are sanguine of preserving Cuba. There is disappointment at the small success in repressing the rebellion. The argument that Cuba is a loss and not a gain to Spain is absurd. Spain is benefited by the productiveness and commerce of Cuba."

Admiral Rowan's dispatches contain the following details of the Japanese war:

The authorities being advised of dangers to foreigners, ordered the Aroostook to Hakodadi to protect American interests. The Aroostook found Enomoto strongly entrenched at Hakodadi. As soon as the Mikado's forces got in the rear of Enomoto, a combined attack by land and sea became imminent. The Oneids reached Hakodadi in time. Two vessels, the Aroostook and the Oneids, took off all the Americans. Some brilliant dashes were made during the siege, but the Stonewall (formerly a Confederate vessel) having destroyed Enomoto's fleet and battered down his fort, Enomoto surrendered to save loss of life. Enemoto is now a prisoner at Yeddo.

American vessels are now landing Americans. Future disturbances are improbable. Tycoon is a voluntary prisoner in his own castle, and his family, the most powerful in the empire, have been deprived of the bulk of their revenues. The Tycoon has thus been deprived of almost supreme power, which has been held by his family for hundreds of years. Position of the fleet, July 2: Flagship Piscataqua, at Yokohama; Oaelda and Idaho at Nangasaki; Monocacy and Iroquois at Yokohama; Ashuelot at Hioga; Aroostook at Hakodadi; Manmee at Foocheo; Unadilla at Hong Koug

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Star, in an article on the rejection of the American treaty by China, shows that the treaty secured substantial advantages for the Chinese, while America disclaimed any interference with their internal administration. It cannot be supposed that the Pekin government is dissatisfied with the convention; but that a weak government should yield to the pressure of Minister Burlingame's enemies, who represent that the convention is at variance with transactions, is not surprising. It now remains to be seen whether Burlingame or Mr. Browne reflects the mind and purpose of President Grant.

The Standard thinks the Chinese government, in refusing to indorse the agreement, shows that it is not animated by the principles which Mr. Burlingame declares it possessed, and hopes it will lead him to abandon functions which secure neither honor for himself nor benefit for the world at large.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Times, referring to the condition of the British colonies, says: "Canada is, in all respects, independent, and is fitted to become so. She has the institutions of a great power, and it is a fair subject of inquiry whether she might not assume her appropriate position."

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The Times says there is much anxiety in French society about Napoleon's health, and the excitement on the Bourse is intense. The Times has no wish to lay great stress on the Emperor's sickness, but hardly believes the rumors are the result of stock stratagems.

LONDON, Aug. 30—Evening.—Reports from Paris regarding the Emperor's health continue reassuring. He is confined to his bed by a chronic malady, but the present attack is not alarming.

Fifty bishops only have refused to attend the Ecumenical Council.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—The Times, to-day, in a Manchester cotton trade report, says that it is admitted that the returns of the sales of cotton at Liverpool were falsified every day last week. The figures really amounted to but little more than half those given to the public; and as the result, there is something like a panic at Manchester, and for the present all confidence is lost in the truth of the returns from Liverpool. There is no disposition to do business, either on the part of sellers or buyers.

PARIS, Aug. 30.—The condition of the Emperor grows more and more satisfactory.

PARIS, Sept. 1.—The Emperor to-day presided at a council of ministers.

PARIS, Sept. 1.—Constitutional says Serrano is becoming daily more prominent as a candidate for the Spanish throne.

Eugenie has arrived at Toulon, returning to Paris. Her health is much better.

MADRID, Sept. 1.—Proceedings will be commenced immediately against the seven bishops who have been arrested for disobedience of government orders.

CAIRO, EGYPT, Sept. 1.—The Suez Canal is completed. The opening with six metres of water is expected to occur on the 17th of December.

TRIESTE, Sept. 1.—A dangerous revolt has occurred in Tyrona, Turkey—several killed and wounded. Troops have been sent there.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE GETTYSBURG CONVOCATION.—We subjoin the letter of General R. E. Lee in reply to the invitation to be present at the Gettysburg convocation:

LEXINGTON, VA., Aug. 5, 1869.

DEAR SIR: Absence from Lexington has prevented my receiving, until to-day, your letter of the 26th ultimo, inclosing an invitation from the Gettysburg Battlefield Memorial Association, to attend a meeting of the officers engaged in the battle of Gettysburg, for the purpose of marking upon the ground, by enduring memorials of granite, the position and movements of the armies on the field. My engagements will not permit me to be present. I believe, if there, I could not add anything material to the information existing on the subject. I think it wiser, moreover, not to keep open the sores of war, but to follow the examples of those nations who endeavor to obliterate the marks of civil strife, and to commit to oblivion the feelings it engendered.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, R. E. LEE.

MONTREAL, Sept. 1.—A private letter from Mr. Davis says that the unfavorable accounts of his health, as published, are greatly exaggerated. He will probably continue his residence in the United Kingdom the rest of his life.

BOSTON, Sept. 1.—Dispatches from Mount Washington report a heavy storm prevailing there—thermometer twenty-eight degrees. Two inches of ice has formed on the telegraph wires.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Even as far back as the age of the Ptolomies the idea of connecting the Mediterranean and Red seas was conceived, but when we understand the character of the work it will appear evident that the conception could not be executed before this period of time. In 1846 Robert Stevenson, the perfecter of the locomotive, Talahert, a great French contractor, and Negretti, a scientific chemist and engineer, were selected to make the examinations and report upon the feasibility of the canal. The serious impediment to its success was the continual danger from the sand storms on the desert, which would fill up the canal. Mechanical contrivances were suggested which would overcome this apprehended impediment. They reported in its favor, but nothing was done at the time. Eight years later Mr. de Lesseps proposed to Mohammed Said the scheme of reopening the ancient canal of Sesostris. He made the first survey in 1854-1855, and the distance was ascertained to be about ninety English miles, and a company, called the Suez Ship Canal Company, was organized in 1858. There are several lakes, and to deepen the channel through them and to excavate the intervening sections was what the company had to do. Two hundred and eighty-five machines, representing a force equal to eighteen thousand horses, and consuming twelve thousand two hundred and nineteen tons of coal per day, have been at work night and day on the canal. The dredges and excavators are of enormous power and size. By means of a steam pump water is mixed with the earth brought up by the dredge, and the liquid mass is discharged by a long pipe or spout to any distance within two hundred feet beyond the edge of the canal. Thus, out of the excavations is made a compact ridge of dirt, which serves to keep out the sand blown from the desert. This ridge in some places is of the height of fifty feet. At the northern entrance is Port Said, one hundred and twenty-four miles north of Alexandria, and thirty miles of Damietta. To form the harbor or basin at Said was considered as one of the great difficulties, for the danger to be avoided was the filling up of the canal by the deposits of the River Nile. What are called jetties were constructed. They appear to be made of immense blocks of stone, but in reality are the formations made on the spot out of hydraulic lime and the sand dredged up from the bottom of the canal. The limestone is quarried near by, and eight mills, constructed for the purpose of grinding or reducing to powder the rocks of lime, are kept at work. The pulverized lime and sand are mixed and put into wooden molds and remain until perfectly dry. In two or three months the molds are taken off, and a hard, compact substance is thus formed. These blocks thus made weigh twenty tons each, and are taken to the destined spot and sunk. Over fifteen thousand have been submerged, and the piers of jetties thus made are twenty-six yards at the base, six yards at the top, and twelve yards in height. Art and genius combined have made basins with sufficient capacity to hold the vessels of commerce, and to keep out the Nile deposit.

Suez is at the head of the Gulf of Suez, which is a prolongation of the Red sea. It is famous as the place of the passage of the hosts of Israel, as described in Holy Writ. It is also the embarking place for the pilgrims from Egypt and Northern Africa to Mecca. The canal works have transformed the place from its former filth and poverty to an enterprising and busy town. A dry dock is there formed of four hundred feet in length and a hundred feet in breadth, and the basin or jetty formed will give secure anchorage to ships and steamers of the largest dimensions.

On the 13th of October next the celebration of the completion of this great work will take place. The Emperor and Empress will be present, and descriptions of the preparations being made have reached us.—Picayune.

HUMAN happiness, like Hebrew verbs, has no present tense.

ST. LOUIS CAMP MEETING.

We copy from the St. Louis Christian Advocate the following interesting report of this movement:

* * * There were on the ground seven comfortable board tents and between forty and fifty large cloth tents. The pulpit was placed at one end of the inclosure, with comfortable seats in front of it capable of accommodating about three thousand people.

The religious services began on the evening of the 11th of August, and continued until the morning of the 20th. During the early part of the meeting the inclemency of the weather prevented many from attending, in consequence of which the congregations were not large.—Those, however, who were present were not seriously hindered in their religious exercises and enjoyments. A large tent had been prepared, affording ample protection from the rain when the congregations assembled. When the Sabbath came the clouds dispersed and the bright rays of the sun cheered the hearts of many already rejoicing in the inspiring beams of the "Sun of Righteousness." The congregations on the Sabbath were very large—estimated at several thousands—and serious and solemn attention to the word of God pervaded the entire assembly. Indeed, most excellent order prevailed during the entire meeting.

The ministers seemed baptized with the spirit of the Master, and labored with unabated zeal for the conversion of sinners. Indeed, the whole church seemed alive to her responsibility and privileges, and on every side might be heard the voice of prayer and [illegible] praise.

The results of the meeting will be revealed only in eternity, but we know the record will be glorious. Many of the children of those having tents were happily converted, and, indeed, every tenter realized the truth of the promise, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."

More than one hundred professed conversion, and very many who had loved had that love rekindled. We felt, all felt, that it was good to be there. May we all meet there again, and yet again, till we meet on high.

This occasion has its lessons, which are of peculiar interest—one of which we desire to indicate as of special local application.

It originated in the idea of closer fellowship between the different charges of the district, and particularly of the city. The meeting developed the spirit of that idea and afforded constant and signal demonstrations of its blessedness. The undertaking and the results of this meeting are the fruits of united counsel and confederate zeal. Such a sense of community of feeling and interest pervading the entire membership of the church in the district, and associating its resources and energies, is a palpable and urgent need among us. If fostered, it will contribute to an unprecedented growth and power of our beloved Methodism. It demands the serious consideration of those especially who hold official station and direct its affairs, whether the results of our church work in this city during a period of nearly half a century are not utterly disproportionate to the measure of our opportunity and the possibilities of our resources? Does not the sad and discreditable fact continue from year to year, and still exist? If we shall inquire for the causes, may it not be in fact and largely because the very genius of Methodism is overlooked? It is the peculiarity of Methodist organism that it is connectional and not congregational. The spirit of preeminent fellowship is, therefore, a necessity to its very conservation. It is the bond of cohesion, and at the same time the motive power of the efficiency of the system. A due recognition and appreciation of this radical principle of Methodist economy would put Methodism, here and everywhere, in the foreground of evangelical power and success. Our church houses would multiply and our missionary operations ramify the entire city and surrounding country. The pulpit would augment its power, and the assemblies of our Israel, at stated services as well as on special occasions, would constantly illustrate the blessedness and good fruits of "the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

WHAT a glorious world this would be if all its inhabitants could say, with Shakespeare's shepherd: "Sir, I am a laborer; I earn what I wear; I owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good; content with my farm."

Lay Delegation in the M. E. Church North.

The popular vote was taken in June, and the figures have been cast up. There was voting in the churches by men and women. About one hundred and thirty-seven thousand votes were cast, showing a majority of two to one for lay delegation—a very small vote. The Christian Advocate, of New York, denies that such a vote lays any foundation of moral obligation on the ministry, to adopt lay delegation in the approaching Annual Conferences. Most of the Northern editors are of the contrary opinion, and look for unhappy and even disastrous results if the ministers do not give the laity what has been thus voted. Though the vote is small in proportion to the whole church, "a majority of the votes cast" was for the measure. One thing the Christian Advocate, with those who side with it in this controversy, has not noticed—perhaps feels restrained from noticing: Their colored membership in the South voted strong, men and women, for enlarged "rights." The negroes went one way. They go in for "rights" of every sort. Of course they understood the merits of this question fully. We have seen an amusing account of their voting in New Orleans, given in a Northern Methodist paper. Now, we suspect the rub is, that but for these colored recruits the majority would be greatly reduced. Is it too much to venture the opinion that the negroes of Carolina, and Louisiana, and Mississippi, controlled this election? Come, now, no wincing, brethren!

Their [illegible] Louisiana Conference (all colored) gave two thousand three hundred and thirty-two for and twenty-four against—a greater net majority for the measure than was given by the combined suffrages of New York, New York East, Central New York, New England, Baltimore and Providence Conferences! Their Mississippi Conference (all colored) gave one thousand two hundred and five for and five against—a greater net majority than is given by the combined suffrages of half a dozen of their large white Conferences that might be named! Texas Conference (colored) gave nine hundred and twelve for and none against. Well drilled voters who thought, may be, they were going for freedom.

The controversy on this subject seems to have just begun. The temperature of the disputants has touched the very highest point compatible with courtesy and good temper. Some of them do not want lay delegation because the Church South has it. They have not led, and they do not like to follow.—Others—mainly of the border—call for lay delegation because the Church South has it. Unless they have it too, absorption, it is apprehended, will set in the other way.

We regard with peculiar satisfaction the manner in which our church treated this grave subject. No clap-trap of democracy, of woman suffrage, and of freedman franchise, and such like, was resorted to. The constituted ecclesiastical tribunals dealt with the question in the regular way, and settled it to the satisfaction, and we trust the lasting benefit, of the church.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

MR. REID, in moving the second reading of the bill to exempt from taxation the English Sunday and ragged schools, dwelt at length on the advantages these schools conferred upon the people. The honorable member said that these schools tended not only to reduce the number of the criminal classes, but to diminish pauperism, by developing an independent, self-reliant spirit. They also promote a fusion of classes, and sympathy of the rich for the poor. He stated that the present lord chancellor had for 34 years devoted his Sunday mornings to teaching in one of these schools. He stated the number of Sunday schools in the United Kingdom in 1818 to be 5,463, with 1,500,000 children. In 1869 the number had reached 24,000 schools, with 3,897,000 children. Of the teachers in these Sunday and ragged schools 80 per cent. have been scholars. The bill was passed by a large majority. Says Mr. Bright, the great English reformer:

"I look on the work of the Sunday school teacher as greater than the work of senators—for this reason, that the Sunday school teachers create the public opinion out of which law grows. Senators only gather up that public opinion and mold it into law; and greater is the man who creates the opinion than the man who gathers it and molds it into law."

CONVENT HORRORS.

The discovery recently made of the horrible cruelty to which a nun had been subjected in a Carmelite convent at Cracow has awakened even Austria to some just sense of the hidden horrors that are so often enacted in such institutions. In this instance a nun had been kept for twenty-one years in a loathsome cell, in darkness, hunger, filth and nakedness. She has been liberated by civil authority, and under proper treatment in a lunatic asylum is gradually recovering from the ruin of mind and of body to which her treatment had reduced her. And the Austrian government, which for some time has been growing more independent of the spell of popery, has appointed a commission to prepare a bill for placing monastic institutions under government supervision and control.

Great good is likely to result from this exposure. It has awakened the indignation of the civilized world, and directed searching scrutiny into the spirit and practices of institutions that are among the worst evils of Christendom. The details are given and commented on in all the leading papers. The Austrian correspondent of the London Times writes as follows in relation to the case of the imprisoned nun at Cracow: "While the inquiry into the nunnery case at Cracow is being continued, driblets of information only here and there ooze out. As for the immured nun herself, since she has been removed to the lunatic asylum, she seems to recover gradually from that state of almost savageness in which she was at first. She has ceased to talk in obscure language, as she did at first, and, now that she is in a clean apartment, that constant complaint about the bad smells to which she gave vent at first is never heard of. She has become quite a pattern of cleanliness, and as for tearing her dress or the bedclothes, which was alleged as the cause of her being without clothing, she never once attempted to do it."

The London Daily Telegraph says: "The famous Cracow convent seems to have possessed more elaborate appliances for torture than a dark cell. The commission which has been appointed to examine the house is said to have found a whole collection of such instruments of torture and tyranny wielded in medieval times. The crosses, each weighing eighty pounds, and intended to be worn on the backs of the nuns, as a punishment; two heavy blocks of marble, which the penitents placed on their chests; crowns of thorns, with long iron spikes, which they wore on their heads; and girdles with nails pointing inward, which they wore next their skin, were among the weapons found in the spiritual armory of the religious house. We are not informed whether they have been recently used for the purpose of waging war against the world, the flesh and the devil. Indeed they recall the worst spirit of medieval barbarity, rather than the humane spirit of our own time. It is true that people shut out from the world like the nuns of Cracow cannot feel the humanizing influence of this age so keenly as the secular and the profane, and hence they must be guided by less enlightened consciences. After the horrible revelations of the manner in which they have treated one of their sisters, it is also possible to believe the Cracow nuns guilty of anything. Nevertheless, it is uncomfortable to reflect that in the nineteenth century a convent should systematically use instruments of torture which would have found a fit place only in those religious houses which centuries ago were dens of depravity."—United Presbyterian.

AT PARIS a Russian valet, out of place, hung himself in despair, and the suicide was discovered by the postman who called to deliver a letter to the deceased announcing the death of his father and his inheritance of £2,000 a year. How many men and women would have been saved from self-murder could they only have kept constantly before them Cowper's lines in the poem of "Needless Alarms:"

"Beware of desperate steps, the darkest day,
Wait till to-morrow, may have passed away."

THE professor of religion who neglects the house of God and other religious duties, on the Lord's day, and spends it in visiting, in order to save his week day time, may increase his worldly goods, but he will most assuredly cheat his soul out of eternal life.

SABBATH HYMN.

Shadows soft and dreamy fill
Through the sunlight's holy shine,
And the birds are hymning sweet:
"Lord, this day is thine!"
Gentle zephyrs softly blow,
Breathing fragrance on the air;
Bringing thoughts of thee and heaven,
And the rest remaining there.

Heavy burdens lay we down,
And the wearing toil and care,
Thinking of the heavenly crown,
And the rest remaining there;
Thinking of the blest eternal
And the glory of the throne,
Of the whitest Light supernal
When our earthly life has flown.

Thinking of the myriad angels
And their flowing robes of white,
Of their sweet seraphic singing
Where God the Son is Light.
Thinking of the vanished loved ones
Who have joined that mighty choir;
How their rapturous song upswelling
Bursts with sweet and holy fire.

Thinking of the beauteous river,
With its rippling tides of gold,
Flowing softly on forever,
By the banks that ne'er wax old.
Thinking of that glorious mansion
Where the weary are at rest,
And the wicked cease from troubling,
In that happy home—"the blest."

O, our Father God! we thank thee
For the glorious promise given,
And we still will journey onward
Till we reach the blessed heaven.
When our Sabbaths here are ended,
And our earthly work is o'er,
May we cross the death-dark river
To the happy evermore.

DENOMINATIONAL EDUCATION.

MR. EDITOR: It would seem that the very large number of Methodists in the South might furnish our denominational schools with a much more liberal patronage. The facts show that our people are generally either too poor to send their children to the higher schools of learning, or, if they do patronize high schools, they are not of our denomination, or, if able to educate their children, they have too low an appreciation of the benefits of learning to support academies and colleges.

There is no doubt of the fact that many of our people are poor; also that many who have means, and ought to have the minds of their children trained in liberal studies, set too low a value upon a liberal culture, and do not secure its advantages for their offspring. It is true that many Methodists are, in a great measure, indifferent in regard to the denominational character of the institution they support. As Methodists we are not sufficiently alive to our own interests. We are too liberal—not as denominational as we should be; hence many of our children, dedicated to God in holy baptism at our altars, and others who have been converted through our instrumentality and joined us at first, have left us for other communions; hence, also our Conference schools are not esteemed and patronized as their merits deserve.

We venture to indicate a corrective of these evils; and first it is necessary to lay down several axioms.

First axiom: "The Bible is the religion of Protestants," and the best book and classic in the world.

Second axiom: Methodism is believed by Methodists to be the best form of Protestant Christianity.

Third axiom: All education is essentially and radically defective that is destitute of the religious element and neglects the cultivation of man's moral powers.

Fourth axiom: The Bible enjoins upon parents the religious education of their children.

1. There are only three schools—the parental, the Sunday and the denominational—in which this religious culture can and should be obtained. Before the enemy can sow tares in the mind of the child the parents should teach it the great and plain doctrines of religion, and thus preoccupy the mind, and then these truths would seem always to have been in its possession: to have the character of innate principles; to have been inwoven in its nature, and to constitute a part of all its current of thinking. In this manner the best security in the power of man will be furnished against the introduction of dangerous errors. The parent should outline in the mind of the child the names of Deity and His attributes, as far as it is capable of learning them; also the nature of sin and its remedy; some of the great and most important facts in the history of Adam and his race; the history and nature of the scheme of redemption; the design and obligation of the sacraments, and thus lay the foundation, never to be moved, of true Arminian Wesleyan Methodism. We have no right to call ourselves Methodists unless we believe our doctrines are true; and if we thus believe, we are inconsistent in our profession if we do not use our best endeavors to teach this system of doctrines to our children, and, so to speak, burn it into their minds and hearts. Then we may rest assured that theoretically, if not practically, they will always be Methodists.

2. Parents should avail themselves of all the advantages for the religious training of their children which can be secured in a denominational Sunday school.—When Voltaire would eradicate religion from France, he began with the schools and with the young. When Northern fanatics would revolutionize the government and ruin the South by Abolitionism, they began, many years ago, with the schools and with the young. When the Reformers would place a true Christianity on an enduring basis, they prepared formularies of faith to be taught to the young. Every permanent reformation must commence with the young; and our religion, our Methodism and our civilization must be perpetuated by the proper training of the young. An eminent Presbyterian minister, the late Dr. Murray, says truthfully: "The great doctrines of our Christianity should be taught in Sabbath schools with an emphasis and directness which would preclude mistake. Union Sunday schools, which, like the Family Testament of the American Tract Society, comes as near teaching nothing definite as possible, are only to be endured because of a present necessity. Instruction is weak in its influence in the proportion it is general; it is abiding in the proportion it is definite." We say of the catechism in the appendix to our Discipline what Dr. Murray says of the Shorter Catechism: "That as a definite, truthful, logical formulary this catechism is without a rival, and we would have it driven into the minds of all our youth, like a nail in a sure place. Too much emphasis cannot be put upon the catechetical instruction of the young." And yet I fear it is sadly neglected among Methodists. Reason, experience and Scripture say: "In the morning sow thy seed."

3. The third school in which to secure for our youth a proper and useful mental and religious culture is a denominational school. The Montgomery Conference has such schools at Auburn, Tuskegee and Summerfield. These colleges have able and efficient teachers, and, we believe, all are members of our church. There are no schools in the State or in the South superior to these in educational advantages, or that appeal so powerfully to Methodists in this Conference for patronage and endowment. We assert and believe these schools to be excellent and in the front rank of all similar institutions, and ought to be supported better than they are; but, at the same time, we presume to say that if they were more strictly denominational, and taught Arminian Wesleyan Christianity more fully and emphatically, they would be far more useful and better patronized. Lest we should be misunderstood, it is proper to state that the schools named above are believed to be as denominational as any in the Methodist Episcopal Church South; hence there is the same objection to all the Conference colleges of our church. They are, none of them, distinctly and radically denominational. We would be glad to know that there is one exception. Our higher schools ought to carry on and in a measure perfect the religious education of our children which commenced in the family and was advanced in the Sunday school. The Bible should be a text book through the whole course, and the professor of moral philosophy should teach not only ethics and the evidences of Christianity, but a full compend, at least, of our doctrines and polity, and their Scripture proofs. All the students should attend our churches and Sunday schools, and also be required to recite and explain a lesson in the Bible every Sabbath afternoon, in the college chapel.

In this country the vast importance of an extensive acquaintance with the Bible and its doctrines, among the common people and the laymen of the church, is not properly appreciated or sufficiently insisted upon in a liberal education. How can any man be said to be thoroughly educated who, like most of our graduates, is more familiar with ancient mythology than with the great truths and doctrines of our holy religion, and who is better posted in the writings of Homer and Cicero than he is with the inspired truths of Isaiah and Paul? Public opinion is wrong in regard to these things, and the church too much follows and is influenced by this wrong opinion.

In conclusion, we remark that every parent should avoid making his children bigots—and we believe the course indicated does not necessitate such a result; yet he should use every proper means to make them liberal, intelligent, consistent and firm Methodists. These means and plans should be more fully set forth, enforced and insisted on by all our preachers and every intelligent layman, until our people see and feel the force of these truths.

AID TO PREACHERS.

SHARON, MISS., Aug. 26, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: A worthy young brother of my acquaintance, a local preacher of promise, wishes to prepare himself more fully for the work of the ministry, but has not the means to defray all his expenses at college. A generous friend has promised him his board, and he needs $50 to enable him to spend one year at the University of Mississippi. Will some friend of the church generously respond to this call, which I make in his behalf, and without his knowledge? Do not withhold your contribution, thinking some other person will give, but forward the money or a draft to me at once, and enjoy the pleasure of lending to the Lord.

Yours fraternally,

MR. EDITOR: Please correct an error which occurs in my last letter in the ADVOCATE. The figure on the left of the two "oughts" was written for a "5;" thus, "the whole amount raised last year was less than $500," etc. People are very nervous on the question of finances.

Respectfully yours, etc,

CHINA CORRESPONDENCE.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, July 10, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: It may not have occurred to you that the occasional paroxysms of intermittent opposition experienced by missionaries and other foreigners in China have a more remote origin than the apparent turbulence of local disaffection; but such is believed, by many persons here, to be the case.

Occasion was had last year to ascertain the sentiment of the government in reference to the approaching revision of the treaties, and it has since transpired that nearly all the provincial authorities, whose views were sought, united in deprecating further concessions to foreign influence.

About that time, also, there seems to have been a notion prevalent in the country that the last treaty was only a probationary one, subject to future revision or abrogation, according to the imperial pleasure, at the expiration of the stipulated ten years—i. e., in 1868; and as it was thought an expression of the popular mind would in some way influence the government in its determination of the matter—perhaps expedite the total expulsion of foreigners—a pretty general demonstration appears to have been decided upon. Hence the numerous and impertinent attempts, prompted by the so-called literati, which took place at Chefoo, Tungchow, Yangchow, Haichow, Kia-Shin, Fuchow, Swatow and Taiwan (Formosa)—resulting in nothing very serious to foreigners, but reacting rather ignominiously upon the perpetrators.

There is evidently no disposition on the part of the provincial mandarins (officers) either to increase or encourage any closer relations with foreigners, nor any desire to multiply points of mutual contact by opening new ports to commerce. It is, moreover, thought, and the idea has large credence here, that the Chinese government, desirous of pressing to a successful issue its point of semi-exclusion, has had resort to its now famous ad captandum embassy, which, guided by the liquid tongue of its voluble chief, unencumbered with truth or facts, promises to be the unparalleled success of the nineteenth century.

Burlingame conducts a mission not of progress, but of retrogression; at least so say the present English and American ministers, who have failed to discover at Pekin any indications of what he is so earnestly advocating at Western courts; and so far as he may have success will foreign diplomacy be stultified, and Chinese duplicity prevail.

Such, Mr. Editor, are some of the opinions that prevail among residents in China; but I cannot say how far they may be correct.

The political atmosphere in this country is certainly rather dusty at present, and the prospects are that matters may be worse before they are better; but the storm may subside as soon as the treaties are definitely revised and published. These ever-recurring difficulties, however, will never entirely disappear till the whole country is thrown open, for it is the avowed policy of China to yield only to pressure; and a treaty made under such circumstances as the last, in 1860, she will never feel under obligations to respect or carry out, except, as heretofore, she be made to do so by the constant presence of the pressure that extorted it.

You may always expect, therefore, to hear of these periodical persecutions and outrages against persons and property until our right to enter and abide in the country is removed from the number of stipulations at present subject to decennial revision, or until foreigners conclude to abandon the country altogether.

So far as missionaries are concerned, there are no restrictions upon their occupation of the interior. The country is already open to them, and has been repeatedly so declared by both the Emperor and the provincial authorities. Here and there, however, are experienced slight inconveniences from local tendencies to oppose; but we do not anticipate any very flagrant outbreak against the prosecution of our work.

Far more is to be feared from the present attitude of the English government toward missionaries than from the Chinese, and it would not at all surprise us to learn that the new English minister, expected out soon and known to be an opposer of missions to the interior, has brought instructions to all the English missionaries to abandon their country work and concentrate at the treaty ports only. But will they do it? That is the question. And if not, will the inevitable "gunboat" eject them from the peaceable occupation of places they have won from heathen China, and now occupy without opposition?

What the future policy of America is to be in reference to missionaries we have yet to learn, but we hope she will not attempt to restrict our labors, as England has suggested, especially as universal toleration has been conceded, and there is every prospect of always finding some place in the interior free from disturbance. Persecutions will come; we anticipate them; but so long as the government concedes us the privilege to enter the country we can, according to circumstances, abide here or shake the dust from our feet, and go there in search of a place that is "worthy."

We deprecate any restrictions from foreign governments as more damaging to our cause than all the persecutions and sufferings that await it in the country.

I would not like to encounter the direct question, Shall we obey God rather than man? in this matter, for it is evidently in the power of Cæsar to answer it for us, and might jeopardize our future prospects for many years in China.

The treaties, I believe, have been forwarded home for approval, and when ratified will doubtless be made public. Until then we must remain partially ignorant, and uncertain what the future hath in store for us. Pray for us.

Yours truly,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

"THOSE PERNICIOUS BOOKS."

MR. EDITOR: About the time I entered the ministry, in 1824, I became familiar with a worthy local elder, who had spent his earlier years itinerating in the old South Carolina Conference, as it was between fifty and sixty years ago. I was often deeply interested in hearing him relate the trials and triumphs of Methodism, as he witnessed them in the first years of his ministry, and how the Methodist itinerants often achieved their greatest victories at the very doors of the learned clergy.

Among other incidents of their success he related the following: In a densely populated community there had existed, from the early settlement of the country, a Calvinistic church, with its settled pastor, Genevian creed and stereotyped usages. A goodly number of the middle-aged and old people were at least nominal members of the church; but the young people had grown up and gone off after the fashions and amusements of the world, until the church was evidently on the decline, both in numbers and spirituality. But for a long series of years they were not encroached upon much by other denominations, and things went on smoothly, though with a downward tendency. At length one of those adventurous Methodist itinerants made an inroad into the neighborhood, and established preaching, first, in a private dwelling, and soon after in a newly-built meeting house. The usual results attendant on these movements soon followed. A large number, especially of the younger portion of the community, were awakened, converted, and united in church fellowship with the Methodists. In the meantime their preachers duly supplied them with our denominational books, especially Disciplines, hymn books, Wesley's Sermons and Doctrinal Tracts, Fletcher's Appeal and Checks, religious biographies, with a goodly number of small devotional books, which were read with great interest by the young converts, and much to their profit. In this way they were soon satisfied as to the orthodoxy of their newly adopted Arminian creed, and were willing to live, labor and die in the Methodist Church, and leave it as a rich inheritance to their posterity in all coming time.

In the meantime there was great commotion among the remaining members and patrons of the old Calvinistic Church as to the cause of the sudden and unparalleled success of the Methodists. Some cried one thing and some another, until it was thought best to call the officials together, in extra session, to consult about the matter. The old church was in danger of being superceded by the new-comers, and the cause must be inquired into. The session being organized, the investigation commenced. One said he thought the success of the Methodists went on the principle that "a new broom sweeps clean," and that the novelty of the movement gave them their present success, and when that passed away their success would pass away with it, and the people would gradually return to the church of their forefathers. Another said their loud singing and earnest, extemporaneous way of praying and preaching excited the animal feelings of the people, especially the young and sanguine, and then the preachers took advantage of their excited feelings to hurry them into their church; while a third was of the opinion that as much was said by the preachers about death and judgment, and the wrath to come, that the people were literally hell scared, and thus dragooned into a profession of religion. Others assigned reasons equally as futile and absurd for the great Methodistic movement in the community; when their old pastor arose and said: "Brethren, I think you are all at fault as to the ruling cause of the great change in the religious principles and practices of our former adherents and patrons. Most of them are gone from our church power. So far as I have conversed with them, while they treat me with due respect as their former pastor, I can do nothing in the way of changing their newly-adopted free agency and free grace principles, as taught by John Wesley and other Methodist writers. And now I will tell you what I believe is the prime cause of this great harm and loss to our church, and the extraordinary success of the Methodists. It comes of those pernicious books which their preachers circulate with such untiring industry everywhere among the people who come within the range of their influence. Why you cannot go into one of their houses without seeing from one to a dozen of those pernicious Wesleyan books lying round, with marks of having been carefully read."

Now, Mr. Editor, this old pastor brought to light one of the great secrets of our success as an orthodox church. It has, under the blessing of God, grown out of the wide circulation of a sound, common sense and truth-telling religious literature, which the people accept as scriptural as soon as they give it a candid reading.

The Right Rev. Bishop Green, of the diocese of Mississippi, in a late pastoral letter, laments the limited circulation of their church literature, and says they might learn a profitable lesson on this subject from their Methodist brethren. I sincerely wish we would teach a more extended lesson on this very important subject than we do.

But my communication is growing too long. I have more I wish to say on this subject when I have time. I hope our next General Conference will adopt some new measures for the more regular and minute circulation of our denominational books and tracts.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1869.

THE LATE DR. DORMAN.

BY REV. J. HAMILTON.

When a faithful and well known laborer in the vineyard, who has given the strength of his life to the church and the good of souls, is called from the scene of his toils and triumphs, it is due to him, to those whom he has served, as well as to the grace of God, that a memorial notice of him should be given to the church and the world. Under this conviction I send you this brief sketch.

Thomas Wilmer Dorman, D. D., died in Mobile, July 2, 1869, aged sixty-four. Brother D. was born in Salisbury, Maryland, but brought up in Alexandria, District of Columbia, until about the age of twenty, when he removed to Middleburg, Loudon county, Virginia. His mother being a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, he attended upon the ministrations of that church through childhood and youth, though he frequented the Sunday school of a Presbyterian church in the same city. But he seems to have been little benefited by either, for he stated in later life that the subject of experimental religion was never brought to his mind during these years. An impression adverse to it must have been inculcated, for he further stated that he was led to look upon all such professions and persons unfavorably; to regard them as weak and fanatical, if not hypocrites.

Little attention could have been paid to the religious instruction of the young in those days; a great and happy change has taken place since. It is a fearful responsibility that teachers of religion incur who allow the youth of their charges to grow up ignorant of the fact that they must be "born of the Spirit" in order to see God in peace.

In Middleburg Dr. Dorman was brought in contact with Methodism, in the persons of some very pious, active members of our church. In the true spirit of our fathers they saw in him a case calling for personal effort for his conversion; they conversed with him on experimental religion, they invited him to their social meetings, they loaned him books calculated to enlighten his mind on the subject; but, above all, by lived Christianity before him. In short, they brought into requisition that system of gentle religious influences, so readily and naturally resorted to by the perceptions of the truly spiritual. Accompanied by prayer, these were soon effectual. On the 29th of July, 1831, he united with the church as "a seeker;" in the course of a month he realized his acceptance with God, through his Son. While yet a seeker he had commenced family worship, which he never remitted until his failing strength deprived him of the power longer to conduct it. The Rev. Thomas J. Dorsey, of the Baltimore Conference, was in charge of the circuit in which Brother D. lived at the time of his conversion, and becoming careful for the souls of his charge, the new convert was at once put in a class and furnished with all the spiritual helps of Methodism. He took an interest in all the means of grace, ordinary and extraordinary. Exhibiting a capacity for usefulness, he was early appointed the leader of a class by Rev. Henry Slicer. Methodism at that day, and in that region, was a working power. I trust it is yet. And giving both a capacity and desire for wider usefulness, Brother D. was put forward to lead prayer meetings, etc. He did not, like too many novices in religion, who desire to do good, propose to step at once into the unpractical inexperience of the convert to the pulpit; but he set to it by regular steps, first filling the lower offices of Christian labor. In 1834 he received license to exhort, which he used to enter a still wider field of usefulness; and in September, 1835, licensed to preach under Rev. H. Slicer, presiding elder.

In 1836, after visiting the Western country, with a view to a new residence, he removed to Alabama, and settled in Montgomery, where he continued his labors in a local sphere, with success and usefulness, until the close of 1839. In 1837 he was ordained deacon. Various providences had led him to inquire repeatedly whether he was in the path of duty; the answer was never satisfactory to his conscience; and at the close of 1839, at the session held in Tuscaloosa, he was admitted to the Conference. It was then that the writer first saw and became acquainted with him. His business habits and readiness with the pen led the secretary of the Conference—the lamented Sawyer—to request that he be appointed to assist him. From that time he filled the office of secretary to the Conference for twenty years; and few Conferences in the connection have had a more prompt and efficient secretary, as we shall notice hereafter.

Dr. D.'s first appointment, in 1840, was to the Valley Creek circuit, which he filled for two years to the acceptance and profit of the people. In 1842-3 he was stationed in Greensboro. In 1844 in Livingston. In 1846-7 in Franklin street. In 1848 on the Mobile district. In 1849, 1850 and 1851 on the Demopolis district. In 1852 3 in Columbus, Mississippi. In 1854-5 in Franklin street, Mobile. In 1856-7 in Montgomery. In 1858-9 in Marion. In 1860 in Selma. From thence he came to Mobile to take charge of the Conference depository; and while serving which he was associated, in 1861, with the writer on the City Mission. In 1862, 1863, 1864 and 1865 he had charge of the State colored church, in connection with the depository. In 1866 he was appointed to St. Paul's. During this year he took a trip to Europe, through the generosity of a very liberal gentleman, and particular friend, for the benefit of his health, which had become feeble, and seemed to be greatly benefited. But on landing at Boston he had a paralytic attack, which laid the foundation for and culminated in his death. He was, however, much better afterward, and labored considerably on the Mobile district, to which he was appointed for the years 1867-8. In June, 1868, while preaching at St. Paul's, he had a second attack, and that was his last regular sermon. He went a round or two on the district afterward, but the tabernacle had been so shaken by the various attacks that he was able to do but very partial work. At the last Conference, having, in the judgment of his brethren, reached the goal of his labors, with a saddened spirit he took a superannuated relation, stepped down from the walls on which for about thirty years he had faithfully kept his watch, and retired to the bosom of his family to die.

The above list of appointments, embracing most of the important ones in the Conference, shows the high estimation in which his talents and services were held by the Conference and Bishops.

It requires but a few lines, as seen above, to set down the fields and scenes of labor that have consumed thirty of the best years of the laborer's life. But how little does this enumeration of fields—except to the initiated—indicate the amount of labor and travel accomplished in those years! Much less does it indicate the amount of care, watching, anxiety, self-denial and exposure called for by those fields and that work. It says nothing of the languid days and sleepless nights, of exhausted spirits, feeble bodies and disordered nerves that yet had to toil on, or the work and souls might suffer. The laborer must be in time, both in mind and body, when the hour of his appointment arrives, or the time for commencing his journey comes around, for there is no one to go in his stead, and souls are his charge, and cannot be neglected. The calls and demands of conscience and duty silence all others. If a minister's conscience be of the quality that will leave him quiet with merely prescribed routine work, without knowing "the care" of "the churches" and souls, he may lead a tolerably quiet life; but then what of his final settlement with Him who put him "into the ministry?" Our brother was not thus constituted; when it pleased God to reveal in him his Son he received a view of duty that could not be reconciled with ease and indolence; he did not spare himself. In labors he was abundant, and hence he was one of our most faithful, efficient pastors. All the interests of his charge were duly looked after. The classes, the prayer meetings, the sick, the poor and negligent, all received attention. In illustration of his promptness and energy, in all he had to do, it was his boast that in the twenty years of his secretaryship of our Conference he never kept a Bishop waiting five minutes for the journal to be ready for his signature on the adjournment of the Conference; and generally on descending from the pulpit; after announcing the appointments, the Bishop found the journal ready for signing. Those who know the hurry in which business is generally done, and the rapidity with which resolutions come in at the heel of a Conference session, will know how to appreciate this feat of secretaryship. To accomplish this he had to be not only very prompt, but very systematic. This latter feature marked all he did, whether as presiding elder, pastor, or other officer of the church. When in the pastorate the week was duly divided between the various calls and duties; a certain portion of it was given to pastoral visits and supervision, another portion to miscellaneous matters, and another to preparation for the pulpit and Sabbath. Upon his preparation for the pulpit he bestowed special and careful attention, as his sermons showed. He had a keen sense of the proprieties of time and place, and the taste that results from it; and while these were often a source of disquiet to himself, in view of what he was compelled to witness, they secured order and propriety in all he did.

Brother D. was sincerely attached to the church and its institutions, and gave them his full and cordial support. Its theology met fully his approval; he found in it what, and all that an awakened sinner, or a struggling or a matured believer needed. At the same time he lived on terms of the most cordial friendship and confidence with Christians of other churches. The genuineness of his own conversion prepared him to appreciate and understand the work of the Spirit wherever he met with it. The writer was associated with him at various camp meetings, and in numerous revivals in the course of their Conference life, and among all the ministers it has been his pleasure to labor with, he has met with few more successful "workmen." His sermons and appeals on such occasions were often very powerful. And thousands, I doubt not, on earth and in eternity, will bless God in the great day that they ever heard his voice. In short, he made his whole talent available to the church of God.

Another prominent characteristic of our brother was kindness; this took the form of a warm and faithful friendship; he was greatly attached to his friends, and they were numerous, and he as greatly desired their esteem. As the result wherever he resided, a numerous circle of attached friends gathered around him, with whom he lived on terms of marked intimacy and confidence. Nor were his friends confined to these limited circles; he has left a host of them scattered all through the State, and not a few in other States. He greatly enjoyed the society of his brethren in the ministry, and interconrse with them. In their society he felt he was with fellow-laborers "in the kingdom and patience of Jesus;" that they had common interests, cares, hopes and joys, and looked to a common reward. Such men can sympathize with each other as none others can.

Observant Christians would fully expect that a life thus given to the church and the good of men would have none other than a safe and peaceful termination; that if there should be an opportunity afforded its close would be marked by a clear testimony to the grace of God and its power to save. Such a close was granted, and such a testimony was given. Brother Dorman's gradually and rapidly failing strength but too surely admonished him that he could not live long. Some ten days before his death, finding unusual symptoms, he sent for his physician, and requested him to tell him candidly what he thought of his condition, and what he had to expect. He was informed that his case could have but one issue—death; that he might possibly linger weeks, or he might die in a week or even a day. He thanked the doctor for his candor, and added: "It is all right; I am prepared for it." Being too feeble to hold prayer longer, he requested Brother Andrews, who passed the house every morning, to call and pray with him daily. He appreciated and enjoyed the Scripture lessons and prayers very much, responding heartily to the sentiments of both. The felt nearness of another world rapidly loosed the interest and attachment that bound him to this. The ties of connection sundered in quick succession; he seemed fully conscious that the hour of his departure was rapidly nearing. One morning about one o'clock, after a distressing evening, he remarked: "I thought I should have been gone, or in a dying state by this." On another occasion he said to one of his daughters: "If it should please God to take me this night, I am resigned; I should then be at rest." All his allusions to death and his departure were calm and cheerful. "My life," he remarked, "such as it is, is behind me, and I leave it with God." The gentle, loving spirit of another world seemed rapidly settling upon him; the quiet that should prelude the entrance upon eternal rest was pervading all around; an unusual presence was felt to be about the place and pervade the scene. Ministers of different churches said: "It was good to be there." Death was shorn of its terrors and repulsive features; it seemed little like dying. But with all the quiet, and all that seemed so cheering, death was there, quietly cutting ties and loosing cords, and soon his work was done—the prisoner was released. Friends looked upon a deserted mansion, and heaven welcomed a released tenant.

Soldier of Christ, "well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

WEST FLORIDA NEWS,

Walnut Hill, Fla., Aug. 13, 1869.

Mr. Editor: I have been very unwell this week. So I have taken up much of my time in looking over the columns of your desirable paper, called the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in which I see so many letters showing the good meetings going on in almost all parts of the country, except poor little west Florida. But, dear Editor, I will not neglect letting you know that the Lord is on Escambia mission. We have had several good meetings. On last Monday we were somewhat surprised; there were only about thirty persons at church, and all of them were members, with one exception. Brother Mountain, our preacher, made a most excellent discourse. I saw from his own feelings that his labor was not lost; and when through his sermon, he opened the door to receive members. Thinks I to myself, "You are going to make a water haul;" but before he sung many verses, up came that trembling sinner and gave his hand to the minister, and, I trust, his heart to God. Our church is a little house out of doors, three miles from any settlement, except one; but people don't mind going from three to ten miles to church, especially when we only have preaching once a month. Sunday school is kept up every Sunday. W.

France has one million two hundred thousand Protestants, and one thousand one hundred Protestant pastors, of whom seven hundred are reported to be Evangelical.

Cast no dirt in a well that has given water when you were thirsty.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

Austin, Texas, August, 1869.

Mr. Editor: I have just laid aside your paper of the 7th instant, having read with peculiar pleasure the article on the Availability of Prayer. Well, in this day, when the love of so many is "waxing cold" and the "holy fire" is growing faint in the sanctuary, it certainly reassures one to find that the power and efficacy of this great Christian duty do not fail of just appreciation in the locality around which the tender associations of his early life are entwined. One loves the place of his childhood in spite of himself. The heart, though overgrown by the harsh experiences of many years, and measurably callous as to other things, will reassert its human character when the ideal presence of the "old home" comes looming up in the midst of its deep, silent cogitations. And then how glorious the reflection that, though others may have come into possession of the dear old heritage, they too are devoting it to holy uses. Yes, praying men and women walk through its hallowed retreats, and the "God of our fathers" fills it with the glory of His presence.

The ways of Providence have not been more clearly forecast to me than other men, and I often wonder for what use I, a Louisiana man by birth and education, have been brought to Texas. Yet in the midst of my wonderment the weekly reminder of friends in the East which comes with the Advocate, of precious memory—friends still toiling in the Master's cause—stirs me up to emulate them in the gracious work which heaven has allotted to us all alike. Now and then the column of obituaries tells a sad and mournful tale. May be a schoolmate, the intimate companion of boyhood, has gone to sleep in Jesus; or perhaps a father in Israel, whose veteran brow, bronzed by the exposure of a lifetime, spoke to my childish fancy much more expressively than words, has laid him down to quiet rest, in the full armor of the old soldier; or yet again the eye grows dim and the heart full as the name of a dear relative appears in the list of those who have passed to their final account in the other world. Such provisions does the Advocate make for chastening and refining my feelings, and preparing me for a life of continual submission to the divine will. Ah! dear Advocate, let me never fail to hear and heed thy weekly admonition—that tender voice of rebuke which comes to me, in soft and kindly tones, from the sacred precincts of home, and through thy columns speaks to my heart encouragement and sympathy from the never-failing friendships of childhood and youth.

How rejoiced am I to know that God is still visiting His people over East, and that the Pentecost of love and power is already beginning to approach. Heaven knows we need the fiery baptism—preachers and people. Now, when naturalistic theories are fast substituting the simple doctrine of spiritual regeneration in parts of our Lord's vineyard—when primitive simplicity in worship is giving place to external expedients, and even the pulpit, from being an inspiration and a power, is degenerating into a mere trade or profession, never seeking nor attaining immediate, present effects—we need the almighty interposition of heaven, the resistless working of Jehovah. The most alarming symptom of the times is the wide departure from the simplicity of Christian love in the intercourse of church members, and in fact the whole order and arrangement of church service and worship. I may be in error, but it seems to me no sign of spiritual advancement and prosperity that members of the Methodist Church have simply a sort of external morality to distinguish them from the balance of the world—nothing in the deportment to indicate the "holy fire" within; no word of power aptly spoken, and bringing contrition to the giddy worldling; no going from house to house doing good, distributing charities to the needy, comforting the distressed, pointing the death-bed occupant to his only hope; in fine, no crucifixion of self and habitual exaltation of God and His holy will. These signs I do not see. Oh! when shall the church again renew the history of the Acts—only once repeated since the first century, by the Wesleys? I fear greatly that unless the Lord specially interposes to prevent it, a gradual depreciation of vitality is the doom of the church. I despair of rectifying matters by any merely external, ecclesiastical arrangement. Class meetings, no longer essentials in our ecclesiastical order, are losing their hold upon the affections of our people; while prayer meetings, in other churches, have been shown by experience not to reach the spiritual wants of members. Coincident with the abandonment of class meetings, I think began a notable declension in the spirituality of our church; and, finding, in the experience of prayer meetings not much to hope for in stimulating the life of Methodism, I fear unless good substitutes are found for the former, we are doomed to fall on the common destiny of old denominations—a barren sectarianism. If the day finally comes when Methodism shall cease to deal peculiarly with spiritual things, and begin a wrangle about doctrines and external observances, her high mission will have been accomplished. The insidious approaches of this last evil are already discernible, in many localities, in the multiplied attempts of preachers to render public ministrations attractive to the masses. So much effort has been expended in this direction, in places, that a love-feast or class meeting, or indeed anything which is not a mere form, has apparently not the slightest attraction to most professing Methodists. A Methodist not in love with the class room, in Wesley's day, would have been a strange anomaly; yet such we have, and in abundance. But pardon me if I weary you. You may hear from me again soon on other topics.

Most fraternally, N.

Insane Freak of the Empress Carlotta.—The French journals tell a painful story. A few days back a lady elegantly dressed, and wearing many diamonds, drove up to the house of a gentleman at Enghein, a village near Paris, and presenting herself as the Queen of Spain, said that she desired to rent his house, and wished to be allowed to visit it. He proceeded to show her over it, but her manner was strange, and after a while she addressed him as "Sire!" He naturally came to the conclusion that she was a lunatic, but was naturally embarrassed as to what he should do. Presently, however, two well dressed men arrived.

The lady at first started on seeing them, but followed quietly, and they took their way. They told the gentleman that she was a great lady, that her mind was affected, and that she had escaped from Paris on her way to the Pyrenees, where she had been ordered by her physicians. The gentleman subsequently learned that she was no less a personage than the sister of the King of the Belgians, the sister-in-law of the Emperor of Austria, the cousin of the Queen of England—the widow of Maximilian, Emperor of Mexico. She is hopelessly mad.

The oldest relic of humanity extant is the skeleton of the oldest Pharaoh, incased in its original burial robes, and wonderfully perfect considering the age, which was deposited eighteen or twenty months ago in the British Museum, and is justly considered the most valuable of its archæological treasures. The lid of the coffin which contained the royal mummy was inscribed with the name of its occupant, Pharaoh Mykerinus, who succeeded the heir of the builder of the great pyramid, about ten centuries before the coming of Christ. Only think of it! the monarch whose crumbling bones and leathery integuments are now exciting the wonder of numerous gazers in London, reigned in Egypt before Solomon was born, and only about eleven centuries or so after Misraim, the grandson of Noah, and the first of the Pharaohs had been gathered to his fathers.

It is a comfort to Christians apart to think that their prayers meet before a throne of grace, and their persons will meet before a throne of glory.

Fame, like a shadow, flies from him who pursues it, but it follows the steps of him who would run from it.

THE REV. DR. DORMAN.

The church will read with much satisfaction the most excellent notice of this beloved minister of Christ, which appears in this number of the ADVOCATE. Few men ever employed the talents given more diligently or to better advantage. He was a model in the attention which he paid to every department of the work of a Methodist itinerant. He was satisfied to fill that post, and looked to no higher honor.—Keeping his Lord's vineyard, the vineyard kept him. He reaped the love of many and the respect of all. In honor and gentle peace he ended his career, amid those who were nearest to him by blood, and surrounded by the church which he had so faithfully served. The highest part of the middle pathway of life, which so many have sought as the safest and happiest line of human fortune, he found by following the Master. His religion secured him that which most fail to obtain by an exclusive lifetime effort. This was true wisdom, even if judged by the world's standard—success. His life was sensibly employed, and rounded at last into glory.

It was our good fortune to see somewhat of the conclusion of his race, and we were much impressed with the mellowing effect which the grace of God and physical affliction had upon him. We had known him well and long, and with admiration and spiritual profit saw how consciously and grandly he gathered up his feet for the higher call. His children stand up in reverence and pronounce his memory blessed, as we and a thousand others do this day. Nothing more was necessary after the just tribute which Dr. Hamilton pays to his memory; but as to an old friend, and to one whose name has been associated with the publication of this paper from its beginning, we have added thus much.

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE, MISSISSIPPI.—Age is most commendable in an institution of learning. This is one of the attractive features in this excellent Female College. It has been in successful operation for more than a quarter of a century, and still abides in the freshness of its youth. It is now educating the second generation in its history. Under the able management of the Rev. J. M. Pugh it will do our church and our friends great service in training their daughters for Christ and usefulness. For cost of board, etc., see the advertisement.

THE GERMANS IN TEXAS.

Our German brethren in and throughout Texas are evidently in a ferment. The apostle says: "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump;" and we wonder whence this leaven. What was the good presiding elder about that he should suffer such a set of resolutions to be entertained at his District Meeting—resolutions which, to say the least of them, are not wise, because apparently at war with the most cherished interests of our church. Why do these Germans, who have been brought to Christ by the labors of our church, declare that "we want no German literature from the Methodist Episcopal Church South?" A child that turns away so peevishly from the breast that gave it suck must be nearly weaned.

The most of the difficulties of government, whether in Church or State, begin in "resolutions" that overstep those boundaries which the law has assigned. This District Meeting transcended its proper jurisdiction, and affected the quality of an Annual Conference. Let the Texas Conferences come to the rescue of this important part of Southern Methodism. We know enough of the German situation to believe that they will find at work in that field something else than shepherds and sheep. Throwing the whole German church throughout Texas into one presiding elder's district, instead of keeping it where Providence raised it up, has worked and will work damage. Why should it not be left among the Conferences where it originated, until men can be raised up, both laymen and preachers, who are thoroughly imbued with the connectional idea? To cast them off, as now, is to force them into all the shapes, conflicts and disabilities of the congregational system. Methodism is a crystal, not a conglomerate. In so far as these resolutions extend to the Germans of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in New Orleans, we can reply that they meet with no sympathy. The party that might have entertained such sentiments have been sloughed off some time back, and are now rolling and wallowing with one or two Northern Methodist Germans, trying to decide who shall be at the top and who at the bottom of the pile.

We append a translation, from our Evangelical Apologist, of the proceedings of the District Meeting for the enlightenment of our people and our Bishops.

DISTRICT MEETING OF OUR GERMAN WORK IN TEXAS.

DEAR APOLOGIST: I am requested, as the secretary of our late District Meeting, held on June 28, in Valley church, near Brannfels circuit, to forward you the following resolutions:

Resolved, That under present circumstances we will unitedly remain in the Church South, and, if possible, avoid further division and controversy, until the meeting of our next General Conference. Should we then find that this body does not initiate measures tending to a union of the two Methodisms—to effect which we will humbly petition the same; and if then the majority of our Germans desire a union with the Methodist Episcopal Church North, we will call a convention in order to consummate this union.

Resolved, That we elect one of our preachers to immediately make a missionary tour, collecting money wherewith to relieve the present urgent wants of our preachers.

Resolved, That we elect a delegate to visit, in addition to the Texas, the other four Conferences in Texas, in order to ask them to co-operate in the support of the German missions in their midst, and at the same time urge the introduction of ways and means tending to the union of the churches North and South.

Resolved, That herewith we extend the right hand of fellowship to the clerical brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, cordially requesting them, in harmony with us, to work for our glorious Master, we pledging ourselves to reciprocate their friendship.

Resolved, That the editor of the Evangelical Apologist be and is hereby requested not to publish any correspondence nor to insert any articles that are calculated to create controversies or animosities.

Resolved, That we deem it inexpedient to publish a separate hymn book for the use of our congregations, and that we want no German literature from the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Reason: Scarcity of demand, and that the money necessary for such publications be rather devoted to missionary operations, or to the enlargement of the Evangelical Apologist.

Resolved, That we all fervently pray for a speedy restoration of love and union in our midst.

Resolved, That the German brethren of the Louisiana Conference are hereby requested prayerfully to weigh the foregoing, and to unite with us in petitioning the General Conference, urging them to effect the union of the two Methodisms.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in our Evangelical Apologist.

Resolved, That we herewith express our gratitude to Brother Ahrens for the successful resuscitation of the Evangelical Apologist, and, inasmuch as this paper will be enlarged with the second volume, we will endeavor to increase its circulation.

Resolved, That we will unitedly pray God to send more laborers into His vineyard.

Resolved, That we will hold another District Meeting next year at Industry, the time to be fixed by the presiding elder.

Resolved, That the presiding elder select suitable topics for discussion.

J. A. G. RABE, Sec'y.

NO SHEPHERD.

A brother writes that "there is no shepherd to feed the flock in this circuit who might take an interest in getting subscribers for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE." He has pressed its claims, and sends three subscribers, with the money. This is the second time that we have had money and subscriptions from him—for which many thanks. A circuit with no shepherd—only a friend who will circulate the ADVOCATE—might be worse off. We feel quite drawn out toward that circuit, and will occasionally put a sermon in print for its benefit, or, what is may be better, the substance of one. We once knew of a work where the people were held together by a reed organ when no preacher could be had. They met on Sabbath morning, held Sabbath school and played the organ. It was a rather wild neighborhood on the Atchafalaya—wild during the week, but with some Sabbath day compunctions. Why may not this "organ" of four Conferences, with equal compass, if not so skillfully turned, serve as good a purpose, and gather and guide that "flock" neglected? If Brother B. will get the people to sit down in companies, and allow themselves to be fed by the Master, we can furnish the seven loaves and the two fishes for His blessing.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Brother Johnson, of Greene circuit, Mobile Conference, writes:—"The Lord has abundantly blessed His word on Greene circuit. I have just closed a protracted meeting of eight days, at a new church. There were twelve or fifteen conversions, and great rejoicing among the Lord's people."

Rev. S. H. Cox writes: "We are having meetings of interest all over the district, and many are being converted."

A letter from a friend near Greenwood, Louisiana, says: "The week of prayer closes in our neighborhood with the conversion of several of the most open and gross sinners in it, and an accession of nine members to the church."

A letter from Rev. J. M. Franklin, of the Pleasant Hill and Mansfield, Louisiana Conference, writes: "The Lord is doing a great work in these parts. The greatest interest is manifested that I have ever witnessed. Our altars are thronged, mourners are being converted and believers built up. We have had one hundred and nineteen accessions to the church this year. To God be all the glory."

DISTRICT CONFERENCE OF PENSACOLA DISTRICT, MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE, HELD AT MILTON, FLORIDA, JUNE 3-10, 1869.—The "minutes" of this Conference come in pamphlet form, very neatly gotten up, sixteen pages. It looks much about the size of the report of an Episcopal convention, and represents fully as many members, and an elder equal in order and quality to the Bishop of a diocese.

DIVERSITIES OF GIFTS.

The infinite variety which obtains in the material universe contributes to our pleasure and happiness. It is one of the highest charms of nature, and discloses to the mind, in an eminent degree, the wisdom and beneficence of the Creator. This principle of variety is stamped upon the souls as much as it is upon the bodies of human beings. In features people may nearly resemble, but the lineaments of the face, and particularly the expressions of the countenance, are never absolutely alike. There is no end to diversities of temperament, and the proportion and adjustment of the mental faculties. How intolerable the physical world would be without these differences of color, form and texture! The world of people would not be more endurable were dull uniformity to characterize it. Even if the model of all were one of the highest excellence, the condition of things socially would be excruciating in the highest degree. Unite all the higher qualities of intellect and character, and conform all human creatures to this pattern, and we should be bored to death with the monotony of perfection.

Variety is as essential to our mental being as it is to the beauty of a landscape. Probably the first expression of it, and the completest, was in the holy intelligences whose creation long antedates all material things. The interest of a school room, or a congregation, is enhanced by this feature, and a group of young children is rendered more lovely by the contrasts which it displays. A bouquet made up of roses alone is far less attractive than one for which the whole garden has been laid under contribution. The heavens would glow more brightly if all the stars were of the first magnitude, but to the observer they would lose in interest as much as they have gained in splendor. The archetype of all things is in the divine mind, and this element of diversity is, in a measure, a manifestation of God himself. As seen in matter and in mind it is of God, and there is doubtless in it a moral significance and use. Vice and sin do not obliterate the differences of temperament and mental constitution, and divine grace only gives them a sanctified direction. The new creature in Christ does not part with those peculiarities of mind which existed before conversion. The work of regeneration harmonizes, unites and brings the moral nature to a common standard, but it does not interfere with the play of variety in the natural powers.

Religion does not, fortunately, reduce us all to one uniform groove, but it rather brings out more conspicuously the diversities of our gifts, and turns them to the most profitable account in the service of God. In the choice of His leading human agents God has not failed to regard this variety. In choosing the leaders, monarchs and prophets of His people, we see these remarkable contrasts, according to the work for which each may be selected. When Christ chose His apostles He seems to have sought as much diversity as possible. The inspired writers all maintain a striking individuality, and the Holy Ghost neither lessens nor destroys this feature of diversity. If the Old Testament were all cast in the mold of David, or of Isaiah, it would be less adapted to its divine purpose, and less interesting even to the devout mind. In the New Testament we find rest and refreshment in the varieties of style and thought which characterize its several writers. The Spirit does not reduce all to a tedious uniformity, but accepts the fact of diverse gifts, and turns it to the greatest utility.

Casting a glance over the church, and the field of religious activity, we see how the Spirit wields the diverse gifts of converted souls, and gives to each its appropriate sphere of development. The variety exhibited in all the operations of a church, in her devotional meetings, and in the Sunday school and congregations, is as pleasing as it is useful. There is unity of spirit and likeness to Christ, whilst in other respects there is the widest divergence from uniformity. By this law of variety division of labor in the church seems to be indicated. All are not endowed for the ministry, and all are not equally adapted to every part of the ministerial vocation. Some are fitted for teaching, others are qualified to exhort with power, and some are called and qualified to attend to the secular business of the house of God. Abuse of this principle lies in a false estimate of ourselves, so that we are in the wrong place, or so that we shrink from the duty which we are called to discharge. Some Christians, by a perversion of these views, excuse themselves from many plain duties which are incumbent upon all. Because they think themselves wanting in the gifts of prayer, they take no active part in the prayer meeting, and the family altar has never been set up. Because they are not of fluent speech, they never rise in the love-feast to confess their Lord, or to tell what has been done for their souls. This is a serious perversion of a great truth. Some may excel in these exercises, but all can perform them in a manner acceptable to God, and with great spiritual benefit to themselves. Owing to this variety in the gifts of religious people, there is a temptation to disparage the gifts of others. Without the broadest charity, pride is apt to be excited, and envy and jealousy gain a foothold in the heart. We are tempted to impatience with the slowness and dullness of the less gifted, and are prone to make self the model of all that is desirable and edifying. The great end and aim should be to bring out the gifts of believers in their variety and highest perfection, and especially in their position and relation to the church. There is need of all, from the highest to the lowest, and abundant range for the widest conceivable diversities. To repress variety and to compel uniformity is contrary to the voice of nature, and opposed to the law of our spiritual life.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have from the publishers, Messrs. J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Georgia:

CALDWELL'S PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC.—1869. Pp. 185, 16mo.

This is a concise method of calculation, showing rather how than why. We like it because it does not treat the science of numbers as if it were platinum, the most ductile of known things. Northern authors consider arithmetic as without either bottom or shore, and so teach it only through a series, running from No. 1 to No. 5. This book is a timely rescue.

From the publishers, Messrs. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, we have

THE INDEPENDENT THIRD READER. By J. Madison Watson.

Beautifully illustrated with wood cuts is this reader, with, as we think, a shade too much science about it for a boy of eight or ten years. There are many things a boy catches as he does measles, and he must be allowed to catch the art of reading without knowing much more about its philosophy than a doctor knows about the causes of disease.

THE PICTORIAL FIELD BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812. Illustrations, by pen and pencil, of the history, biography, relics, etc., of the last war for independence. By Benjamin J. Lossing. With several hundred engravings on wood. New York: Harper & Brothers. Royal 8vo, pp. 1,084. 1869

This work is gotten up in the same style with Lossing's Field Book of the Revolution. It is our own American view of the war of 1812. Whether an American is capable of writing history where his own country is involved, is yet to be proved. There are many facts and incidents of that period, that come in by the way to the main route of the author, full of interest. The war itself of that day has been so overshadowed by the war of our own that this book has appeared just in time to prevent our losing sight altogether of the heroes of 1812. It is a great chapter in the development of an implacable, blood-thirsty, conceited people, and as such it behooves us to study it well.

A PHILOSOPHY OF HEAVEN, EARTH AND THE MILLENNIUM. By J. A. Spurlock, a member of the Missouri bar. St. Louis: W. J. Gilbert.

Wherein the author says that all evil, moral and physical, is atmospheric—and many other things.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY, for September, comes richly freighted.—Contents: Why Henry Jones did not go to Canada; Was Reichenback Right? The Foe in the Household; The True Story of Lady Byron's Life; Jacob Flint's Journey; My Comrade and I; A Lone Woman's Trip to Omaha and Beyond; Confucius and the Chinese, or the Prose of Asia; The First Cricket; Gabrielle de Bergerac; Log rolling at Washington; The Genius of Dore; A Poetical Lot. NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.—This excellent school, situated in the pleasant city of Louisville, is under the charge of E. A. Grant, LL.D., a gentleman of undoubted scholarship and long experience. Parents who think of sending their daughters away from home to school would do well to examine beforehand into the merits of this institution. See advertisement.

COLUMBUS FEMALE COLLEGE.—Rev. J. F. Tarrant is the president of this college. We can fully recommend him, and bespeak for his school a liberal share of public patronage.

AGENTS WANTED.

Several very horrible advertisements have come to us under this head, having a mysterious air, with a request to send on and get a book inclosing money, etc. One of these or more have got into the ADVOCATE by an oversight. We warn all our friends against such advertisements, and apologise for such as have appeared in this paper.

Preaching in Connection with Bible Agency.—Revival of Religion.

MR. EDITOR: I send, with a request for publication, the following report of ministerial labor, by Rev. J. W. Harmon, M. D., the collecting and distributing agent of the Southwestern Bible Society for southern Mississippi and east Louisiana, two appointments in the month of August. Yours truly,

J. E. C. DOREMUS,
General Agent S. B. S.

Rev. J. E. C. Doremus, General Agent Southwestern Bible Society:

DEAR SIR: After leaving your city I proceeded to Brookhaven and re-organized the Bible Society there, which I sent you an account. Thence I proceeded to Lake station, on the Southern Railroad. Captain Dowd was in waiting with a wagon and carriage, to transport another minister, Rev. Mr. Price, and myself out to the Scotland neighborhood, Neshoba county. Reaching the point of destination the next day we commenced our meeting on Friday night at Captain Dowd's late private house, with some fifty or seventy-five hearers. On Saturday the 7th, we repaired to Spring Chapel, and found a congregation of about three hundred people, preached to them at eleven o'clock A. M., and again at three o'clock P. M. On Sunday, the 8th, we preached to about five hundred people, some of whom had come twenty miles to attend the meeting. After preaching we organized the Scotland Bible Society, under the most favorable auspices. * * * Up to the exertions of this society we had to meet a great dearth of Bibles in Neshoba county.

On Monday, the 11th, preached again to a very large audience. The work of God commenced among the people. On Tuesday preached again, the congregation larger than on Monday, and many crying to God for mercy, and some clear conversions. Preached at three o'clock P. M. The good work progressed with power. Preached again on Wednesday, the congregation still crowding the house. Many professed a good hope, with loud praises to Him who had bought them with

His own blood. Wednesday evening we renewed the battle, and the slain of the Lord were many. Thursday, the congregation on the increase, and the various denominations working with a will, some of the leading families, and men of great influence, swearing allegiance to God. The result was, up to the time of my leaving, about twenty added to the Methodist Church, some twelve or fifteen to the Presbyterian, and some few to the Baptist Church. The meeting was still continued, while I was compelled to leave for another appointment. It was a time of unwonted power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit among the people. I am convinced that good will flow from the distribution of the Bibles we now propose to send to that county, after such a reviving work among the people.

On Sunday following I preached at Hickory station, on the Southern Railroad; thence I went out to the Spring Hill Chapel, Newton county, Sunday night, and found a very large audience awaiting my arrival. I preached, and so great was the demonstration among the audience that I called the people to prayer, and about sixty penitents bowed at the altar and throughout the congregation. It was a time to be remembered. Many professed to have found peace.

On Monday night the people were still alive to their eternal interests. After service I organized a Bible Society among them. I was compelled to leave before the results of the meeting were ascertained, owing to utter exhaustion of body and voice.

These labors, I hope, may be considered as a clear gain for God's glory, in addition to the good work of distributing the Bible and pushing forward the great Bible cause.

The demand for Bibles is on the increase all over my field of operations, to such an extent, indeed, that I hesitate to make all the calls upon you which the great scarcity of copies of the Scriptures requires, for fear you may not be able to meet them.

What say you to this increasing demand? Shall I meet it without hesitation?

A MUSIC BOOK WITH FIVE HUNDRED EDITORS.—Mason Brothers announce the American Tune Book, a new work which is to contain all the church tunes and anthems which have proved widely popular in America, and none others. Something like one thousand tunes will be included. Five hundred musicians and leaders of choirs, in all parts of the country, only one in a place, have been interested in the preparation of this volume, each of them having furnished a list of tunes which have proved popular in his section. These lists have been made the basis of selection. By this means the publishers believe they have been able to determine what are the really popular tunes; to collect them altogether and exclude all others. There will be an elementary department for singing schools. It will make a volume of nearly four hundred and fifty pages, price $1·50, and will be ready October 1.—N. Y. Mus. Gazette.

THE late Hon. James Gordon, who met a sudden death through the accidental discharge of his rifle, at one time entertained very strongly the desire of engaging personally in missionary work among the Kaffirs in South Africa. On his death the members of his family, after consideration, came to the conclusion that there could be no more worthy memorial of their beloved relative than the foundation of a mission station in South Africa. The family of Lord Aberdeen have, therefore, handed over to the foreign mission committee of the Free Church of Scotland a sum of £6,000 for the purpose of establishing such a mission. They bear the expense of sending out its first missionaries.

OBITUARY.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM W. NEILSON.

It becomes my melancholy duty to record the death of this highly esteemed man. He was a native of Donegal, Ireland—born February 15, 1792—but was brought to the United States at a very early age. His early life was spent in the United States army, of which he was a gallant officer. He resigned about 1820, was married to Miss Sarah H. Frazier, of Philadelphia, March 30, 1822, and located himself on a farm near this place, where he resided till his death. His first wife died, and he was married a second time, to Miss Louisa P. Abert, in Columbus, on the 6th of June, 1837, who survived him but a few days.

Captain Neilson possessed many noble traits of character. He was brave, energetic, generous and hospitable—a devoted friend, and true to all his professions. In early life he was quite wicked; but shortly after his first marriage he was converted, and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he remained a worthy communicant till his decease. I was present when he was converted.—The change was clear and marked. He had been a man of violent passions and strong prejudices. A short time before he professed religion he had a misunderstanding with one of his neighbors, and there was a deadly feud between them, even to carrying weapons. When Captain Neilson realised the pardoning love of God in his heart he arose from his knees and offered his hand to his adversary, saying: "Sampson, I have been your enemy; but it is all gone now. Give me your hand." They shook hands, and both joined the same church, and remained unvarying friends till the death of Judge Sampson.

I was with him also in his last hours, and found him in great peace of mind. He often expressed his gratitude to God for His goodness to him. He had no fears of death, and seemed to exercise an unwavering confidence in the Saviour in whom he believed. He died on the 28th of July.

"Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

PAIN PAINT still stands between
The living and the dead,
A Rock on which to lean
When hope and strength are fled.

A Lighthouse on the shore
Saves human ships from wreck,
Lost health and strength restore
To every man on deck.

'Tis Water to the faint
To cool the parching tongue,
The blessings of Pain Paint
A million men have sung.

Pain Paint is like the Sun—
Gives life and vigor new,
To every nation run,
Refreshing as the dew.

'Tis Freedom to the slave—
Pain Paint those fetters broke;
No drugs or dosing knave
Rebinds the heathen yoke.

'Tis Summer to the drear,
'Tis Victory to the lost,
'Tis Fruit and golden ear
To those by famine tossed.

A Friend amid our foes,
A Breeze in torrid zones,
Pain Paint will banish woes,
'Tis Meat instead of bones.

A Horse to weary legs,
'Tis Money in the till,
Or Wine instead of dregs;
Pain Paint is better still.

What Physicians Say.

I have not lost a single patient in sixteen months past, since using Dr. WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT and ANNIHILATOR in my practice. The cause of my success I owe to his medicines. I cured a case of Cancer with thirty ounces of Pain Paint. This patient was resigning himself to a surgical operation. He is now entirely well. Also cured a woman with Cancer of the Womb of six years' standing. I have two other cases under treatment nearly well. I can refer you to Judge Dixon, of McConnellsburg, Fulton county, Pennsylvania, for the validity of my statements.

—H. BUSHEY, M. D.,
Sipes Mills, Fulton county, Pena.
August 2, 1869.

Water will not stain nor smart; neither will Pain Paint.

Water is harmless for injection; so is Pain Paint.

Water can be drank freely; so can Pain Paint.

Inflammation is the cause of all physical pain. Matter or corruption will never form unless caused by high inflammation; absorption and evaporation remove inflammation with wonderful rapidity. This is the new principle of Pain Paint. Cancers are healed as readily as a cut. Old fever sores, including ulcers of every name or of the foulest description, are cured by simply keeping them under the cooling influence of Pain Paint. Diarrhea and Dysentery cured within ten minutes by a faithful application across the bowels of the patient. A pint of Pain Paint applied properly to the head, when the pulse reaches the highest point, will positively cure Typhoid, Yellow, or any other known fever; by cooling the brain properly no fever can exist in the body. Pain Paint applied to a burn, with several folds of cotton cloth dripping wet, will positively prevent blistering, if done immediately. It removes pain or swelling from bee stings, musquito bites or poisonous wounds; stops itch and sore or Neuralgia in a few minutes. Pains in the Liver, Heart or Kidneys relieved at the first application. Removes stiffness in joints and muscles, including all kinds of Rheumatic ailments.

Large bottles are much the cheapest, and should always be used for violent pains, spasms, fits, tumors or chronic ailments, or the whites. Beware of counterfeits. Dr. Wolcott's remedies are put up in white wrappers; buy none other. One gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of $20, or one quart $8, or one pint $5; or six pints of Annihilator, for Catarrh and Colds in the head, for $5, including directions and medical advice. All who come to the office treated free of cost, and no dosing the stomach. Small bottles sold at all drug stores. All remittances should be by post office orders or registered letters or by express, to R. L. WOLCOTT, No. 181 Chatham Square, New York. se4 4tr

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

180 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

SUNSET.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

Hand in hand, by the garden gate,
Two little eager children wait;
Looking across the dusky plain,
Across the billows of rustling grain,
To watch the day in her splendor dressed,
Die slowly out of the gleaming west.

Over their shoulders, brown and bare,
Floats a tangle of sunny hair;
All the wealth of its tawny gold
Once into shining curls was rolled,
Tossed by the summer winds about,
Caught by the brambles tall and stout.

They have been up on the hills at play,
Where the brier roses bloom to-day;
Hunting the pastures green and low,
For the beds where the sweet wild strawberries grow;
Wading under the alders cool,
Where the silver minnows light up the pool.

Into their eyes the loval sun
Shines, for its course is almost done;
Touching their brows and tangled hair
With a glory a pictured saint might wear;
And I almost deem that their eager eyes
Are looking away into Paradise.

Slowly out of the gleaming west
Dies the day in her splendor dressed;
Cloudy castle and gates of light
Fade to the dusky hues of night;
But the children's faces grow more fair
As they bend by the mother's knee in prayer.

CURIOSITIES OF ANIMAL LIFE.

FLYING FISH.

There are no doubt among the wonders of the great deep many things more curious, but none at the same time more interesting, than that airy little creature, the delight of all transmarine voyagers, commonly known as the flying fish.—The fish to which this name is generally applied, and to which those who employ it usually refer, is an inhabitant of the Atlantic ocean. It is met with in great numbers at the tropics, though not unfrequently found as high up as the fiftieth degree of north latitude. Its scientific name is Exocætus volitans; Exocætus, from a Greek word signifying "sleeping out of the sea," the ancients believing that they slept on the beach at night; volitans, "flying," from their having the pectoral fins so enlarged as to resemble wings. They are often seen to leap by hundreds and even by thousands from the water, moving in the air so rapidly as to resemble birds more than fish. Their flight, however, is not like that of a bird; they simply sail along, sustaining and prolonging their course by expanding their wing like fins. On this subject the author of "The Malay Archipelago," speaking of the flying fish of the Indian ocean—the Oriental Gurnard—a smaller species than that of the Atlantic, has the following passage:

"December 30.—Passed the Island of Teor. * * * Flying fish were numerous to-day. * * * As they skim along the surface they turn on their sides, so as fully to display their beautiful fins, taking a flight of about a hundred yards, rising and falling in a most graceful manner. At a little distance they exactly resemble swallows; and no one who sees them can doubt that they really do fly, not merely descend in an oblique direction from the height they gain by their first spring."

A French tourist in Florida gives an interesting description of this curious fish, which we translate somewhat freely.

"Sheltered by my tent from the burning sun, I witnessed a dance and a combat of flying fish. The sea was covered with a somewhat reddish vegetation, composed of one of the smaller species of algæ, among which millions of microscopic larvæ spring into activity. A shoal of flying fish was following this floating field for the sake of the food it afforded them. Some sported on the surface of the water; others darted into the air, or performed a sort of dance, something like a quadrille, made up of thousands of individuals. Two numerous bands arose at once, the one in front of the other, at a distance of about twenty yards, flying toward each other till they almost met, then retiring an equal distance, and again approaching, thus forming a grotesque 'forward two.' Then they passed, the one beneath the other, and regained the water by a gradual horizontal descent. Scarcely had they plunged into the sea, when two other 'sets' arose from the same point, and began anew the dance. Each quadrille seemed to be composed of four flocks, numbering full a thousand individuals in each. All around the vessel a score of quadrilles of flying fish gave themselves up to these odd gymnastics. One could almost have fancied that it was an invasion of those large locusts which infest the husbandry of the warm countries; the more so, as these flying fish are not very large, being scarcely more than seven inches in length, whilst they make during their flight a tolerable loud humming sound, produced, I presume, by the air expelled from their gills. They were of that species found only in the waters of the Atlantic (Exocœtus volitans.) Clad in a magnificent livery of azure and silver, their scales glittered in the sun like caskets of pearls and turquoises.

"With these bands of exocets were associated other species of flying fish. Some of these, a foot in length, were of a reddish-brown color, with black fins, and by no means remarkable for beauty. The head of this species is protected by a sort of casque or helmet, and its gill-covers are armed with sharp spines. It is allied to the sea swallow of the Mediterranean, and is probably the Spinous Gurnard.—These fish can soar to a greater elevation and remain a longer time in the air than the exocets. It thus happens that they may be seen floating disdainfully above the quadrilles formed by the latter, whom they pursue and drive into the sea. They fly to the height of ten or twelve yards, remaining in the air till their fins become dry, when they fall back into their native element.

"Whilst we were sailing in the midst of them, a goodly number fell upon the deck of the schooner, where my negroes gathered them for supper. They are pursued in the air and the water by enemies equally voracious and unrelenting. In the sea, the dorados, and bonitos, and sphyrens devour them by thousands; the furrows braved in the water and the noise of snapping jaws announce the presence of these hunters of fish. In the air, gulls and other birds of prey seize the dancers on the wing and devour them with joyous screams.

"Among these insatiable foes the flying fish continue their frolics without the slightest apparent concern, and in utter disregard of the fate of their companions. In nature all animals devour one another; you to-day, me to-morrow, is the law of destruction and of universal renewal. Meanwhile the flying fish dance, and they are right. If they knew of the fate that menaced them, their lot would be a sad one indeed.

"Notwithstanding the destruction thus caused, the number of these fish is immense. Their flesh is said to be very delicate, and of a sweet, nutty flavor; but the roe and molt are so caustic that they burn the palate, and must be carefully avoided."—Once a Month.

FARM AND GARDEN.

SOMETHING ABOUT HOGS.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial has written an amusing article on hogs, a portion of which we give as follows:

I beg your readers not to be alarmed. I am not going to write a polished letter, although the heading may indicate that much.

The hog is considered, for example, a filthy beast; when, as the fact is, he is the neatest creature, naturally, in animated nature. Poor hoggy is troubled with fleas. He understands fleas, and has a way of getting rid of them that gave rise to the slander respecting his proclivities for dirt. Hoggy rolls in the mud. The flea finds himself plastered up. Soon as the mud is dry hoggy rubs off mud and flea together.

Give your hog a clean pen, with plenty of fresh water to wash in, and he will put to shame the neatest housekeeper.

Again, he is charged with being a voracious feeder, and not nice as to his food. But, we must remember, that like Cardinal Woolsey, he is a beast "of unbounded stomach," and not always a square meal to fill it with. Consult hoggy's nature, and feed him well, and you will find him as nice as the most finished epicure that frequents the St. Nicholas. Every one, a naturalist I mean, who has eyes looking out of his heart as well as brain, who has watched a pig in an orchard, realizes this. At first the animal gorges himself with fruit; after a time he gets choicy, listens for the newly dropped fruit, and has his favorite tree.

The strangest fact connected with my subject is his taste for snakes. Hoggy regards snakes as a delicacy, and makes no distinction between the harmless and the poisonous sort. When I first came to Mac-a-check the valley abounded in copperheads and rattlesnakes. The hogs have cleared them out. It is amusing to watch Mr. Hog at this sort of a meal. When he first sees the snake he makes after it on a lively trot. His expressive countenance says plainly, "Here is the first delicacy of the season." He takes the indignant snake about the middle, and with his fore-hoof placed artistically on the back of the snake, he commences eating in the most deliberate and business-like manner. The snake remonstrates; he strikes wickedly at the gourmand. Hoggy winks, and grunts, and continues his meal until Mrs. Eve's first lover and last domestic trouble has disappeared.

I insist upon it, although frequently laughed at for my opinion, that the hog has a very expressive countenance; at least it is equal to all the emotions and mental processes to which piggy is subjected. If one will study it he will find an intense seriousness, and an eye to witness it, as it were. He looks up from under his ears with an expression that says: "Come, now, no nonsense." I doubt whether a hog is capable of a joke. It is the hog trait shared with some of our good neighbors, to be capable of fun. A drunken hog, however, is very entertaining. I once saw a pen full in this condition. The distiller had, through mistake, turned out a quantity of whisky. The hogs drank, as all hogs do, to excess, and acted very like their dignified and pretentious superiors. They were frisky and senseless. They would lean against each other and squeal. Then they would run, and, striking a root or stone, would turn somersaults, in the most comical manner. I observed one fellow leaning, in silence, against the fence. He had an intensely solemn expression. "Look at that old cuss," cried the distiller, "a lettin' on he ain't drunk."

This same distiller was troubled by a poor wretch who, hanging about the distillery, would steal enough whisky to get drunk on.—One day the distiller found him in this condition, and, exasperated beyond endurance, rolled the poor creature out, and, pouring a bucket of slop over him, called up the hogs. The hungry swine went to work, eating the slop off the clothes. The poor fellow, unable to help himself, but aware that the "hogs were in the garden," would feebly wave his hand, and mutter, "Shoo, shoo, thick 'em, Towser, thick 'em." The hogs, unmindful of the remonstrance, would insert their snouts under the helpless inebriate, and turn him with a "flop" really comical. They ate off his clothes, and were proceeding to take bites out of his body, when the distiller interfered and rescued the victim.

Ever after those hogs would take after the drunken fellow the moment he appeared in sight. The strangest part of it, however, is the fact that other swine took it up and also chased the drunken man. It seemed as if the distiller's hogs had narrated the circumstance to the other hogs, and they had talked the thing over.

How to Oil a Harness.—First, subject a harness to one or two coats (as the leather may need) of lampblack and castor oil, warmed sufficiently to make it penetrate the stock readily. Then make about two quarts of warm soap suds, and with a sponge wash the harness. When dry, rub it over with a mixture of oil and tallow (equal parts) with sufficient lampblack to give it color—or what is better, Prussian blue—which gives it a new and fresh look. This compound should be applied sparingly, and be well rubbed in, which can be quickly done, and will leave a smooth and clean surface. The advantages of this process are:

1. By saturating the stock in the first place with oil the soap and water are prevented from penetrating it in the process of washing. When leather is permitted to absorb water or soap, it has an ultimate tendency to harden it.

2. When the harness is washed first (as is generally the case) the water repels the oil; consequently in the one case you have the oil inside the stock, and in the other you have the soap and water.

3. By oiling first it softens the dirt so that it can be washed off in at least one-half of the time required when washing before oiling, and also saves the "scraping" process, which defaces the grain of the leather.

4. It will remain soft much longer from the fact of its being penetrated with oil.

5. The whole process can be accomplished without the delay of waiting for it to dry.

Consequently the harness can be oiled and cleaned in much less time, will remain soft longer, wear longer and look better.—Exchange.

Bad Weather in October.—Captain Saxby, of the Royal Navy, has called public attention in the London Times to the following facts, which, if verified by results, will prove a curious instance of a priori reasoning:

At seven A. M. on the ensuing October 5, the moon will be at the part of her orbit which is nearest the earth; her attraction will, therefore, be at its maximum force. At noon the moon will be on the earth's equator, a circumstance which never occurs without marked atmospheric disturbance; at two P. M., the same day, lines drawn from the earth's centre will cut the sun and moon in the same arc of right ascension. The moon's attraction and the sun's will, therefore, be acting in the same direction. In other words, the new moon will be on the earth's equator when in perigee, and nothing more threatening can occur of high tides and destructive storms.

SCIENTIFIC.

Land and Water.—Are Earthquakes Land Makers?

A writer in a late number of Chambers' Journal, under the caption, "The Usefulness of Earthquakes," attempts the theory that these phenomena, combined with volcanic eruptions, are the means of repairing the waste made by the action of the sea on shores and of rainfall on interiors. He assumes that "If the solid substance of the earth formed a perfect sphere in ante-geologic times—that is in ages preceding those to which our present geologic studies extend—there can be no doubt that there was then no visible land above the surface of the water; the ocean must have formed a uniformly deep covering to the submerged surface of the solid globe. In this state of things nothing but the earth's subterranean forces should tend to the production of continents and islands."

The if which we have italicised is the best reply to his doubtful assumption; there is no evidence that the earth was ever a perfect sphere; in fact not only astronomy but geology witnesses the contrary. The earth is an oblate spheroid, and, so far as our means of ascertaining extends, was always of this form. If the earth was ever, for any geologic period, submerged with water, some evidences would have remained in every portion of its surface. By a "geologic period" we mean the duration of time between one great natural condition, as determined by geologists, and its successor; periods counted by a lapse of time compared to which our historical period is as the dust in the balance. Any one who carefully reads the records of geological investigation will see that the probabilities are strongly in favor of a condition of the earth's surface as regards protuberances and depressions—mountains and valleys, elevated plateaus and depressed plains, land and water—in ancient times very similar to that which now exists. To be sure it is evident that portions, now dry land, formed once the bottom of seas, and mountains were but islands, but there is no reason for doubting that the present seas might have been dry land; our means for determining this fact, however, are meagre compared with those afforded for an examination of dry land. We cannot traverse the ocean's bottom as we can the valleys of the habitable earth. It may be possible that a larger proportion of the earth's surface was once covered by water than at present; but while this opinion may be entertained, it is morally certain that where seas now roll their unobstructed waves dry land in many instances existed. Why could not the peninsula of Yucatan with Cuba, Hayti, Jamaica and the group of Caribbean islands once have inclosed as an inland lake what is known now as the Caribbean sea? And why not the peninsulas of Florida and Yucatan with western Cuba have similarly inclosed the Gulf of Mexico? So at the Straits of Dover there is evidence, from recent soundings and examinations, that England and France were once physically united as they subsequently were politically.

The writer makes this statement: "At first sight it may seem paradoxical to assert that earthquakes, fearfully destructive as they have so often proved, are yet essentially preservative and restorative phenomena; yet this is strictly the case. Had no earthquakes taken place in old times man would not now be living on the face of the earth; if no earthquakes were to take place in future the term of man's existence would be limited within a range of time far less than that to which it seems likely, in all human probability, to be extended."

This does seem paradoxical, because for every case of the permanent upheaval of barren rock by earthquakes there can be brought the record of permanent disappearance of fertile lands. Indeed the destruction caused by earthquakes in the sinking or ingulfing of tracts of land and producing in their place noxious waters, or allowing the inroads of the sea, has been so great and so much more frequent than the gift of solid land, that earthquakes are, the world over, and in all times, regarded with dread as the most destructive agent in nature. From the time that (as the "New England Primer," published in 1770, has it,)

Proud Korah's troop
Was swallowed up, down to the recent destruction of Arequipa and other cities on the western coast of South America, the earthquake has been a destroyer and not a reatorer. From the disappearance of the island Atlantis, mentioned by Plato in his Timæus to the recent reports of similar disappearances, the earthquake has diminished rather than increased the amount of habitable land.—Scientific American.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE.
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.
ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven; thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 1, 1869.

COTTON.—The sales to-day summed up 89 bales, of which 24 were old crop, and 65 new, at about previous rates. Low middling, new, sold at 30½c., and strict low middling at 31c. There was a fair inquiry during the early part of the day, but the movement was restricted by the limited supply on sale. The receipts of new crop to-day were 67 bales, making a total, to date, of 435 bales, against 1,895 to the corresponding period last year.

SUGAR AND MOLASSES.—There was no movement in Louisiana sugar beyond a few retail sales from second hands. Yesterday, not reported, 61 hogsheads, sold on private terms, 14 good common at 11½c., and 12 strictly prime to choice at 14½c. per pound. There was nothing done on the levee in Louisiana molasses. Reboiled is selling from store at 60. to 70c.

FLOUR.—The market has shown a better feeling and more animation to-day. The principal sales embraced 1,000 barrels, of which 100 fine at $4 75, 46 superfine at $6, 67 and 110 treble extra at $6 30, and 200 ditto at $6 50, 200 choice extra at $7, and 50 at $8 50 per barrel. In a jobbing way a very brisk business was done at these prices. Bakers' mixed is quoted at $8 to $8 50 per barrel.

CORN.—The supply on the landing is light, that in store is fair. The market is quiet. 250 sacks, ordinary mixed, in store, sold at $1, and 200 choice white, on the landing, at $1 07½ per bushel.

OATS.—The market is quiet, with a fair supply on hand. 500 sacks sold at 65c., and 100 at 66c. per bushel.

BRAN is dull and prices are lower. Some 1,200 sacks were sold to-day, however, of which 700 sacks in store on private terms, 200 at $1 02½, and 300 in poor order at $1 02½ per 100 pounds.

HAY is in light supply, and prices are firm. 50 bales choice Western sold at $27 per ton.

PORK.—A brisk retail business was done to-day at $36 to $36 25 per barrel for mess. At wholesale holders ask $35 50.

BACON.—The market for this article has shown more animation to-day. Shoulders are retailing briskly at 16¾c., clear sides 19¾ to 20c., sugar cured hams 24 to 25½c. per pound.

LARD.—The stock is light, and prices are very firm, although there is not much doing. Tierces are quoted at 20½c., kegs 22½ to 23c. per pound.

BUTTER.—Choice is in request, but other kinds are very dull. We quote choice Western 26 to 30c., inferior 18 to 22c., choice Eastern 43 to 44c., common to good Northern 35c. per pound.

CHEESE is in very light demand at 14 to 15c. for Western Reserve, 16 to 17c. for factory, and 19 to 20c. for cream.

COFFEE.—The market is inactive, with holders asking 16 to 16½c. per pound for prime, 16½ to 17c. for good, 14 to 15¼c. for fair, 14c. for ordinary—gold duty paid.

BREAKFAST BACON is selling at 22 to 23c. per pound for Western and Northern.

MONETARY.—Gold opened at 132¾ to 132⅞, (against 133⅜ at New York,) and closed at 132½ to 132¾. The sales included $10,000 at 132½, $12,000 ($5,000 and $7,000) at 132⅝, $15,000 at 132⅝ to 132¾ $2,000 and $5,000 at 132⅝, and $23,000 ($3,000, $8,000 and $12,000) at 133. In silver $1,500 in American half dollars changed hands at 130, $1,000 at 130¼ and $1,500 at 131; and 5,000 Mexican dollars at 3½ per cent. premium in gold, and 6,000 at 3¾. We quote 130 to 130½ for the former, and 3¼ to 3½ for the latter.

We hear of about 75 shares Bank of New Orleans having been sold within the past few days at $39 50 per share.

In bonds, $1,000 city ten per cents sold at 101¾, and $12,000 at 102. Yesterday $6,000 city seven per cent. bond certificates brought 79.

The demand for Metropolitan Police warrants was less active, and rates were drooping. No sales were reported, but at the close they were quoted at 88 to 88½. The dealers bought small sums at 87½ to 88. Yesterday $25,000 changed hands at 88 to 89.

We heard of no transactions in State warrants. The dealers bought at 79 to 81, and sold at 80 to 84, according to size of warrant.

We note a sale of $10,000 City Treasury notes at 2½ per cent. discount. The dealers' rates for small sums were 2½ discount buying, 2¼ selling.

STONEWALL INSTITUTE,

Located Thirteen Miles North of Selma, Alabama.

This SCHOOL FOR BOYS, so favorably located in the quiet country, reopens on the

FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

Its officers are all experienced and devoted to teaching. It has no sectarian tinge; is not controlled by Trustees. The Principal alone is responsible to his patrons.

Pupils from its halls have taken premiums this summer at three different Universities.—Extra attention is given to the English branches; all our students, of every age, are taught to spell and read well; to write a good hand. Boys of tender age, nine or ten years old, will be received, and will be parentally treated and controlled.

This school is permanent. Its founder and Principal has been identified with education in the South for twenty years, and he expects to continue to devote his ardent energies to the culture of Southern youth.

Parents can save time and money by patronizing such enterprises. We rarely change Teachers or text books, and, being in the quiet country, cheap clothing will curtail expenses.

CHARGES.—$260 will cover a scholastic year's board, tuition and washing; half paid in October, the other February 1, 1870.

Payments may be made to Foster & Gardner, Mobile, Alabama. $15 to be deposited for books, etc., if all of which is not used, it will be refunded. Each student furnishes his own blankets, sheets and towels.

Persons in sickly sections may send in by September 1, adding $30 to their regular remittance.

Hacks run from Selma to the Institute in October, conveying boys for $2 50 each.

In the city of Mobile we refer, by permission, to Messrs. Foster & Gardner, John K. Randall & Co., C. E. Thames & Co., Baker, Lawler & Co., Kirksey & Carpenter, Dexter, Dunlap & Wilson, Nabers & Hanks; also to Drs. R. L. Watkins, J. R. Burgett, A. S. Andrews; to Messrs. John Little Smith, Richard B Owen and Thomas H. Herndon; finally, to Profs. W. R. Poindexter and P. E. Collins.

Applications for admission may be made at once by addressing the President,

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—At five o'clock this morning Rawlin's cough was more tronblesome and respiration more difficult; at eleven o'clock he was asleep. Nourishment and stimulants had been frequently administered, his physicians hoping to sustain his fast waning strength until the return of the President, who was hourly expected.

LATER.—Secretary Rawlins died at half-past four this afternoon.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—General Rawlins died before the arrival of President Grant.

General John A. Logan, Joe Holt, General George H. Thomas and G. M. Dodge, engineer of the North Pacific Railroad, are spoken of for the War Department. General Dodge was offered the position some time ago.

Before his death, General Rawlins expressed himself freely on political matters, and in favor of the most liberal interpretation of the reconstruction laws, and the early admission into the Union of the Southern States on terms that would leave no regrets. He also expressed a desire that the moral aid of the government should be extended to the Cubans struggling for independence.

SCRANTON, PA., Sept. 8.—Evening. One hundred and three bodies have been brought up from the mine.

RELATION OF ARCHITECTURE TO RELIGION.—One reason for the success of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is the shape of his church. It is as well arranged as a theatre for seeing and hearing. The congregation is massed about the speaker. Every member is in direct and sympathetic relation with him. He, in turn, is the centre of the magnetic current of the whole house, the focus of the inspiration of the entire assembly.

The same is true of the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon and his meeting house. He stands upon a platform projected into the body of the house, exactly in a position to carry the whole worshiping congregation upon his broad shoulders; and he does it. It requires a strong man to occupy such a situation; but, when he is adequate to it, there is scarcely any limit to his power. Imagine what Mr. Spurgeon or Mr. Beecher would do placed at the end of a modern imitation Gothic edifice, standing mere isolated human specks in the remote tribune, with the congregation seated in a long parallelogram of pews—a formal, unwieldy column, with little magnetic glow in itself and removed from the sympathetic control of the speaker. The preaching would be at arm's length. Nothing less than an angel's trumpet would effect much.—Independent.

THERE is a decision in Gray's Report which is at once sound moral and good law. A woman, sued for slander, defended herself on the ground that she only repeated, and without malice, what was currently reported. The court held that to repeat a story which is false and slanderous, no matter how widely it may have been circulated, is at the peril of the tale-bearer. Slander cannot always be traced to its origin. Its power of mischief is derived from repetition, even if a disbelief of the story accompanies its relation. Indeed this half doubtful way of imparting slander is often the surest method resorted to by the slanderer to give currency to the tale.

THE STORM.

EFFECT IN THE CITY AND ON THE LAKE SHORE.

About midnight Saturday night a severe storm of wind and rain set in from the east-northeast, and continued with almost unabated fury until Sunday night. All day Sunday the wind blew with tremendous power, changing from east-northeast to northwest, carrying trees, and in many instances houses, before it, besides driving the water from the lake over the villages on the lake shore, and swelling the canals until they burst their confines and flooded the adjacent country.

This was undoubtedly the usual equinoctial gale, and from all accounts it was more disastrous in its effects than any blow that has occurred for many years. The barometer fell early Sunday morning, indicating a hurricane, and prudent skippers ran out extra lines and made everything all taut in anticipation of the blow.

For several days the wind had been from the eastward, and a sailor friend of ours predicted, two days ago, there would be a heavy gale shortly, "as he felt it in his bones," and, sure enough, on Saturday night it came in all its grandeur and power.

At two o'clock on Sunday the storm was at its height, and the masses of dark clouds as they were driven furiously athwart the heavens, the wrestling of strong trees with the wind, and the rain which, falling in torrents, was driven hither and thither by the fierce gusts, made up a scene at once fearful and sublime.

The rear of the city presented a sad spectacle yesterday morning, and was a sad commentary on those who have been elected to office by the people. Ordinary care and but little expense would have saved thousands of people from overflow, whose houses were submerged, and who must suffer untold annoyance and discomfort before the flood recedes. In nearly all the canals breaks occurred, and between the Old and New Canals the water backed up as high as Claiborne street.

Bridges and wooden sidewalks have been swept away, and the water at ten o'clock yesterday morning was reported still rising.

The river was converted into a miniature sea, and the waves, capped with foam, lashed the bank with fury. Strange to say, there was no serious damage reported to the steamers, shipping or small craft. The steamers Dora and Carrie Poole, lying on the right bank, were reft of their smoke stacks, but they can easily be replaced.

At the lake end of the Shell Road the damage has been considerable, and Major Hoyt describes the blow as having been terrific. The fishermen all declare that there has been no such blow for many years. The water rose a foot higher than it was last year.—Picayune, August 7

WHAT IS WANTED.—The Holy Spirit is able to make the word as successful now as in the days of the apostles. He can bring in by hundreds and thousands, as easily as by ones and twos. The reason why we are not more prosperous is, that we have not the Holy Spirit with us in might and power as in early times. If we had the Spirit sealing our ministry with power, it would signify very little about our talent. Men might be poor and uneducated; their words might be broken and ungrammatical; there might be none of the polished periods of Hall or glorious thunders of Chalmers; but if the might of the Spirit attended them the bumblest evangelists would be more successful than the most eloquent of preachers. It is extraordinary grace, not talent, that wins the day. It is extraordinary spiritual power that we need. Mental power fills a chapel; but spiritual power fills the church. Mental power may gather a congregation—spiritual, power. Oh! we know some before whom we shrink into nothing as to talent, but who have no spiritual power, and when they speak they have not the Holy Spirit with them; but we know others—simple-hearted, worthy men—who speak their country dialect, and who stand up to preach in their country place, and the Spirit of God clothes every word with power. Hearts are broken, souls are saved, and sinners are born again. O, Spirit of the living God, we want thee! Thou art the life, the soul, the source of thy people's success.—Without thee they can do nothing; with thee they can do everything.—C. H. Spurgeon

USEFUL children are worth a great deal, though they may be very little.

THE CROPS OF 1869.

The time has arrived when a tolerably accurate estimate can be made of the crops of the country for the present year, based upon a multiplicity of reports carefully selected from all the best sources in the principal agricultural regions. It seems to be pretty generally conceded that the wheat crop is the largest ever produced in this country, and fully up to the average in quality. The yield of spring wheat has been exceptionally good in some States, which, in connection with the vast increase in the breadth of territory brought under cultivation, will more than compensate for the unpropitious weather drawbacks in other sections of the Northwest. Minnesota, for instance, has had under cultivation to wheat this year an area of one million one hundred thousand acres, which, at the estimate of eighteen and a half bushels per acre, will give the munificent aggregate of twenty million three hundred and fifty thousand bushels. When it is remembered that this young State barely raised wheat enough to bread herself ten or twelve years ago, the result of her agricultural effort this year is something quite remarkable.

The other young States beyond the Mississippi also chronicle scarcely less gratifying achievements in this respect. Our government is so deficient in accurate statistical information pertaining to the crops that it is impossible to form an idea, even approximately, of the magnitude of the wheat crop, but it is safe to say that the valley of the Mississippi and the great lakes, at a moderate estimate, will alone produce a surplus this year of seventy-five millions of bushels. Add a surplus of twenty-five millions for other sections, and we shall have a hundred millions for exportation if required. All the other crops are, at least, a fair average, with the single exception of corn, which in the great Western belt has suffered severely from excess of moisture in the early part of the season, and more recently from drouth. Still it is possible that a late season may make liberal amends for the shortcomings of the spring. In any event, we are likely to have abundance wherewith to make an average hog crop, and for the other multiform uses to which this great national cereal is applied. An encouraging feature, in this connection, is the late free deliveries of last season's crop at Chicago and the other upper lake markets; for if the growing crops were at all likely to be cut short, as some have represented it likely to be, it is not probable that the farmers would be disposed to part with their surplus so freely.

Turning to the South, the same encouraging features are presented with regard to the cotton, cane, tobacco, rice and other crops peculiar to that section. The cotton crop, which has a much more important bearing upon the finances than any other, appears to have sustained fewer casualties than usual, and may now be said to be out of danger. We are aware that estimates and guesses as to the yield are of little value at this stage of the season, but it is a significant fact that all estimates that are deemed to be worth anything have been considerably increased of late. On the supposition that this crop yields the planters twenty-five cents per pound, it will bring them in legal tender $300,000,000, which is more than they received for the largest crop ever grown. It is computed that formerly they would have received less than $200,000,000 for such a crop.

With regard to the European crops, our information is not so full as could be desired, but enough is known to warrant the conclusion that our surplus crops of wheat, cotton, provisions, tobacco, etc., will find ready markets in Great Britain and on the Continent, at any thing like reasonable prices. The latest information is embodied in a cable dispatch, giving a synopsis of an editorial article in the London Times of the 25th instant. That authority places the English wheat crop at thirteen per cent. below the average; all other crops luxuriant. The United Kingdom, be it remembered, is a heavy importer of breadstuffs, even in seasons when her harvests are most prolific. In Continental Europe, the cable also informs us, the crops promise to be light, with the single exception of the interior of Russia. Great Britain has made liberal drafts upon this country for wheat during the last few months, and there has lately been a large increase of orders from the Continent, mainly from France; and though the limits have been so low to admit of their execution, the bare fact of the receipt of such orders is to be regarded as an encouraging omen.

As the true material wealth of a people consists in the products of the soil, the munificent agricultural achievements in the United States this year are something to be extremely grateful for to an all-wise Providence. The aggregate value of the crops will add materially to the national resources. The disposition to market them promptly, too, is a most encouraging indication. Their movement will put money in the pockets of Western and Southern producers, which will be freely spent to the manifest advantage of the whole industry and commerce of the country. The national credit, which has been suffering for several years from the continual drain of gold, and the immense export of bonds, in default of other commodities to be sent abroad to meet our trade balance, is already feeling the good effect of the increased rewards of the husbandman. The best evidence of this is the comparative low ruling of gold, at a period when importers are accustomed to meet their foreign obligations. With peace and plenty, we assuredly have a solid foundation for a substantial increase in the general prosperity from one end of our broad domain to the other.—New York Shipping List, 28th ultimo.

TO WHAT KINGDOM?—Even a little child may lead the great ones of earth to feel their need of heirship to an enduring inheritance:

King Frederick of Prussia was once traveling in his dominions, and passed through a pretty village, where he was to stop an hour or two.

The villagers were delighted to see their King, and had done their utmost in preparing to receive him. The school children strewed flowers before him; and one little girl had a pretty verse of "welcome" to say to him. He listened most kindly, and told her she had performed her task well, which pleased her very much. He turned to the school master, and said he would like to ask the school a few questions, and examine them in what they knew. Now, there happened to be a large dish of oranges on the table close by. The King took up one of them saying, "To what kingdom does this belong, children?"

"To the vegetable kingdom," replied one of the little girls.

"And to what kingdom this?" continued he, as he took from his pocket a gold coin.

"To the mineral kingdom," she answered.

"And to what kingdom do I belong?" inquired he, expecting, of course, that she would answer in the right order, "To the animal kingdom." But she paused, and colored very deeply, not knowing what to say. She feared that it would not sound respectful to answer to a King that he belonged to the animal kingdom; she puzzled her little brain for a reply.

Remembering the words in Genesis, where it says that God "created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him," she quickly looked up and said, "To God's kingdom, sir."

The King stooped down and placed his hand upon her head. A tear stood in his eye. He was moved by her simple words. Solemnly and devoutly did he answer, "God grant that I may be counted worthy of that kingdom."

THE WORK IN INDIANA.

The Rev. J. Ditzler, who was appointed last year by Bishop McTyeire to Indiana, reports progress. A Conference was lately held at Westport, at which he was present and assisting. The ministers and members of this organization, we believe, were originally of the Methodist Episcopal Church North; but they withdrew from it on account of its political utterances. We are glad they find in our church a platform and basis of union. We have a welcome for all who love a non-political Methodism. It will be remembered that our Conference in Illinois, now well organized and progressive, had a similar beginning. We copy an extract from the secular press:

"The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Annual Conference at Westport, Indiana, at its late session:

"WHEREAS, The Methodist Episcopal Church South has made such changes in her ecclesiastical polity and legislative economy that we see but little difference between theirs and our own, adopting a lay delegation equal to the itinerant (or clerical) in their General Conference, which is their legislative body, and lay delegates in all the Conferences of the church; and

"WHEREAS, They have such literature and publications of all kinds as we need, and can supply us with a number of efficient ministers to aid us in carrying the Gospel throughout this State and Ohio; therefore,

"Resolved, By this Annual Conference now in session at Westport, Decatur county, Indiana, August 21, 1869, that we do hereby adopt the principles, rules and regulations of said Methodist Episcopal Church South, as set forth in her Discipline, to become thereby a Conference of said church; Provided, that this action, with proper explanations, be submitted, after due notice, say from four to eight weeks, to the vote of the members of the Evangelical United Brethren Church in this State. Provided, further, that the same shall then be ratified by a session of said Conference, which shall meet in ——, October 27, 1869.

"A committee of three was appointed to receive and count the vote when reported by the pastors, and name the place of meeting. All indications go to show that the above action will be overwhelmingly ratified. Bishop McTyeire will then meet the Conference, and the act be consummated and their delegates elected to the next General Conference, which meets next May in Memphis.

"The movement is said to be sustained by every token of approval and the warmest demonstration. The Conference thus constituted promises to move off with about thirty ministers and a corresponding membership, houses of worship, etc."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

STOPPED HIS PAPER.—The following anecdote of the late Mr. Swain, from the Philadelphia Press, is not without its moral in other latitudes than Pennsylvania:

"Many years ago Mr. Swain, then editor of the Public Ledger, was hailed at the corner of Eighteenth and Chestnut streets by a very excited individual, who informed him in the most emphatic terms, 'I have stopped your paper, sir,' and proceeded to explain the why and wherefore, all the time gesticulating wildly. 'My gracious, sir, you don't say so. Come with me to the office, and let us see if we cannot remedy the matter. It grieves me that any one should stop my paper.' Down Chestnut street to Third the two proceeded. Arriving at the office, Mr. Swain said: 'Why, my dear sir, everything seems to be going on here as usual; I thought that you had stopped my paper.' Then and there the excited gentleman, whom the long walk had partly cooled, by the way, said he had stopped taking the one copy of the Ledger. Mr. Swain was profuse in his apologies for having misunderstood the meaning of his late subscriber's words, and regretted that he had given him the tramp from Eighteenth street to Third, down Chestnut. The gentleman took his way home, a wiser if not a better man, marveling at the stupidity of editors in general, and on Mr. Swain in particular. Before he left, however, he ordered the Ledger to be still sent to his address."

SMALL change being scarce in an Indiana town, the local paper accounts for it by saying that it is all taken up in contributions at the churches on Sunday and sent away to the heathen.

Call Me When Breakfast is Ready.

A SONG.

I.

Call me when breakfast is ready—
O mother! don't call me before;
Do not deny me the pleasure
Of moderate rest, I implore.
Eight hours of sleep are too little
For delicate maidens like me;
Dearer, by far, is my pillow
Than cup of the daintiest tea.
Mother, I cannot endure it;
This getting up early's a bore—
Call me when breakfast is ready;
Oh! please do not call me before.

II.

Call me when breakfast is ready—
O mother! don't call me too soon.
Shopping, of course, needs attention,
But that can be done before noon.
Talk of the folly of fashion,
I do not consider it so;
Parties must not be neglected,
And style is important, you know.
Mother! it makes me so nervous
To think of your step at my door;
Call me when breakfast is ready;
Oh! please do not call me before.

III.

Call me when breakfast is ready—
Oh! don't call me early, I pray.
Doctors advise to be quiet,
My spine is affected, they say.
Sleep is a potent elixir,
And better than drugs or the knife;
Why, then, so much in a hurry,
Since rest is the solace of life?
Mother, do have some compassion,
And chide my late rising no more;
Call me when breakfast is ready;
Oh! please do not call me before.

IV.

Call me when breakfast is ready—
O mother! I think I've been told,
Multitudes struggle for riches,
And barter their comfort for gold.
Hypocrites often rise early—
Their motives are perfectly plain:
Sundays they always sleep later,
Because they have nothing to gain.
Mother! I cannot endure it,
This getting up early's a bore—
Call me when breakfast is ready;
But please do not call me before.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: The intervention of the Sabbath school between public worship and the children, and of the superintendent between the pastor and the children, are subject to like objections with the intervention of Romish priests between the Saviour and penitent sinners—both are interpolations upon divine institutions and arrangements. The Sunday school is not the church, nor a more important institution than the church, but simply a department of church enterprise, like class meetings and prayer meetings. All three are subordinate to the public worship of God; and the effort to exalt the Sunday school above public worship is likely to operate as deleteriously upon it as the like effort did on class meetings. The pastor ranks the superintendent as he does the class leader and the leader of the prayer meeting. He is the pastor of the church, which embraces everything that pertains to religion.—The "jealousy of foreign intervention," alluded to by "Junior" in a late issue of the ADVOCATE, if it exists at all, comes from a misunderstanding of the relations between the Sunday school and the church.

But what shall we do when Sunday school pupils are habitually absent from the congregation of public worshipers? "Let them stay away, and make the Sunday school a church for the children," says W. E. M. L. But "tell us by what authority doest thou these things, and who gave thee this authority?" In the language of an eminent living divine:—"God ordained preaching, and Robert Raikes or John Wesley ordained Sunday schools. Whom shall we obey?" The same minister says: "My observation for years confirms me in the belief that when Sabbath school pupils do not attend public worship they lose the habit, or never have it; and when in their own estimation they get too large to attend Sunday school they rarely become church-goers. I have often said such pupils had better never go to Sunday school."

But can we not manage the two so as not to conflict in this way? Junior offers us a plan which he has tried with success—"have preaching and Sunday school together, the latter immediately after the former." But there are objections to that.

1. It is too radical a change in the long established order of public worship. Only a few, if any but Junior, will adopt it.

2. It will make the morning service too long, unless we abridge more than is desirable.

3. On communion occasions the Sunday school will have to be dispensed with.

I think, therefore, that, though Junior has "tried it and succeeded," his success in it will be temporary, and while it lasts both the congregation and Sunday school will suffer depletion.

Would it not be better to have Sunday school in the afternoon? This is at least practicable in towns and cities, where alone the difficulties complained of exist.—Then our children will have no excuse for not attending church at eleven o'clock, and parents can bring them with them to the house of worship. Their morning hours can be spent in getting their Sunday school lessons, and by eleven o'clock it will be a relief and recreation to go to preaching. In the afternoon both parents and children can assemble for Sunday school, and thus the whole day will be devoted to religion. Is not this "the more excellent way?"

W. B. L.

How We Manage Sunday Schools.

MR. EDITOR: We see an invitation from Junior for pastors, superintendents, etc., to speak out upon this question. We do not wish to controvert any point with such distinguished "lights" as W. E. M. L., W. B. L., or Junior, for they are vastly our superiors in all points; and we would remind the readers of the ADVOCATE of a "little dog in tall corn," or oats rather, were we to get entangled.

Brother W. E. M. L. suggests that the pastor become superintendent. Brother Junior shows a "more excellent way." We can show a most excellent way. The great fault in the conduct of Sabbath schools on the pastor's part is, he talks more about the interest he takes than he really shows by his actions. Experience tells us, if we have an interest in anything, to let our actions speak, while our tongues are silent on the subject of our own interest. We are not in favor of pastors becoming the sole superintendents. This is too Romish in its tendency. Besides, it deprives us of the co-operation of many wise laymen, some of whom are capable and eligible to seats in the General Conference.

We would have our laymen—the class leader, the steward, or any other man who could tell of a change of heart—to manage the school.

Just here we must be suffered to make a little digression by saying that all the teachers, none excepted, should be individuals who know they have a change of heart; for how can any others teach children of the nature of the atonement when they are ignorant of its merits? Presuming, then, that all the teachers are regenerate in heart, we advance with boldness to describe a school we have in our midst, and to speak of the means by which an interest was excited; and, having shown the means used and the success attending, will leave our friends to draw their own inferences as to the good of the plan. True, there is work about it, but no good can be obtained without work. A good, firm local brother is superintendent, assisted by brothers and sisters who have a hope. The Sabbath services are the property of the preacher exclusively; the school services of the superintendent. Perhaps the preacher is asked to take a seat in the class, and answer questions like another scholar. The class then feel an interest in him, as well as he in them. The preacher, if he can—for some are miserable hands—sings, leading the choir with a Sunday school song, in which the scholars alone are permitted to join. Then they know if they do not sing there will be none. The preacher does not advise or come in "under the superintendent's patronage," but as a scholar subject to its discipline. He is leading scholar. Does any scholar wish to have a question answered or an enigma solved, and there is any point too difficult for him? he knows where to go.

Some time in the week the preacher has the scholars to meet and study the lessons for the next Sabbath. In the meantime he prepares himself for the occasion as though he were going to dish out the "spice and pastry" from a city street church. Thus it is he gets, somehow, to loving the Sabbath school, avoids the "patronage of the superintendent," prevents the "jealousy of foreign intervention," becomes completely identified with the school, and indeed works, and propels the whole machine—superintendent, scholars, parents, preacher and all—without being seen in the lead. We do not have to see the steam while the engine is in full play.

If you want the parents brought in, just use the children, and give "the old folks" to feel like the lambs are being taken from them, and they will fly to the fold. Then if these means are used and the children do not stay to preaching at eleven o'clock, you may give up the church. Interest these children, and you have them. We have tried the more excellent way, and it has failed in two instances, while perfect success has attended this, and will attend every time this course is taken. Try it, and let your discipline be mild and firm, and the cure is effected.

PINE K. WOODS, JR.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: I read with increasing interest all that your correspondents, W. E. M. L., W. B. L., and Junior have said to us through the ADVOCATE on the subject of Sunday schools. That our Sunday school system needs readjustment in some way, to bring it nearer to the church and the regular preaching of the Gospel, is what I have long felt the need of.

W. B. L. says: "The children do not come to church. They are comparatively strangers to our modes of public worship," etc. Again, it is truthfully said: Under the present system the pastor, to a great extent, is cut off from direct and habitual intercourse with the lambs of his flock, unless he comes in as a subordinate under the superintendent. I have noticed with deep regret that very few of our Sabbath school children, especially in our town and city churches, attend the public preaching of the Gospel, either morning or evening. I have witnessed this in St. Louis, Vicksburg, Natchez and other important places which I have visited within the last few years. I have seen the same thing in New Orleans, which I have been accustomed to look upon as the emporium of Sabbath schools in the South. I have visited churches in those places at ten o'clock A. M., and found them well filled with lovely and promising boys and girls in attendance on their Sabbath school. Presently they were dismissed, and the bell called us to public worship. As "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," we re-enter the church to hear that Gospel which alone—"is the power of God unto salvation." And now, who are present? A thinly scattered audience of staid men and women, with scarcely enough children to make variety visible. And where are the children? After the fatigue of preliminary preparations and going to Sunday school, and being confined there an hour or more, they have gone out to seek needed refreshment and recreation; and while their parents are demurely listening to a pastor, dejected and cast down because the lambs of his flock are not there to receive their portion of the word of life in due season, their children are making social calls, playing on the streets, or off on a general ramble until the dinner hour. In the evening their Sabbath recreations, more than any thing else, have so fatigued them that they do not attend the night service; and the result of the working of our present system is that we are raising up a generation of the children of the church not to attend on the regular ministry of the word in connection with the public ordinances of religion.

This ought not to be so. But where is the remedy? This is the question which I hope your correspondents will thoughtfully and prayerfully discuss. Properly awake on the subject, I believe the church is fully competent not only to mitigate, but to effectually remove the evils complained of as incidental to our present Sabbath school programme.

I was much interested and encouraged in reading the article of your correspondent Junior, in your paper of the 7th instant. I think he has evolved a very important idea—that of connecting the Sabbath school exercises in some way with the regular morning service in the congregation. And why should not parents and children work and worship together, both in the Sabbath school and in the public congregation? The children ought to be trained up in familiarity with our congregational hymns and prayers, and especially with the preaching of the Gospel of Christ. And how encouraging to a pastor's heart to have his whole flock well represented under his eye and voice at the same time!

I hope brother Junior will give us all the light he has on this point. He suggests a grand idea, which should be looked into by the united wisdom of the church, and reduced to practical effect. More when necessary.

Yours respectfully,

J. G. JONES.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A letter from Rev. W. S. Turner, dated Wetumpka, Alabama, August 28, 1869, says:

"We are having some prosperity in various parts of the district. Having good crops, we hope to carry good collections to Conference. Rev. Robert T. Nabors is serving the Wetumpka station in the place of Rev. J. C. Duncan, who left the work in May."

ESCAMBIA MISSION, MONTGOMERY CONF., September 2, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps a word from this itinerant field of labor, published in the ADVOCATE, may encourage some way-worn brother, and stimulate him to go forward with greater zeal.

The Lord has been with His children, and has blessed them very signally at various points during the two months just past.

At a meeting held the third Sabbath in July about seventy-five souls were blessed. The Spirit of God came down, and we had a melting time.

I have just closed another meeting, during which the power of God was present. It resulted in thirteen accessions to the church.

About sixty souls have been added to the church on this mission the present year. To God be all the glory. Your brother,

R. F. MOUNTAIN.

GEORGETOWN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONF., September 1, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me, through the medium of your excellent paper, to say to the friends of Zion that the Lord is with us in this charge. On Saturday, the 21st ultimo, we commenced a meeting at Georgetown, which continued nine days, and resulted in the addition of twenty-one precious souls to the congregation of the Lord, and in impressions made upon others, which in many instances will, it is believed, prove effectual to their salvation; besides the reviving and encouraging of the little band which had so long stood against such fearful odds. This, though mentioned last, is not the least in importance, since upon the faith, and zeal, and courage of the church, depends her success in the future. In the meeting we had no help, except from on high, though several brethren had promised us their aid. But the Lord saveth neither by many nor few, but by His own right arm of power. To Him be all the glory by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

B. B. WHITTINGTON.

RANDOLPH CIRCUIT, MOBILE CONFERENCE, September 5, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Believing that you and the readers of the ADVOCATE desire to hear once more from Randolph, we send you another brief report of our work. Our third Quarterly Meeting was held at Cox's chapel on the 1st of last month. Brother J. L. Cotton presided. We have just closed a protracted meeting at Brierfield that will be long remembered by many. We held it under the most discouraging circumstances, but the Lord met with us, and Christians were made happy by the score. Sinners were convicted and converted. Being in feeble health, we had to close for the want of help, with over twenty mourners at the altar, weeping and praying for pardon. May the Lord yet bless them and send His reviving work round the circuit, and grant that much good may be accomplished before the year closes, in the name of the Lord our God. Pray for us.

C. L. KIRKSEY, Pastor.

CROSS PLAINS, ALA., Aug. 23, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Brother Moody has just closed a meeting of great interest here, after two weeks' continuance. Fifty conversions, fifty accessions, and the professors greatly blessed. The work was principally among the best families. About thirty young men of great promise were among the accessions, besides a number of excellent young ladies, and several persons from other churches by letter. Some of the young persons were children of Baptist and Presbyterian parents.

People come night and day, from eight and ten miles around, to hear the Word. Brother Moody has labored hard to plant Methodism here. He has succeeded. He organized this church three or four years ago with only five persons. Now there are one hundred, with a prospect of increase. He has, by the assistance of his good brethren and friends, built a substantial frame church. He worked on the house with his own hands. Cross Plains is a place of prospective importance. Brother Moody expects to hold a camp meeting at Resvesville, twelve miles from here, embracing the fourth Sunday in September. We hear of great revivals all around us. Brother Brandon, pastor at Jacksonville, is in the midst of a gracious revival. Many believers, several conversions and accessions of good citizens.

VISITOR.

ENTERPRISE CIRCUIT, MOBILE CONFERENCE, Enterprise, Miss., Sept. 2, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to the friends of Zion that the Lord is graciously reviving His work on this circuit.

At Pleasant Valley church I began a meeting on Saturday, the 31st of July. It continued nine days. Its results were: Conversions, twenty-five; accessions, nineteen; baptized, fourteen. There was no church organization at that place before. Its complete organization and establishment was the fruit of the meeting. Brother Jackson, of the Mississippi Conference, laboring on the Hickory mission, assisted me; also, among the local brethren, John Renfro, W. G. Bartlett and John Cox.

At New Hope church we began on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August, just after and immediately upon my return from our District Meeting. The Lord was with us, as witness the results: Conversions about thirty five; accessions, thirty-eight; baptized, thirty-two. The church was greatly blessed, revived and strengthened. Dr. W. Spillman and T. S. Abernethy, Jr., of the Mobile Conference, and Brothers John Cox, A. M. Fikes and Robert West, local, rendered efficient aid. To God, through Christ Jesus, be all the praise.

Yours in the Gospel,

JOHN C. C. BLACK.

ATLANTA, LA., Aug. 24, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: We are having some excellent times on the old Rapides circuit this year. We have large and attentive congregations at almost every appointment. The church is being greatly revived, and the people seem more than usually interested.

Within the last month there have been a goodly number of conversions, sixty-four accessions to the church, and a large number of penitents. Truly we may say, holy fire is kindling throughout the whole circuit, and we are praying that the Lord may carry on this work until scores may be converted. Brethren, pray for us, that we may be more faithful to God, who so abundantly blesses us.

Tell the ADVOCATE to be as punctual as possible, for we like its visits very much. Many who do not have it desire to take it when they get $3.

The Lord is blessing the people here with fine cotton crops and medium corn crops; also plenty of rain and generally good health.

T. S. COLIER.

NEWBERN, ALA., Aug. 26, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: We have had two good meetings on the Brush Creek circuit. We protracted our third Quarterly Meeting at Providence, which commenced on the 24th of July. The meeting continued nine days. Our presiding elder staid with us until Thursday. We had Brother Moore, from Greensboro, and Brother W. A. Montgomery, a part of the time. We had ten accessions and about twenty conversions. Brother W. A. Montgomery and myself commenced a meeting at Mount Zion, on Saturday before the third Sabbath in this month, which also lasted nine days. We had seven accessions and about twenty conversions. Some of the converts are in the church, some will go to the Presbyterians, and some to the Baptists. We expect a revival all over the circuit. We have been reviving class meetings. Some of our churches hold class one Sabbath, and the next prayer meeting. Our presiding elder is a class meeting man. Between his Quarterly Meetings he has his week-day appointments, and will hold class meetings. We are not prepared to do away with the office of presiding elder or modify it in the least.

Yours, J. W. MCCANN.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE TERRITORY.

MR. EDITOR: Since the 17th of July we have had four gracious meetings. First, at Warrior Stand. Seven added to the church; five of them married persons; two single. The church greatly revived. Second, at Cotton Valley. Nine added to the church; conversions very clear. The members greatly quickened. Third, the Quarterly Meeting at Union church. Brother Andrews, presiding elder, preached with great profit on Saturday and Sabbath. Meeting continued for two weeks. Twenty two received by certificate and on profession of faith. The fourth was commenced by Brother John C. Carter, at Creek Stand, on Friday, the 13th instant. I joined him on Tuesday, the 17th, and continued until next Sunday night. Ten received into the church; several heads of families.

The church, as to Sunday schools, Bible reading and all other religious duties, is in better condition than I have ever known it.

After a sermon on last Sabbath, at Creek Stand, the congregation presented, as a free-will offering to domestic and foreign missions, a subscription of $205. At Union, the week before, $179 to same cause. Thanks be unto God for these gracious showers.

Your brother in Christ,

B. B. ROSS.

P. S.—In the above collections neither the forceps nor pullakins, nor any other extractive instrument was used. The people gave willingly.

LETTER FROM ALABAMA.

OPELIKA, LEE COUNTY, ALABAMA, August 31, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The future prospects of this flourishing little town are rapidly brightening. It is already a railroad town, and soon we expect to have two new roads, one known as the Eufaula, Opelika, Oxford and Gunttersville road—the name suggests the route; the other as the Savannah and Memphis road, beginning at Opelika and running north via Dadeville, crossing the Selma and Talladega road at Elyton, and thence to Decatur, Alabama. That these roads will be built is almost certain. Governor Smith is now North in the interest of the former. In a letter to a friend in this place the Governor says the road is in great favor with Northern capitalists, and will be built. Colonel Sam Jones, president of the latter, is ready to commence work, and will this week let out contracts for the first twenty five miles. The counties of Lee, Chambers and Tallapoosa have voted a large subscription, and doubtless other counties along the lines will follow suit as the roads approach. When twenty miles are completed, with rolling stock, then the State indorses company's bonds to the amount of $16,000 per mile for every additional mile.

With these brightening prospects the internal improvements of Opelika have gone on rapidly. Seventeen elegant storehouses—twelve of them two stories—a court house, warehouse and livery stable have been built in less than twelve months. All these are substantial brick buildings. The number of dwellings has been much greater, though on a cheaper style, with the view of improving them in the future. Real estate, rents, etc., are as high if not higher than in Montgomery or Columbus. Had this not been the case, many lots now vacant would have been improved.

The health, morals, etc., are as good as in any town or city in eastern Alabama. Educational facilities are good. The Opelika High School will compare with any school of its grade in the land. Rev. E. D. Pitts, principal, is a graduate of Oxford, Georgia, and has been regularly engaged in teaching for twenty-five years. He has associated with him an excellent corps of teachers, which the late commencement exercises fully demonstrated.

The church is divided into four denominations. The number of communicants is about as follows:—Methodists, two hundred and sixty; Baptists, seventy-five; Presbyterians, twenty; Episcopalians, twenty-five. These are all white members. The freedmen have two churches of their own.

A series of meetings began in the Methodist church August 13, and closed on Sunday night, August 29. The attendance was large, numbering from three to five hundred. Every hour's service was spiritual and interesting, from the commencement to the close. At times there were gracious outpourings of the Holy Spirit, such as we seldom see in these days. About twenty conversions, the most of them clear and bright; and, upon the whole, the meeting was one of power, and will tell upon the future of Methodism in this town. The pastor was assisted by Revs. E. D. Pitts and C. S. Hurt.

The last night of the meeting was appointed for the reception of members into the church. The pastor read a suitable portion of Scripture. The choir then sung the eight hundred and eighty first hymn, after which the names of the candidates were called, and they came forward and took their stand around the altar—twenty-two in number, ranging in age from childhood to manhood, and even to old age. All but five of this number were children connected with the Sabbath school, who have been well drilled and are now prepared to make useful members in the church. The ordinance of baptism was administered to some of the candidates, and they were all received into the church according to form; after which the pastor delivered to them an address forewarning them of dangers, and exhorting them to firmness, obedience, love to the church, and, above all, the attainment of all the Christian graces. At the close of the address the congregation was requested to spend two minutes in silent prayer in behalf of the young members. Although the church was crowded to overflowing, profound silence and deep seriousness reigned throughout the whole congregation during the entire service. It was a solemn night, never to be forgotten. Thus closed the exercises of an interesting and profitable protracted meeting, and we predict a bright era for the Methodist church in Opelika.

Yours, etc., H.

History of Celebrated Women in China.

JULY 18, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I propose to send you, from time to time, translations from the Chinese, the "History of Celebrated Women in China," which I trust may prove interesting, and, it may be, instructive to some. The book is in several volumes, and has not as yet been translated, so that before we finish it we shall have some knowledge of the women of China who lived in the early ages. I will try and send you notes on it monthly. Please excuse brevity. We are all well. I remain yours, etc., in the love of Christ.

J. W. LAMBUTH.

HISTORY OF CELEBRATED WOMEN IN CHINA.

TRANSLATED BY REV. J. W. LAMBUTH.

According to Chinese history Yaw was Emperor in China immediately before and after the flood, two thousand three hundred and fifty-six years before the Christian era. He had two daughters. The eldest was called Ngewong, the younger was called Nguyung. He commenced his reign two thousand three hundred and fifty six years before the Christian era, and in two thousand two hundred and ninety-six a great inundation is said to have occurred. This was sixty years after he had commenced his reign. All history before him is looked upon as fabulous. He is said to have reigned one hundred and two years, when his son-in-law, Sung, ascended the throne, which was two thousand two hundred and fifty-four years before the Christian era. Sung's father and mother are said to have been very stupid. His father was named Kusir, and his brother was named Chang, who thought of nothing but play and all kinds of vice. Sung was of a loving disposition, and was obedient to his father. His mother manifested an evil disposition toward him, but loved Chang, his younger brother. Sung had charge of all household affairs, and was entirely devoid of evil habits. On this account one of the officials of the district in which he lived introduced him to the Emperor Yaw, who, when he had learned his character, gave to him his two daughters in marriage, to govern the affairs of his house, and to wait upon him as he labored in the field. They, being daughters of the Emperor Yaw, did not make them proud or haughty to others, but they were meek and humble, as becometh industrious and devoted women.

On one occasion Kusir Sung's father, and Chang his brother, agreed to take his life, and consequently ordered him to go and repair the roof of the house. Sung returned home and told his two wives what his father had ordered him to do, and they answered him, "Go." When he returned to his father's, and had ascended the house, the ladder was immediately removed. His father then hastily set fire to the building, but Sung seeing this, leaped from his position on the house as if flying. At another time Chang, with his father and mother, agreed to send Sung into the well for the purpose, as they alleged, of cleansing it. He immediately communicated this to his two wives, and they said, "Go." Without delay he went and entered the well, when the entrance was closed, and his father and mother endeavored to destroy his life by casting great weights upon him, but he secretly made his escape. His father then wanted him to drink wine, and when thoroughly intoxicated, he determined to kill him. He communicated this to his two wives, and they gave him some medicinal preparation which they had made, saying: "Take this and wash the body thoroughly with it, and then go drink from morning until night, and you will not be in the least intoxicated." This he did and was preserved.

The younger sister of Sung loved him, and with her two sisters-in-law plead with her father and mother not to destroy the life of her brother Sung. He did not become angry at the constant attempts of his father and mother to take his life, but went into the field and wept bitterly, crying day by day unto heaven (Supreme Ruler,) saying: "Though my father and mother despise me, and seek my life, yet I will love them." He did not become angry with his younger brother, neither would be in the least allow himself to think less of him for what he had done.

In the course of time Sung was appointed to office, and when he had risen high in the estimation of all who knew him, he would open the four sides of his office and hear all the grievances of those who were under his jurisdiction; and thus he chose the good from the bad, as good timber is selected from bad.

The Emperor Yaw observed him on various occasions to learn his true character, but Sung would invariably consult with his two wives.

Finally he ascended the throne, two thousand two hundred and fifty-four years before the Christian era. At that time astronomical instruments were said to have been formed, and the planets observed. When Sung became Emperor, Ngewong was appointed to be Queen, and Nguyung to be second, or concubine. He appointed his brother Chang to govern in the country of Yerpe. Sung, though Emperor, was still obedient to his father, as formerly. His two wives were pronounced the wisest and the most excellent and loving of all women under heaven.

The Emperor Sung, in going through the country on a tour of inspection, died at a place called Tsangoo, and his sacred title became "Ising Wo," meaning "again good." Emperor Yaw was the first, and Emperor Sung the second, and the reign of each was most peaceful.

The two wives of Emperor Sung, hearing of his death, drowned themselves in a river, in the country of Siang, and they were afterward designated the "presiding spirits of Siang country."

The literati of that country said: "These two consorts of the Emperor Sung were truly virtuous, and their character irreproachable." The book of odes says of them: "Their virtue and good deeds were unsurpassed, and all people should follow their noble example."

THE following proclamation has been issued by the government at Pekin:

"Be it known to all that foreigners who propagate religion are not doing so unauthorizedly; but are allowed to do it at every place, according to treaty, and may follow their avocation as allowed therein. Recently anonymous placards have been posted up about the streets of the city of Soochow, setting forth that all who enter their religion will be injured. Now intelligent men know that these statements are false; ignorant people may be induced to believe such things, and the people's minds will be stirred up and trouble come. To write anonymous placards is at any time illegal, and circulating such ought not to be. Therefore we, the three Hiens, again prohibit the same. The literati and people ought to know that where there are foreigners there are also chapels or churches; and, if natives become church members, they do so voluntarily, and are not forced. From this day let every one mind his own business, and not talk about things which are vain and to no purpose, but only cause disturbances. If any one dare to disobey this proclamation, such person will be ferreted out and severely punished."

THERE are in China about four thousand Protestant native Christians.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT MEETING.

BUTLER, August 20, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The Meridian District Meeting assembled at the Baptist church, which had been generously tendered by the pastor and members, at Pushmataha, on Thursday, the 12th instant, at ten o'clock A. M. The opening sermon was preached by Dr. William Spillman, of Enterprise station, from Acts 16: 5

His sermon was carefully prepared and impressively delivered, and at once gave the doctor a commanding position in the meeting.

He showed in his preliminary remarks that the churches of Christ, in the days of the apostles, were not congregational; that Christ nor His apostles did not designate any particular form of church government. Hence we may conclude that it is not the government, but the purity of the doctrines that constitutes the true church of Christ. He then proceeded to show, first, What are the scriptural marks of the true church of Christ?

1. The first mark of a true church is its foundation. The true church of the past, present and all time to come, one—a unit—and claims but one foundation, one head, Jesus Christ, who is the Good Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

2. The second mark of a true church is a regularly ordained ministry.

3. The third scriptural mark of a true church is its charity toward others, or catholicity of sentiment.

4. The fourth mark is the tendency of the doctrines taught to lead its members to holiness of heart and life.

5. The fifth scriptural mark is that her ministers and members are not only led by the Spirit of God, but that the Spirit itself beareth witness with their spirits that they are the children of God.

6. The sixth scriptural mark of a true church is that souls are converted—not simply a change of mind, or from one church organization to another, but a change of heart—born again and made new creatures in Christ Jesus.

7. The seventh is that the poor have the Gospel preached to them.

Second. That it remained to inquire whether or not the Methodist Church has been and is now characterized by these scriptural works of a true church of Christ.

This position the doctor argued in a style both logical and conclusive, showing that he was not only master of his subject, but to the great edification and satisfaction of his audience.

During the opening services Brother Joshua T. Heard, presiding elder, arrived. When they were concluded he gave notice that the District Conference would meet for the purpose of organization at three o'clock P. M. At the hour appointed the Conference met, and was opened with religious services by Brother Heard, when W. Bailey was elected secretary.

The usual committees were appointed, or rather elected.

Dr. Spillman was elected chairman of the Committee on the Relation of Baptized Children to the Church, upon which subject he afterward submitted an able and elaborate report, which he was requested by a resolution to prepare and send you for publication.

Dr. Charles R. Rencher, of Enterprise, was appointed chairman of the Committee on Sabbath Schools, upon which subject he made a very able and interesting report, which will appear next week in the Choctaw Herald.

On Friday morning the pastors proceeded to make their pastoral reports, which show that the work is progressing satisfactorily; that if the church is not in a revival state, she is at peace in all her borders; that her membership, both in the abstract and the concrete, through the blessing of God, are standing firm; that she will very soon have adjusted herself to the changed condition of circumstances, and will start out afresh upon a new career of advancement and success.

Other reports from the special committees were made, some of them quite interesting; especially by Brother Morris, the junior preacher on the Gaston circuit, upon the state of the church.—Brother Morris, though young, seems to combine the three great elements of the future preacher—intellect, piety and zeal.

The election of the lay delegates to the Mobile Conference was made the special order for ten o'clock on Saturday morning. Upon the arrival of that hour the meeting proceeded to ballot for four lay delegates to represent the district in the Mobile Conference, which resulted in the election of Rev. James Shouks, local preacher, Dr. Charles R. Rencher, Dr. James A. Gilden and W. Bailey; and Simon Hall and Richmond Allen alternates.

The attendance of members, both clerical and lay, was rather better than heretofore, which shows that these meetings are not only acceptable, but that they are growing in importance with the people. It would be superfluous to say here that the brethren and friends at Pushmataha had made ample preparation for the entertainment and comfort of all.

Brother Heard presided over the meeting with marked ability, courtesy and affability, and the deliberations were characterized by harmony, Christian love and charity. The congregations during each day were large and attentive.

The Conference adjourned sine die at six o'clock on Saturday evening, 14th instant, but the services were protracted until Wednesday of this week, Brother Heard and several of the preachers remaining to assist Brother Thomas with the meeting.

On Sunday morning quite a number met in the love-feast. At eleven o'clock Brother Heard preached to a densely crowded house, and quite a number outside who could not obtain seats. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a large number of communicants, and the Spirit of God graciously poured out upon the people.

The meeting grew in interest, and the congregation kept up to the last. The church was greatly revived, and several additions thereto.

We have great reason to thank God for these manifestations of His goodness, that He is blessing these services to the church everywhere, and for the cheering prospects that lie out in the future.

Very respectfully,

W. BAILEY.

REPORT ON REVIVALS.

READ AT THE DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT MEETING, MOBILE CONFERENCE.

A revival, or to revive, in the ordinary acceptation of the term; means to resuscitate or reinvigorate that which once had life and vigor, but has declined or lapsed into a languishing or dying condition.

But in theology and religion the word revival has a more comprehensive signification, and is used to express an aggressive movement in the church. This definition is in perfect accord with the history of the church, and the experience of her members and ministry. For, while the revival is the occasion of joy and rejoicing to the faithful believer, it is also the means of reclaiming the backslider, and restoring him to his first love, and the awakening and conversion of sinners. The great Head of the Church has taught us, both by example and precept, that the church is to be aggressive in her movements; that she is not to stand idle in the market places, and wait for the groans of the dying and the damned to rouse her to activity in the great work of saving souls; but that she is to push the victories of the Redeemer's cross into the regions beyond, until they that are in the region and shadow of death shall see light and receive life. Her ministers are required to stand upon the "walls of Zion" and sound the alarm, whether the people hear or forbear. Their commission reads: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Each individual member, being the salt of the earth, is to push the sacred and saving influences of religion beyond the limit of his own Christian experience, until the whole lump is leavened. The powers of darkness are to be overturned, and where sin, in all its hideous deformities, abounds, grace is much more to abound. And the experience and practice of the best and wisest men, under the sanction of the word of God and the seal of His Holy Spirit, has demonstrated that special efforts, protracted meetings, called revivals, are the best means of accomplishing these great objects of the church. The great Teacher, prior to His ascension, commanded His disciples to stay at Jerusalem until they were indued with power from on high, thereby teaching them and us that something more than the theory and history of religion, or an ecclesiastical organization, was necessary to its full development and final success.

And we think that a genuine revival of religion is to this day a miniature Pentecost, and exerts a proportionate influence upon all who share its gracious benefits; and that the church will live and prosper in proportion to the frequency and extent of these revivals. To discount or abandon this long established usage of the church, as the manner of some is, is to give up a well-tried and successful rule and practice for a doubtful experiment. Every era and page of Methodism is signally marked and rendered sacred with gracious revivals of religion. It has ever been her custom to erect altars, and by warm and earnest appeals invite sinners to come to those altars, not as to a confessional, but to secure the prayers and sympathies of Christians. And around these altars, whether rude or polished, at the camp meeting in the mountains, or in the thronged city, thousands upon thousands have found peace in believing. Around her altars, amid the shouts of the redeemed and the songs of the sanctified, her best and ablest ministers have been converted and consecrated to God. It was amid these scenes that that great and noble man, the late lamented Bishop Soule, lived, a moving tower of strength. It was here that the young heart of Bishop Bascomb received its first impulses, and his eagle eye caught those glimpses that fired his soul and tongue with such moving eloquence.

These revivals have also given to the church her strongest pillars. The richest and best Christian experiences almost invariably begin with the altar and revival, and thousands of living and millions of departed can devoutly thank God to day for the revival.

Your committee respectfully suggest that the preachers in charge of the circuits and stations in the bounds of the district urge upon their congregations the importance and necessity of praying and laboring earnestly for revivals of religion in their several charges.

It is not change of polity, or something new, that is needed. The social, financial and ecclesiastical interests of the church stand upon a basis as firm and worthy of consideration as any other branch of the church. She spreads out her great wings over all the country. In her organic structure she is commanding and embracing every town and hamlet in all the country.

But she needs life, spiritual life, such life as can be secured by well-conducted protracted meetings. Let her members and ministers return to primitive simplicity, and engage in these meetings with altar exercises, exhortations, songs, prayers. Let Zion travail, and sons and daughters will be born unto God.

Let her wheels be started in this direction by the power of the Holy Ghost, directed by her ministry in the fear of God and a love for souls, and not in a man-fearing spirit, or a desire for worldly applause, "or an attractive personnel," and we will find that there is still power and efficiency in her great machinery.

Respectfully submitted,

T. F. MANGUM,
Chairman of Committee.

IF GOD had not said, "Blessed are those that hunger," I know not what could keep weak Christians from sinking in despair. Many times, all I can do is to complain that I want Him, and wish to recover Him.—Bishop Hall.

REVIVALS.

Letters from various circuits and stations are bringing to us most cheering accounts of a revival influence that seems to have set in immediately upon "the week of prayer." We give in this week's ADVOCATE, from Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, the reports of many conversions. May the gracious tide rise till every part of our Zion is refreshed from the Lord! How many are longing and praying, and have been these years past, for a revival, God is witness. This is the set time to find favor of heaven. Let every heart catch the flame! Let every congregation cry mightily to the Father that He will send forth the Spirit of his Son into every soul, that God may be glorified in the salvation of men. Cry; do not be too genteel to be in earnest. Pour out the wants of many souls in prolonged prayer. The mighty promises "are yea and amen in Christ Jesus." The church has as yet realized but few of them. But as surely as the Saviour came into the world there awaits the church a far greater display of the love of God and the glory of the Spirit than have ever yet been poured upon her. The sea itself shall not surpass the compass and depth and fullness of the knowledge of the Father that shall be manifested by the Son in the hearts of men.—"There shall not be room to contain it." Oh, let us "ask largely!"

What a sickly faith we have, if measured by the plain force and fullness of the word. Self-conceit, covetousness or other lusts of the world have robbed us of all simplicity, so that "the truth, as it is in Jesus," finds no prompt response in our hearts, and we cannot believe even the oath of God; we cannot think that all the world shall be covered with the glory of God. Oh, Lord, let us believe or die! Take away from us so treacherous, so wavering a mind, and help us, that we may break away from the father of lies and venture life itself upon thy promises! "Our fathers trusted in thee and were not confounded;" and so we, gathering up the whole force of our being, will hang upon thy one strong word for salvation as the thief upon the cross.

A RECENT visitor to the Holy Land reports that he found in Jerusalem, on Mount Zion, a Sunday school of sixty-four children. The children sang some of the beautiful tunes which originated among our American Sunday school singers.

ROME OR NOTHING.

It is the boast of the Roman Catholic Church that she does not change. So far as her priesthood, her doctrines and her spirit are concerned, this may be true, and indeed is true in every respect, excepting in so far as she may be forced to modify her policy for a time; but whenever the pressure is removed she resumes her original expression—the leopard's spots may change, but not its nature. A superstition whose soul consists of a body of men who have segregated themselves from the rest of mankind and are banded together by mutual vows that place property, influence and power at the abject service of their corporate body; who know no country, no kin, no individual will, no law, but only the Roman see; who claim to be the only representatives between God and man, and to wield at will the whole machinery of life and death; who profess to follow the spirit into its dread abode, and to be able to fasten upon it forever chains of woe, or open to it the gates of bliss; who in the person of one head, the Pope of Rome, assume to wear a triple crown of heaven, earth and hell—such a power will only change essentially when earth and hell are cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. When the Son of God defeats sin in its highest seat, then this spiritual monster will expire, but not before. The force against Christ, when He was upon earth, was that of an anointed hierarchy. It was in that priestly form that Satan then encountered the Son of God, and we must still look for the strength of satanic enmity in holy places, and under the sacred forms of the Christian religion, if we would detect it. The nearer in form error and falsehood are to truth the more powerful they are. It is not in the idolatry of a pagan world, but in the mariolatry of Rome that the great power of Satan lies; not in the doctrines of Buddha, but in a priesthood that discourages both the reading and dissemination of the Bible.

That such an embodiment of pride, darkness and cruelty should seek the ruin of everything that it cannot assimilate or control is only in accordance with the nature of the evil one as he is revealed to us in the Scriptures. Uniformity or death is the one single principle that Rome illustrates in every land, under every sky, and in every government. Every people have had, by slow steps, to arrive at a just estimate of the insidious strength by which she coils and crushes.—The nations of Europe have, one after another, found themselves in the folds of this politico-ecclesiastical python, and have released themselves from it only by a death struggle. Italy, that lay helpless so long in the hands of cardinals, bishops and priests, when all its prisons were crowded with political offenders, has now recovered its liberties, driven the monks by thousands from their cloisters, and narrowed the territory of the See to a few square miles. Austria within three years has wrested all public education from the Romish clergy, declared the church no longer necessary to the validity of marriages, and made every form of religion equal before the law. In priest-ridden Mexico the church party went down with Maximilian. In Spain, that great "patent leather" establishment, the Inquisition, whose ghastly records of human hair and rusty manacles have been recently uncovered, already gives place to the Bible society, the Sabbath school and a preached Gospel. All these purely Catholic countries had been long oppressed by this relentless church until they suddenly rose and threw off its iron yoke. And this has been the history of every country, and we might say of every generation of Christendom, during the last four centuries.

In our own country the same terrible experience will be repeated. Large numbers of this all-grasping priesthood, forced from Europe, have found their way into our Republic. They have already organized the whole Catholic Church into a compact political party, under the absolute control of a few archbishops and bishops. Regardless of those ordinary questions that shape the political combinations of Americans, this party only seeks the material prosperity of the Roman Church. It has succeeded in putting thousands of dollars of public money, directly and indirectly, into the hands of the priests. It declares against any public interest, no matter how beneficial, that may seem to conflict with the schemes of Roman aggrandizement. Every Catholic politician who does not come into the policy of the clergy is denounced by name from their pulpits. All individual independence is crushed out of councilmen or legislators, or school directors, or any other public men who are members of that church; and if they will not advance the interests of Rome, as indicated by those in authority, they are put out and facile tools are put in. We know exactly what we are saying, and the priests know it, and their political catspaws know it. Every public trust must give way before this all-engrossing, crushing, insatiable ecclesiastical organization. With every Catholic public functionary it has about come to this: Rome or nothing. We shall illustrate more minutely hereafter. It is enough, just now, to make the broad statement that, while every other country in the civilized world is throwing off the toils of this monster, we are becoming more and more entangled in them.

The Spanish "Patent Leather Manufactory."

The Star, with the aid of the Pall Mall Gazette, both Catholic organs, produces a very ingenious explanation of the bones, grease, manacles and human hair which were dug out of the Golgotha of the Inquisition in Madrid—that they were only the remains of donkeys and mules which had been employed "in a patent leather establishment." So that all that eloquence of Castellano in the Spanish Cortes, and the boundless excitement of the Spanish people, was over a few dead donkeys! And so, too, the Star goes on further to suggest that possibly the whole history of the Inquisition is merely a thing of "popular imagination"—a kind of Spanish patent leather establishment. This art of discovering that human hair, bones, etc., are merely the remains of the donkeys and mules, will find room for its ingenuity in shedding light upon the Cracow convent horrors. No doubt that, too, can presently be shown to be only the lime vault of an old skinning and tanning factory. We subjoin the latest news from Austria in regard to it.

"THE CRACOW SCANDAL.—The Austrian papers say that the government will by no means pass lightly over the Cracow scandal; indeed the excited state of public feeling on the subject would not permit this. The lady superior of the convent will be prosecuted, and the nuns will be compelled to give testimony at the trial. The governor of Cracow has been required to report if there are any reasons why the annual subvention of one thousand eight hundred florins hitherto paid to the Carmelite community in that city should be continued, and whether, indeed, the nunnery itself should be allowed to remain. But the discovery has already led to measures of wider significance. The ministers of public worship and justice have issued a decree limiting the power of the Bishops to imprison priests and members of religious orders to cases where the persons so condemned voluntarily submit to the episcopal jurisdiction and sentence. It is not improbable that an official inspection of all convents will be ordered. The feeling of the Papal Court toward Austria is indicated by the announcement that the Bishop of Linz, who was recently imprisoned for disobedience to the laws, is to be made a cardinal, 'in consideration of the afflictions and sufferings which the perverse and anti-religious spirit of our epoch is preparing for the church and its servants.'"

SOLITARY NIGHTS IN PRAYER.—The supplications of the Redeemer, which ascended on those solitary nights, when of His people there were none with Him, survive in no human record; yet, doubtless, to the end of time our world will be indebted to the lonely hours when the Man of Sorrows watched and prayed upon the Mount of Olives.—Rev J. Hamilton.

SO WE GO.

Read the following, and remember the country is under the control and influence of the party of "moral ideas," led on by Bishops and clergy! "The New York Times says there is a regular school of writers and religionists who boldly announce their opposition to the marriage relation. The novel of Nicholas, advocating free love, has culminated in an established literature, devoted to that end." A large weekly journal is published in Chicago, (a second Boston,) devoted to the abolition of marriage. The contributors to this journal are said to be generally women, some of whom boldly annex their names to their communications. A series of novels has been written by such women as Mrs. J. S. Adams and Mrs. Caroline Fairchild Corbin, covering under the thin disguise of a story the advocacy of free love—i. e, prostitution. One of the writers alluded to above, says in a recent issue: "There is scarcely anything left now but the name of marriage. The old idea of marriage is dead, past hope of resurrection." Yet there are people, even in the South, who dream that the Republic can be restored and perpetuated. On the virtue and intelligence of the people, I suppose.

A CRITIC AMONG THE LEXICONS.

In the July number of the Southern Review there is a wonderful article on "American Dictionaries." It must have cost the writer immense labor. He sadly disturbs the happy ignorance of our language and our lexicons, in which we were living. The defects and mistakes of the dictionaries are so thoroughly and strikingly pointed out that the publishers of both Webster and Worcester owe it to themselves and the public to destroy their old plates and have the works stereotyped anew; for the confidence of all who read the above article will be greatly shaken, and their estimate of the value of our dictionaries will be very much lowered. I advise all who can get the Southern Review to read the article carefully.

Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Mississippi.

This college became the property of the Mississippi Conference in the year 1866. In securing it, a debt of $2,000 was incurred to release it from a law suit then pending. About $4,000 has since been subscribed, much of which has been paid, and a new roof and other repairs have been made on the buildings. This $6,000 has been secured in Brookhaven and vicinity.

The college is in a flourishing condition—filled with pupils the last session. A large study hall is needed, is indispensable to the full vigor and usefulness of the school.

We want from $5,000 to $7,000 more, to build, beautify and furnish additional apparatus. I desire to find one hundred persons who will give each $50; one hundred who will give $10, and one hundred who will give $5 each, to put the college in a more sound, healthy working condition. A number of persons have responded to the first proposition. The college belongs to the whole Conference, and is a power for good.

My agency shall cost nothing except the small amount of expenses attending it.

Please send me your name, stating amount you are willing to give.

Many of our friends in city and country may not be aware that we have a Methodist book store at 112 Camp street, New Orleans, not surpassed by any establishment in the Southwest. Send your orders for writing paper, standard authors, etc, to R. J. Harp, agent, 112 Camp street.

CHURCHES DESTROYED.

PORT GIBSON, MISS, Aug. 30, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I sent you a communication, some months ago, in relation to our ten churches in the Vicksburg district, which were destroyed by the Federal army during the war, but by some unknown mishap in the post office department that communication did not reach you. I will now endeavor to reproduce it from memory, and such imperfect memoranda as I still have on hand. Why such a wanton destruction of church property, especially that belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, should be perpetrated by an army professing a high grade of civilization and Christianity, can only be accounted for, notwithstanding all their high sounding professions, on the ground that their hearts were desperately wicked, and their carnal minds enmity against God. Ours is a non-political church, and while we never interfere with the civil rights and duties of our membership, as a church, acting through our various official bodies, we had nothing to do in getting up and prosecuting the war. We were content to pursue our holy mission of "peace on earth and good will toward men," without mingling in the strife of carnal weapons. It is true that a large number of our members, in their capacity as citizens of the country, took an active part in the war; some voluntarily, and others from necessity; and they were followed by the prayers and best wishes of their brethren at home. But this was not by any official act or order of the church. What makes the demolition of these churches the more inexcusably wicked is the fact that they were almost the only churches where our large colored population could congregate for religious instruction and worship. Unable to build suitable houses of worship for themselves, we have always hitherto, in building our country churches, secured to them their occupancy a part of the time. Now they have, in the "burnt district," no places for public worship, except their private dwellings and the forest shades. They are unable to build churches themselves, and their old masters having been bankrupted by the war, are unable to provide for them as formerly.

Some doubt exists as to the proximate agencies employed in the burning of Cane Ridge church, in Jefferson county, and Bogue de Sha, in Warren. Cane Ridge had become a somewhat noted place for the transient camping of Confederate cavalry, and one night, during the passage of a thunder cloud, it was burned to ashes. Some thought it was struck by lightning, others that this was altogether improbable, as the lightning would not be apt to pass over the numerous high forest trees, with which it was surrounded, and descend on a one-story wooden building. The known eccentricities of electricity, however, leave room for some doubt. It is the opinion of many that it was fired, either by a domestic enemy or a secret emissary from the Federal gunboats on the Mississippi river, twelve miles to the west.

As to the burning of the church on Bogue de Sha, a family had been driven from Warrenton by the proximity of the Federal army, and finding no other unoccupied house convenient, obtained permission to move into the church. Soon after this refugee family left the church was burned; whether by fire left by them, or by the hand of an incendiary, yet remains a matter of doubt. The other eight churches were either deliberately fired and reduced to ashes, or razed to the foundation, and the materials taken away and used in the construction of various camp fixtures. The brick was generally used for making bake-ovens for the vast army that environed Vicksburg, and the wooden materials for soldiers' huts, stalls for cavalry, etc.

The estimated value of the property destroyed, which I herein give, I have obtained from the official members and other reliable persons in the vicinity of the demolished churches.

	VALUE.
Wesley chapel, Yazoo county	$2,000 00
Milldale, Warren county	2,000 00
Featherston's chapel, Warren co.	1,500 00
Oakland, Warren county	1,500 00
Mont Alban, Warren county	2,000 00
Porter's chapel, Warren county	800 00
Warrenton, Warren county	2,000 00
Bogue de Sha, Warren county	800 00
Grand Gulf, Claiborne county	3,000 00
Cane Ridge, Jefferson county	2,300 00
Oak Ridge, Warren co., damaged	500 00
Bethel, Warren county, damaged	500 00
Total	18,900 00

While writing about the wanton destruction of public property, devoted to charitable purposes and the moral and intellectual improvement of our race, by the Federal army in this district, I may briefly allude to the heathen like manner in which they treated the Masonic fraternity. Whatever the Masons may, or may not be, in the estimation of outsiders, they have been acknowledged in all ages and places, among civilized and Christian people, as the conservators of virtue and innocence; as charitable to the poor, and as law-abiding citizens, quietly submitting to the "powers that be," and the destruction or violently taking away their fraternal property is closely allied, in turpitude, to the demolition of churches, seminaries of learning and charitable asylums, etc.

The Federal army, or its attaches, while here, seemed to have an over-weaning proclivity for feloniously visiting the Masonic lodges, and abstracting whatever they could carry away that was valuable. By way of illustration I will give a few items:

	VALUE.
Oak Ridge, demolished, and jewels and furniture stolen	$1,800 00
Lodge at Bovina, fine two-story brick building, razed to the foundation, cost of building	4,500 00
Lodge at Warrenton	2,000 00

The lodges at Port Gibson, Rocky Spring, Cayuga and other places were robbed of their jewels, regalia and other movable property. In several instances pieces of this jewelry, regalia, etc., have come within the observation of Masons, principally in the Northwest, by whom they have been returned to their owners. In one instance a Knight Templar obtained information, Masonically, of the whereabouts of an extra valuable private jewel, which, after long delay and having to pay $10 to the holder of the stolen jewel, was returned to him. Mr. Editor, do you think people can become Christians and get to heaven with stolen property in their possession, knowing it to be such, whatever may have been the pretext for stealing it? You answer: "Not without true repentance, verified by confession of guilt and immediate and full restitution as far as possible." And so say I. But this communication is too long to admit anything further.

THE SOUTHERN MONTHLY MAGAZINE, SEPTEMBER, 1869.—We have received No. 2 of this periodical. In typography it promises well, and invites perusal. We have not a doubt that it deserves success. The literary quality of this number is satisfactory, so far as we have been able to sample some of the many articles which it contains. Published in New Orleans.

Contents: The Physical Features of the Mississippi Valley; Once in a Thousand Years (poem;) Nantenondor Carrior; A Triple Execution; Oitahu (poem;) Who Killed Him? Will Mr. Johnson go back to the Senate? Anxions (poem;) A Child's Victory; September (poem;) The Chinese Labor Question; The Royalist; Book Table; The Spice Box.

THERE seems now and then to be a movement back to Protestantism in the land of John Huss. A deputation from near Randnitz was sent to Prague, asking for a Protestant minister to visit them. Almost the whole population joined in the request, and a number notually left the Romish Church. Pastor Schubert went and found that the owner of the hall had been induced to break his contract to rent it; and as he was not allowed by the authorities to preach in the open air, he preached from a room in a private house to a crowd of one thousand who had collected in the street. The priests appeared at the second service in the crowd, and tried, but with little success, to drive them away. The number who have left the Church of Rome is increasing, and the people have resolved to prepare a chapel as soon as possible.

OBITUARIES.

Sarah S., daughter of John J. and Catharine Joyner, was born January 23, 1851; married to M. V. Sigrest October 21, 1866, and died July 14, 1869.

She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1866, and in June, 1868, at a Quarterly Meeting held by Brother Price, made a bright confession of religion.

She died in the full triumph of faith, saying with her last words: "I am going to Jesus."

"Soft was the moment, and serene,
That all her sufferings clos'd;
No agony or struggle seen,
No feature discompos'd."

L. P. Meador.

Hillsboro, August 27, 1869.

Laura D. Huston, daughter of Lewis and Mary Tyus, was born in Autauga county, Alabama, November, 1825, and died at her residence, near the place of her birth, July 27, 1869.

She married Dr. Huston in 1844, who preceded her some years to the grave. In 1856 she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which she remained a consistent member until her death.

Her sickness was protracted, and for about six months previous to her death she patiently endured the most excruciating and unrelenting suffering. She was no doubt made perfect through suffering. I visited frequently in her sickness, and she expressed a desire to die, that she might be at ease and rest in the bosom of her God. She only regretted leaving her family. May God take care of the orphans.

She removed to various places with a view to her recovery, but to no purpose; and when she saw her end near, at her request she was carried home to die. Her death was peaceful. The family she leaves behind — her children, parents, brothers and sisters—are bound to the better land by another strong tie. May they move with an upward step till they their Canaan gain.

"Calm on the bosom of thy God,
Fair spirit, rest thee now."

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Vaiden, September 1, 1869.

The following tribute to the memory of the late William J. Gee, of Carroll county, Mississippi, was unanimously adopted by the third Quarterly Conference of the Winona circuit, held at Friendship church, August 21, 1869:

Whereas, The great Head of the Church has seen fit, in His wisdom, to call from our midst, since our last Quarterly Meeting Conference, our beloved and highly esteemed friend and brother, William J. Gee, long an active and zealous steward, a punctual and efficient member of this Quarterly Conference, and a friend and brother strongly endeared to us by his many virtues and ennobling qualities; therefore,

Resolved, That we adopt and spread upon the minutes of this Conference the following resolutions as an expression of esteem for his valuable and constant services as steward in the church, and our love and high regard for him as a member of this body and a citizen of our community.

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Gee the church has lost a zealous and active member, the official house of this circuit one of its most untiring and valuable laborers, and the community one of its best citizens.

Resolved, That his many noble virtues, especially his love and zeal for the cause of God, his punctual attendance on worship, and his earnest support of the ministry and the various benevolent enterprises of the church, demand our grateful appreciation and remembrance.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish affectionately the memory of our departed Brother Gee, and that our loss of his presence and valuable services in our deliberations and toils should remind us to submit with becoming humility to the Divine will, and ask for efficient laborers to fill the vacancy occasioned by his removal.

Resolved, That a copy of the preamble and resolutions be furnished by the secretary to the family of Brother Gee; also that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, with a request that the same be published.

Rev. K. A. Jones, P. E., President.
Wm. A. D. Bryan, Secretary.

In November, 1868, the place of worship in Madrid where Carrasco preaches contained but thirteen attendants. In January it counted two hundred persons. Now they have a sanctuary which contains from eight hundred to one thousand auditors. To-day ten thousand copies of the Bible, thirty-seven thousand New Testaments, and two hundred thousand Gospels have been distributed in Spain.

PAIN PAINT still stands between
The living and the dead,
A Rock on which to lean
When hope and strength are fled.

A Lighthouse on the shore
Saves human ships from wreck,
Lost health and strength restore
To every man on deck.

'Tis Water to the faint
To cool the parching tongue,
The blessings of Pain Paint
A million men have sung.

Pain Paint is like the Sun—
Gives life and vigor now,
To every nation run,
Refreshing as the dew.

'Tis Freedom to the slave—
Pain Paint those fetters broke;
No drugs or dosing knave
Rebinds the heathen yoke.

'Tis Summer to the dreary,
'Tis Victory to the lost,
'Tis Fruit and golden ear
To those by famine tossed.

Pain Paint is better still.

What Physicians Say.

I have not lost a single patient in sixteen months past, since using Dr. Wolcott's Pain Paint and Annihilator in my practice. The cause of my success lowe to his medicines I cured a case of Cancer with thirty ounces of Pain Paint. This patient was resigning himself to a surgical operation. He is now entirely well. Also cured a woman with Cancer of the Womb of six years' standing. I have two other cases under treatment nearly well. I can refer you to Judge Dixon, of McConnellsburg, Fulton county, Pennsylvania, for the validity of my statements.

Water will not stain nor smart; neither will Pain Paint.

Water is harmless for injection; so is Pain Paint.

Water can be drank freely; so can Pain Paint.

Inflammation is the cause of all physical pain. Matter or corruption will never form unless caused by high inflammation; absorption and evaporation remove inflammation with wonderful rapidity. This is the new principle of Pain Paint. Cancers are healed as readily as a cut. Old fever sores, including ulcers of every name or of the foulest description, are cured by simply keeping them under the cooling influence of Pain Paint. Diarrhea and Dysentery cured within ten minutes by a faithful application across the bowels of the patient. A pint of Pain Paint applied properly to the head, when the pulse reaches the highest point, will positively cure Typhoid, Yellow, or any other known fever; by cooling the brain properly no fever can exist in the body. Pain Paint applied to a burn, with several folds of cotton cloth dripping wet, will positively prevent blistering, if done immediately. It removes pain or swelling from bee stings, mosquito bites or poisonous wounds; stops Headache or Neuralgia in a few minutes. Pains in the Liver, Heart or Kidneys relieved at the first application. Removes stiffness in joints and muscles, including all kinds of Rheumatic ailments.

Large bottles are much the cheapest, and should always be used for violent pains, spasms, colds, tumors or chronic ailments, or the whites likewise of counterfeits. Dr. Wolcott's remedies are put up in white wrappers; buy none other. One gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of $24, or one quart $8, or one pint $5; or six pints of Annihilator, for Catarrh and Colds in the head, for $5 including directions and medical advice. BRAN NEW LETTERS!

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.

Saved from Death!—Read!

Montgomery, Ala., June 28, 1869.

Messrs. J. Darby & Co., 161 William St., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 Broadway, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

Messrs. J. Darby & Co., 161 William St., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

LULLABY.

BY M. H. K.

Sleep, darling, sleep! The shadows lie
Across the crimson west;
The crickets from the lone fields cry,
The bird chirps in its nest,
Yon trembling, amber star,
Looks on thee from afar;
God's holy angels guard thee through the night.

Sleep, darling, sleep! The gloom
Falls purple, soft and still;
Sweet is the flower's faint perfume;
Calm reals o'er vale and hill.
God watches over all,
Not e'en the sparrows fall
But He doth know. He cares for thee by night.

Sleep, darling, sleep! nor fear,
For faint and gray the dawn
Shall, past the stars, appear,
And lo! the night is gone.
God is not far away--
Alike as through the day
He watches o'er His little lambs by night.

CURIOSITIES OF ANIMAL LIFE.

THE VERVAIN HUMMING BIRD.

As we have already remarked, the vervain humming bird (Mellisgua minima) is one of the minutest of the feathered race, the smallest indeed of its tribe, the full-grown bird not often exceeding an inch and a quarter in length. The popular name is derived from its fondness for the West India vervain, a common weed in neglected pastures in the West India Islands, the home of this delicate little bird. Wherever the vervain is abundant, it is sure to be found, darting here and there, "now poising itself before a flower, and probing its recesses with the long slender tongue, and now shooting for hundreds of feet into the air, and then descending diagonally, as if shot from a gun, toward the flower from which it started, and balancing itself before the blue petals as if it had not moved." Again, circling round and round, it will rise once more into mid-air, and then dart off like light to some distant attraction. Or, perched upon a slender twig, it smooths its plumes, seeming to take delight in their dazzling hues; then darting leisurely off, it skims along, stopping capriciously to kiss the coquetting flowers. Often two meet in the air and fight furiously, their crests and the feathers on their throats erect and blazing, the very picture of the most violent rage.

The tiny nests of these birds are as wonderful as any that are made. They are beautifully formed of soft and delicate vegetable fibres, such as the silk-cotton of the bombax. When the two minute eggs are laid, the nest is only just large enough to contain them and the body of the mother. When the young are hatched, however, the parents add to the walls of the nest, the shape of which is thus gradually changed completely. At first it very much resembles an immature acorn cup, but when the young are ready for flight it is deep like an ordinary coffee cup. The old birds are very valiant in defence of their young, attacking any bird, whatever its size, that approaches the nest. This valorous disposition, however, is a characteristic of the tribe, and it has suggested, probably fostered the Mexican belief that the bodies of these diminutive creatures contained the souls of slain warriors, whom the sponse of the god of war conducted into the mansions of the sun, and there transformed into humming birds.

THE FLY-SHOOTER.

Reverting to the subject of fishes, we find many singular specimens of the finny tribes taken note of in our note book. From among these we select at random one or two for our present regard. The first we shall call attention to is certainly a curiosity in its way. It is a member of the chætodon family of fishes, so called from two Greek words signifying bristle-toothed, because their teeth are so long, fine and slender as to resemble the bristles of a brush. Cuvier gave the family another and less euphonious name, that of Squamipennes, having reference to the manner in which their fleshy fins are covered with scales, like the rest of the body—a point which he seems to have regarded as distinguishing them from the rest of fishes. The family contains a great number of species, all natives of tropical countries, and remarkable for their beauty and brilliancy.

The subject of our article is known to science as the Beaked Chelmon (Chelmon rostrata) Its common English name is the fly-shooter, given to it on account of the singular manner in which it takes its prey. It inhabits the fresh waters of East India and the Asiatic Islands. It feeds mostly on insects, but as enough of these to satisfy its hunger do not usually fall into the water, it makes up the deficiency by resorting to the curious practice we have already referred to, and from which it derives its popular name—it shoots them. Let it, when in quest of food, observe a fly, for instance, resting on a blade of grass near the water's edge or hovering over the stream, it swims quietly up to within five or six inches of the unconscious insect, and projecting the end of its tubular snout above the surface, ejects therefrom a little drop of water with such sureness of aim as almost certainly to bring down its object, which is instantly snapped up and devoured. In countries where these finny hunters abound they are kept in bowls and vases as pets, and afford much amusement by the wonderful dexterity they exhibit in shooting flies, which are placed on the vessel, or suspended above it by a thread, to allow them a chance to display their skill. A Javanese species—the Toxotes jaculator—is endowed with the same remarkable instinct, throwing a jet of water with such force and precision as almost invariably to bring down a fly at the distance of two or three feet.

The fly shooter is generally from five to six inches in length, in shape much like our common sun fish, and curiously marked around the body with brownish bands, edged with darker brown and white. In the middle of the large back fin is a circular black spot edged with white, which adds greatly to its singularly beautiful appearance.—Once a Month

SCIENTIFIC.

Importance of Accuracy in the Use of Mechanical and Scientific Terms.

The general employment of technical terms and phrases among scientists and mechanics, and the necessity for their use to avoid inconvenient paraphrases and involved sentences, make a thorough understanding and a discriminate use of these terms a duty to all who employ them. In our description of machinery and processes we have always studiously avoided those terms which, not being commonly used, were either generally unfamiliar or not self-defining. It may be that at times the article as published appeared to be too elementary in character, but it is better to use language understood by all than a patois intelligible to the initiated only. There are in use many technical terms, however, that of themselves are far more expressive than any phrase in common use, and these should be employed in preference to an explanatory sentence which reaches its point only by seeming to aim at another. In such cases the technicals are the proper terms. Many of them are not laid down in the dictionaries, and different ones are used in different sections of the country by men engaged in the same business; but some are so apparently demonstrative and in their sound so well convey the idea that they are always understood. For instance, if a smith speaks of a "snant" heat, every one knows at once that it means a soft, even heat, permeating the mass of iron—the very sound of the word conveying the idea. The "bite" of an acid or file, the "hang" of a hammer, the "raks" of a turning tool, and many others beside those which show their applicability by their derivation, are better than any phrase that is simply descriptive or definitive.

But all technical terms to be useful should be definite. Though a "stringer" may be a "beam," it does not follow that a beam is a stringer. A railroad "sleeper" may not be also a railroad "tie." A "bit" may be a plane iron or an instrument for boring wood. "Force" and "power" are not synonymous, neither are "weight" and "pressure." So we might go on indefinitely, and give examples of the indiscriminate and improper use of technical terms. We have a letter before us in which the writer, speaking of his steam boiler, uses the terms "fire surface" and "heating surface" as synonymous. Another speaks of the "force" of steam and the "pressure" of steam, also as synonymous or interchangeable terms.

It is sometimes difficult, under such circumstances, to really understand what is meant. In such cases it would be better to use language of a less concise but more explanatory character.

Yet there is a pedantry affected by many in the use of technicals that is as annoying as it is pretentious. It is seen in the use of geometrical terms in defining well known and familiar forms, and of algebraic formulas to state simple arithmetical problems. There are occasions when this is not only proper, but absolutely necessary for the defining of the subject. As to those who air their superficialties by a malapropos employment of all the technical terms they have been able to pick up, they do not deserve notice; such are beneath criticism and beyond improvement.

But even our professional teachers, the compilers of manuals designed to aid the beginner, are open to the charge of pedantry, and not unfrequently to that of writing about what it is evident they do not themselves understand. It would be unkind and harsh, perhaps, to refer by title to such works, but we have been several times much surprised to note the ingenuity of two, at least, of these authors in concealing their own ignorance while assuming to teach others. Nystrom, in his "Technological Education," says: "We frequently find most valuable formulas given by scientific men in such a shape that it requires to know more than the author in order to employ them; they are not only not trimmed to a practical shape, but even the meaning of letters is rarely explained in proper technical language."

We are convinced that the reason why our mechanics do not generally take kindly to scientific education applicable to their department is not because of a dislike to the subject, but because of the needless obstructions in the way of ambiguous and involved statements that seem to be made or presented in a form purposely designed to annoy, or carelessly calculated to mislead. Scientific American.

Bridge Across the British Channel.—We have received the description and drawings of a projected bridge across the British Channel designed by a French engineer, Mr. Charles Boutet.

The bridge is to extend from the Dover Hills, near Shakspeare Cliff, to Cape Blanc-nez, near Calais. The distance between these two points is thirty-two thousand eight hundred and twenty-two yards. Nine colossal iron piers and two abutments are designed to form the supports of the entire structure; so the bridge will have ten spans each of three thousand two hundred and eighty two yards, or almost two miles. The piers are to extend one hundred and twenty yards above the sea level, to allow the largest vessels to pass under the bridge. Each pier measures at the lower end one hundred and thirty by eighty-seven yards, and the foundations reach from twenty-eight to fifty-two yards into the ground. The piers are to be built on shore, and floated by immense buoys to their final resting places. They are at their lower parts provided with screw supports, which, when turned, are worked into the foundation to secure and retain the piers in position.

Each cable consists of one hundred and twenty two-inch wire ropes Buffers made of wire rops are arranged around the piers to prevent vessels from striking against the same, and within each pier is a staircase extending down to the water's edge to serve as a means of escape for shipwrecked persons. Furthermore, each pier is constructed to be used as a lighthouse.

The entire expense of the structure is estimated not to exceed £8,000,000. One half of this sum we are informed has already been subscribed in France.—Scientific American.

Moving the World.—If Archimedes could have found his fulcrum he would still have found it quite a job to move the world. His lever would have had to be so long that had he applied only thirty pounds, and moved it through ten thousand feet per hour for ten hours a day, the remote end of the lever would have had to pass through an arc which it would take eight trillions, seven hundred and seventy-four billions, nine hundred and ninety-four millions, five hundred and seventy-four thousands, seven hundred and thirty-seven of centuries to accomplish, in order to raise the earth a single inch. Archimedes was a braggart!

New Application of Photography. Corridi has ingeniously contrived an apparatus by which a ship's course is accurately registered during the entire voyage. In place of the symbol on the card of the vessel's compass indicating north, a hole is punctured and a small lens inserted. Through this the light passes, and acts upon a roll of sensitized paper, made to move with a regulated speed by clock-work. The paper continually changes its position with the ship, but the lens is ever maintained in the magnetic meridian; hence the deviation of the vessel therefrom is recorded.

The Two Roads.—An elder of a church in the State of New York, a few years ago, owned a distillery and manufactured ardent spirits. The elder was an active Christian, and seemed quite awake to the benevolent efforts of the day. His pastor was grieved that so worthy a man should be engaged in a business which brought temporal and eternal ruin upon his fellow-men, and resolved to give him faithful warning.—While visiting the elder, at his house, the elder looked toward the grave-yard and said: "I love to look there; it seems to be the way to heaven." "Yes," said the pastor, "and that," pointing to the distillery, "is the way to hell." It was a word in season; and, in a few weeks the distillery was leveled to the ground.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Clover is the cheapest and best manure that can be had. Nothing pays better than a field of good clover plowed under. It enriches the soil quicker than barn-yard manure, and puts it in better condition. To plow it down well, if it stands thick and high, each morning a roller should be drawn over as much as can be plowed in a day, and a heavy chain should be fastened to the point of the plow beam to drag it into the furrow. In this way it can be completely covered. Clover contains all the elements needed to enrich the soil for all kinds of grain, and in larger quantities than other manures.—Experimental Farm Journal.

To Freshen Salt Fish.—Many persons who are in the habit of freshening mackerel, or other salt fish, never dream that there is a right and wrong way to do it. Any person who has seen the process of evaporation going on at the salt works knows that the salt falls to the bottom. Just so it is in the pan where your mackerel or white fish lie soaking; and, as it lies with the skin down, the salt will fall to the skin, and there remain; when, if placed with the flesh down, the salt falls to the bottom of the pan, and the fish comes out freshened as it should be. In the other case it is nearly as when put in.

The Best Mulch for Grape Vines. A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says that he finds leached ashes and cut grass the best mulch for the grape vine. The ashes gather moisture and repel heat. Grape vines that were mulched at the commencement of the drought last summer stood the heat well When the grass rots the roots derive nutriment from it. The grass is put on first, and then covered with ashes. This mulch is both protective and enriching, and the nutriment is of a kind that is wanted—vegetable and carbonaceous.

If mulching is employed at the time of planting trees, they will never need watering. Uniform temperature and a constant supply of moisture are the prime elements of success in fruit culture. Mulching enables us to accomplish this.—Mulching acts beneficially in other ways. It prevents, to a great degree, the cracking of fruit, and causes those varieties which are generally spotted and defaced to become clean and covered with a rich bloom.

Remedy for Cabbage Lice.—A writer in the Farmers' Advocate says that a cheap and effective remedy for this insect is within the reach of all. As soon as the plant begins to head, or as the louse makes his appearance, open the leaves carefully with the fingers and sprinkle common salt between them. This is said to be an infallible remedy. We have used it with entire success. Plants used in this way produce larger and more solid heads than those left to themselves.

The root crop is altogether too much overlooked by herdsmen; in winter roots are essential to the health of ruminating animals. They modify the effects of dry food. One acre of sugar beets would save a herd of milch cows a great deal of trouble. Green food in the shape of roots is very essential to the health of all animals in winter.

At a farmer's club, in Ohio, the discussion of the question resulted in the conclusion that August and February are the most suitable months for cutting timber. In August the summer's growth is mature and firm. In February the circulation has been for two or three months suspended by the cold of winter.

The Cottage Gardener, London, says: "Earthing up potatoes diminishes the product and retards the ripening of the tubers. Long experiments in England have proved this fact—that hilling up the potato will reduce the crop one-fourth."

The Agricultural Gazette estimates the annual consumption of wheat in the United Kingdom at twenty million of quarters—it may be a million more—and states the average yield per acre, throughout the kingdom, at twenty seven bushels.

A recent writer states that three hundred and fifty bushels of potatoes remove ninety pounds of potash from the soil on which they are grown; consequently wood ashes is one of the most valuable manures for this crop.

A correspondent of the American Entomologist says that a few sliced onions, buried in an ant hill, will cause the ants to leave it. A gill of kerosene oil, poured in the orifices of the nest, will secure the same result.

Don't keep a calf tied or shut up in some damp, dark corner, with hardly room enough to lie down He needs the sunshine as much as hens, or the plants in the garden.

Hasty words rankle the wound which injury gives.

THE BEST COOKING STOVE

FOR WOOD NOW IN USE.

THE FASHION.

We call especial attention to this Stove, which has been produced at great expense, combining all the new and important improvements; also to the extra height of the Oven under the fire chamber, the Patent Air Chamber Front Doors, and Patent White Enameled Iron Knobs, the improvements in the covers and centre pieces, all of which have been covered by Letters Patent, and are used in no other Stove. They are warranted to stand fire, or others sent free of charge in all cases. We have all sizes of this justly celebrated Stove, both

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet, Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. All of the above Stoves are fitted with extra care, Oven Doors lined with tin, and furnished with William Resor's Patent Air Chamber, sliding front doors, patent centres, covers and White Enameled Knobs.

The operation of every Stove guaranteed.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE OF THE CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited a moderate degree of animation since our last report, partly from the execution of country orders, and partly from busy preparations for an early opening of the fall business. Very little has been reported in sugar and molasses, and only a limited movement in Western produce, the supplies of which are too light to admit of any demand for export.

On Friday and Saturday the weather was clear, but with a heavy northeast wind, almost a gale, which was followed on Saturday evening by a heavy storm, which continued without interruption until early on Monday morning, when it cleared up bright and pleasant. It is hoped that the fury of the tempest was confined to within a moderate distance from the gulf coast, and that the cotton districts have escaped; but had it extended throughout the cotton growing region it is manifest it must have done immense injury, and rendered a general reduction of crop estimates necessary, probably to the extent of at least 100,000 bales. This is one of the contingencies to which the crop is exposed, and to which we specially referred in our annual review, showing the folly of those who imagine that they can confidently rely upon the conjectural estimates made at this period of the season. There are other contingencies from which the crop is yet in danger, which may curtail the yield. In the meantime, up to the occurrence of this storm, the accounts from the country, with some exceptions, continued favorable, our planters having had the unusual good fortune to escape the ravages of worms, floods, etc.

The river continues falling, and is now ten feet four inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 3d instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	1397
Lake	3
Mobile	107
Florida	2
Total		1509

On Saturday the sales embraced 193 bales, mostly at previous rates. On Monday 180 bales changed hands at 30 to 30½c. for low middling, 30½ to 30¾ and 31c. for strict low middling, and 32c for a good style of middling, which many would class higher, the inside figures being accepted for only trifling lots. This left a little unsold, and on Tuesday the market opened with little more than Monday's receipts on sale. The business was consequently confined to 335 bales at 29½c. for strict good ordinary to low middling, 30 to 30½c. for low middling, 30¾ to 31c. for strict low middling, and 31½ to 32c. for middling. Some old crop sold at 26½c. for strict ordinary, and 28¾c. for good ordinary.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 758 bales, taken mostly for the North, but partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since last Friday evening embrace 1,400 bales, against 1,739 for the same time last year, and since the 1st instant 1,839 bales, against 2,492.

The movement is hardly sufficient yet to constitute a market, but the following quotations are predicated on actual sales, the outside figures for low middling being for strict classification.

Ordinary	— to —
Good ordinary	— to 29¾
Low middling	30 to 31
Middling	31½ to 32
Strict middling	— to —

Sugar.—Louisiana sugar has been wholly inactive from first hands during the past week, but a fair retail business has been done from second hands at previous prices. The supply in the city is light. City refinery sugar is selling at 13½ to 16c. per pound for yellow clarified, 16 to 17c. for white, and 17¼ to 17½c. for crushed and powdered.

Monetary.—Gold opened at 134⅜ to 135, (against 136⅞ at New York) and closed at 134¼ to 134⅜.

Operations in silver have been of moderate extent, the only sales reported being $3,000 in American half dollars at 130¾ and 133, and $1,000, halves and quarters, at 130¾, and $800 halves at 133.

Last week 55 shares Germania National Bank sold at $103 50, since which no sales have been reported.

The business in bonds embraces $1,500 city seven per cent. certificates at 75½, ex interest; and $5,000 State Levee sixes at 66.

STONEWALL INSTITUTE,

Located Thirteen Miles North of Selma, Alabama.

This SCHOOL FOR BOYS, so favorably located in the quiet country, reopens on the

FIRST MONDAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

Its officers are all experienced and devoted to teaching. It has no sectarian tinge; is not controlled by Trustees. The Principal alone is responsible to his patrons.

Pupils from its halls have taken premiums this summer at three different Universities.—Extra attention is given to the English branches; all our students, of every age, are taught to spell and read well; to write a good hand. Boys of tender age, nine or ten years old, will be received, and will be parentally treated and controlled.

This school is permanent. Its founder and Principal has been identified with education in the South for twenty years, and he expects to continue to devote his ardent energies to the culture of Southern youth.

Parents can save time and money by patronizing such enterprises. We rarely change Teachers or text books, and being in the quiet country, cheap clothing will curtail expenses.

Charges.—$260 will cover a scholastic year's board, tuition and washing; half paid in October, the other February 1, 1870.

Payments may be made to Foster & Gardner, Mobile, Alabama, $15 to be deposited for books, etc., if all of which is not used, it will be refunded. Each student furnishes his own blankets, sheets and towels.

Persons in sickly sections may send in by September 1, adding $30 to their regular remittance.

Hacks run from Selma to the Institute in October, conveying boys for $2 50 each.

In the city of Mobile we refer, by permission, to Messrs. Foster & Gardner, John K. Randall & Co., C. E. Thames & Co., Baker, Lawler & Co., Kirksey & Carpenter, Dexter, Dunlap & Wilson, Nabers & Hanks; also to Drs. R. L. Watkins, J. R. Burgett, A. S. Andrews; to Messrs. John Little Smith, Richard B Owen and Thomas H. Herndon; finally, to Profs. W. R. Poindexter and P. E. Collins.

Applications for admission may be made at once by addressing the President,

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—A Southern gentleman visiting Cuba for the porpose of learniug the trne state of affairs for self and friends, writes encouragingly from Cardenas under date of September 1, saying: "The revolution, I honestly believe, will succeed." Alluding to outrages and destruction by volunteers, the writer says: "If the war continues six months, the island will be almost uninhabitable. There are now along the eastern coast people on the verge of starvation."

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—A letter from Key West, received here to-day, states that information has reached there that the Spaniards had evacuated Puerto Principe and retreated toward Nuevitas. That they were overtaken by the Cubans within fifteen miles of the latter city and completely routed. It is also stated that four hundred emigrants from South Carolina, Georgia and Florida succeeded in landing in Cuba and had joined the revolutionary forces. They were all soldiers in the late war.

Secretary Cox has appointed a negro examiner in the Patent Office

London journals say that there are at this moment twenty-two thousand men, women and children starving in two English counties. They have been reduced to want by the strike among the nail makers.

THE FUNERAL OF SECRETARY RAWLINS.—At two o'clock the funeral ceremonies commenced, with a prayer by Rev. J. G. Butler, of the English Lutheran Church. Rev Preston Brown, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, followed by reading an appropriate chapter from Scripture, when Rev. Mr. Wilson, pastor of McKendree chapel, of this city, who attended General Rawlins in his last moments, delivered, with deep feeling, a short address, in which he spoke of the Christian character of the deceased, and of his strong faith in the Redeemer as an example to the living.

The ceremonies at the War Department closed with prayer by Rev. Mr. Hamilton, of the Baltimore Conference. The friends of the deceased then slowly passed from the building, Mrs. Rawlins, pale and sinking with grief, supported by General Parker, and her father, being the first to leave the room This touching feature of the solemn ceremonies intensified, if possible, the grief everywhere manifested. The few other ladies and intimate friends of the deceased followed, when the coffin, strewn with flowers, was removed by the guard of honor, followed by the distinguished pall-bearers, and deposited upon the hearse. President Grant was much affected during the ceremonies.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—A Scranton special says: Later explorations of the mine have developed a sadder phase of the tragedy. Many chambers have been entered and miners found in them dead, showing that they had been stricken down by poisonous gas without a warning, while they were at work. Road men, roof men, door men and others were found dead in different gangways, showing that the destruction must have come swift and sudden

The spirit evinced by the miners to-day has been bitter in the extreme, and is not assuaged by the offers of assistance and sympathy flowing in from every side.

Asa Packer has telegraphed that he offers $2,500 to the bereaved; Governor Geary $500.

The railroad companies make all exertions possible, and the wishes of the miners in every respect are consulted, but they remain obdurate. The more reasonable are ready to listen to reason, but they are in a minority. Many are refractory and vicious. Trouble is apprehended, and has been avoided only by consummate tact.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—The cotton market is demoralized, and a heavy decline has occurred. There is a great pressure to sell. Low middling is quoted at 30c. Sales for October are negotiated at 27½c.

EUROPE.

PARIS, Sept. 14.—The Emperor and Prim had a consultation yesterday.

PARIS, Sept. 14.—Madrid letters assert that a fleet of iron-clads will be sent to Cuba in November, should the United States interfere. The Spanish government forbids unfavorable telegrams, especially regarding Cuba.

The Barcelona Diario hopes that, notwithstanding the action of the United States, Spain will know how to maintain her flag and her dignity.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—A heavy storm prevailed here yesterday, and throughout the continent.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—Napoleon is recovering, though there is a marked change in his appearance.

The Prince Imperial is at Brussels on his return from the East.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—The Times' Madrid correspondent writes: "Hitherto the Spanish government and press have concealed unfavorable Cuban news, but the Epoca to-day startled the Spaniards by ventilating the true situation, and vehemently urging dispatch in sending troops, and the union of all parties, so that the government may be free to save Cuba."

LONDON, Sept. 14.—The Times has a strong article on the folly of Spain adhering to Cuba. Says Prim and Serrano have often told the Cortes that the loss of Cuba was merely a question of time. It is hoped they will soon see that it is good to be rid of the island on any terms, and cause them to consider before wasting more men and money which they cannot spare.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 15.—The market is stagnant; low middling 12¼d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SCRANTON, Pa., Sept. 9.—Ninety bodies have been found, eighty-two of which have been brought to the surface. A doctor was called for to attend the men who explored the mine, but none present volunteered, and Dr. Ricard, of Plymouth, came from Plymouth to perform the duty of resuscitating the miners if more foul air is encountered. The coroner will take testimony on Saturday afternoon. Heaps of coal left in the chute have been lighted, and are blazing in a long line, extending from the railroad up the hill. Great outbreaks of grief occur among the women in the nearest miners' houses. The air in the mine is so bad that parties can stay but a few momente.

AVONDALE, Pa., Sept. 9.—Thomas Carson and George Morgan, very experienced miners, with twenty men, have just returned from the mine and report they have explored every part of the workings and are satisfied all the bodies have been recovered. Outside parties say John Davis, of Plymouth, and Jas. A. Kerr, of Avondale, are still missing. They must be mistaken. One hundred and eighteen is the number of bodies taken out.

Proceedings of the St. Louis Annual Conference.

The twenty-second session of the Conference convened in the city of St. Louis, at the First Methodist Episcopal Church South, September 1, 1869, Bishop George F. Pierce presiding.

The Conference was opened with the usual religious exercises, conducted by the Bishop. It is composed of ninety-six clerical and forty lay members, of whom forty-eight of the former and twenty of the latter answered at the first roll call.

There is a large attendance of visitors from a distance, and a considerable audience assembled in the Conference room.

W. M. Prottsman was elected secretary; J. W. Lewis, assistant secretary; and G. P. Smith, recording secretary.

A communication from A. H. Redford, agent of the Publishing House at Nashville, was read and referred to the Committee on Books and Accounts. It was accompanied by the annual exhibit, showing assets $212,759 73, and liabilities $42,575 76. The profits for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, are stated at $44,293 35, making the profits for the three years since the last General Conference $77,018 27, an amount nearly equal to the amount of the old indebtedness. The profits during the past year have, however, been applied to the enlargement of the business of the House. The departments under the efficient management of Dr. Summers, and the Depository at New Orleans under the control of Rev. R. J. Harp, have been prosperous—the latter has increased its capital $3,421 54, and the Nashville Advocate has realized a net profit of $1,945 32, and the Sunday School Visitor $2,224 71, having now a subscription list of thirty-three thousand. These periodicals are commended for circulation when it does not conflict with the local interests of the Conferences.

A communication was also received from J. B. McFerrin, the secretary, forwarding the second annual report of the Parent Board of Domestic Missions, and referred to the managers of the Conference Board. From eleven Conferences no statistical report had been furnished the general secretary, and from five Conferences no financial reports. The general summary, so far as reported, shows: Missions, 194; white members, 23,797; colored members, 291; received during the year, 3,621; local preachers, 73; Sabbath schools, 282; scholars 9,945; churches, 228; infants baptized, 797; adults baptized, 2,017; collections, $47,959 60. He urgently requests the proper officers of the Conference Boards to make hereafter full and prompt returns.

T. Polk, in behalf of the Board of Curators of Central College, presented their annual report, which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Several transfers since the last session, viz: George H. Clinton from the Mississippi, C. D. N. Campbell from the Mobile, C. P. Jones from the South Georgia, M. G. Williams from the Arkansas, L. P. Henderson from the Kentucky, A. G. Stacey from the South Carolina Conference; and also L. P. Dryden, remitted, and T. J. Gouch, of the Missouri Conference, were severally introduced to the Conference.

At half-past seven o'clock P. M. Rev. Joseph W. Lewis, by-appointment, delivered the sermon in course before the Conference. A large congregation assembled in the main audience room of the church, and the occasion was one of profound interest and profit. The theme of the discourse was: "The Priesthood of Christ, its objects, adaptation and superiority," founded upon the text of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, third chapter and first verse. It was a scholarly discussion of the subject and an exhaustive exposition of that cardinal doctrine of the Gospel, and happily applied.

SECOND DAY.

The Conference was opened with religious services, conducted by Dr. D. R. McAnally.

Upon the call of Question 1—Who are admitted on trial?—the following were severally reported from the Examining Committee, and otherwise represented and admitted, viz:

John H. St. Clair, W. M. Shelton, John R. Eddleman, Richard J. Derrick, W. C. Montgomery, Joseph A. Russell, George W. Hall, Sidney Richmond, Constantine D. Davis, Thomas D. Payne and Andrew J. Hartlo.

W. M. Prottsman, in behalf of a committee appointed at the previous session to examine the roll of the Conference, reported ninety one clerical and forty lay members. Thereupon the president declared the Conference entitled to five clerical and five lay delegates to represent it in the next General Conference to meet at Memphis, Tennessee, in May, A. D. 1870.

Joseph Boyle, Wesley Browning and J. R. Bennett were appointed a committee to report concerning the question of rebaptism.

A communication from Dr. W. A. Smith, relating to his connection with Central College, was received and read. The doctor expresses the hope that his health is improving, but he does not expect to be able to return to Missouri earlier than October. He deeply regrets not being present at the Conference, and says it is the only session of his Conference at which he has failed to be present in forty-four consecutive years.

Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., agent of the Publishing House at Nashville, was introduced to the Conference.

At the hour of ten o'clock A. M. the Conference, pursuant to resolution previously adopted, proceeded to elect the clerical delegates to the General Conference and the alternates. Upon ballot the following were chosen and declared elected, viz: D. R. McAnally, W. M. Prottsman, Thomas M. Finney, M. M. Pugh and W. M. Pitts. Alternates, J. A. Murphy and J. W. Lewis.

The election of lay delegates to the General Conference was held, according to appointment, at half-past two o'clock P. M. The following were chosen and declared elected: T. Polk, R. A. Hatcher, B. L. Riggins, J. M. Johnson, A. C. Mitchell. Alternates, D. N. Burgoyne, M. M. Robinson.

PROMISE FULFILLED.—The week of prayer has passed by. It will be long remembered. It will date a new era in many a life. It will be marked as a time of blessing to the church. The promise was: Ask, and ye shall receive. The fulfillment has gladdened a multitude of souls. The week of prayer was generally observed in the Pacific and Columbia Conferences. In some charges the special services are still protracted. Heart-searching, repentance, fresh consecration and renewed activity in the work of the Lord are the results prayed for and realized by the church. The church has been revived, and is now girded for the special efforts which precede the close of the Conference year. Sinners have been awakened and converted, and the seeds sown will germinate and bring harvests hereafter. The week of prayer will with many culminate in an eternity of praise. God is faithful to fulfill His promises.—San Francisco Spectator.

COLORED CONFERENCES.

THE ALABAMA COLORED CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—This Conference will meet in Talladega, Alabama, November 25. All the colored preachers in the State of Alabama, who are the duly authorized pastors of congregations in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, are requested to be present and participate in the organization of the Conference. Colored preachers duly recommended by Quarterly Conferences are also invited to be present. This call embraces those colored presiding elders and pastors who, though living in Alabama, are now embraced in the territory of the Memphis Colored Conference.

All who respond to this call, if not accompanied by a presiding elder, should bring suitable testimonials of personal and official character.

Statistics of the number of church buildings, members, and Sunday schools, should be as complete as possible.

The ministers, traveling and local, of the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences, and the Alabama portion of the Tennessee Conference, are requested to circulate this information, and to furnish those concerned whatever information and documents may be necessary to the organization of the Conference.

H. N. McTYEIRE.

THE third session of the Tennessee (Memphis) Colored Annual Conference will be held in Nashville, September 29, 1869. Bishop Paine is to preside.

THE second session of the Kentucky Colored Annual Conference will be held at Winchester, Kentucky, October 13, 1869. Bishop Kavanaugh is to preside.

THE second session of the Mississippi Colored Annual Conference will be held at Crystal Springs, Mississippi, December 15, 1869 Bishop McTyeire is to preside.

GEORGIA COLORED CONFERENCE.—This body, in connection with our church, is appointed by Bishop Pierce to meet in Macon, on the 16th of December. Bishop Pierce desires that the members of the two Georgia Conferences, within the bounds of whose work members of the other Conferences reside, should inform them of the appointment. So says the Southern Christian Advocate

WE EXTRACT the following items of interest from the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

SAD ANNOUNCEMENT.—The Observer, in its last issue, has the following announcement of the dying condition of its chief editor, the Rev. S. Hargiss:

"At the time we go to press this morning with our regular edition all hope of the recovery of Rev. S. Hargiss is gone.

"It was not believed last night that he could last until this time, and all we can now say is, that he is breathing his last. Before this reaches our subscribers his friends will have performed the last sad office.

"He bears his sufferings with perfect Christian resignation, and is resigned to the will of Him who 'doeth all things well.'"

BISHOP MARVIN.—The San Francisco Spectator, of the 26th ultimo, contains the following intelligence, which will be read with deep regret. Late letters of the Bishop to his family in this city are of similar tenor, with expression, however, of his expectation that it will be only a temporary disability. His friends here feel a just concern lest in the ardor of his zeal he may tax his physical strength beyond endurance. The Spectator says:

"We regret to learn that Bishop Marvin's health continues to be bad. A letter from Rev. W. A. Finley, dated Corvallis, August 15, says: 'I write you a few lines to inform you of the ill health of our beloved Bishop. He has not been able to preach for near three weeks. I received a short letter from him written on the 12th, in which he speaks of some little improvement in his eye, though it was still much inflamed.'"

REVIVAL MEETINGS of great power and resulting in large accessions to the church, we learn from the preachers in attendance on the Conference, have occurred in many parts of the work during the past few weeks. Brethren will confer a favor by reporting them to us, in writing, before they leave the city.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The Rev. T. F. Mangum writes from Demopolis, Mobile Conference, September 9, 1869: "We have had a very interesting meeting at this place, and at Jeffurson also. The church is in an improving condition. We have taken into the church ten members, and hope to get others soon. Methodism is regaining her individuality in this section of the country."

ATLANTA CT., LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, August 25, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Thank God I can report a glorious revival of religion at one appointment within the bounds of my work. Assisted by Brother Cox, a class leader, I began a meeting at Pleasant Hill, a new appointment, at which we now have twenty eight lively church members, last Friday, which was protracted till Tuesday evening. Sinners were pungently convicted, about fifteen penitents powerfully converted, Christians graciously blessed, and thirteen added to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Fraternally yours,

J. F. WYNN.

MARIAN JUNCTION, ALABAMA, September 6, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has done great things for us. In the first place He has favored us with a good corn and cotton crop. And now He is sending down the latter rain in showers of divine grace, until the hard and stony hearts have been mellowed into praise and thanksgiving to the Donor of all that is good.

I have just closed a most excellent meeting at this place, in which there were twenty or more professions of faith in Christ, and twelve accessions to our church. The entire community was greatly blessed. To God be all the praise.

J. W. VEST.

SHARON, MISS., Sept. 6, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has graciously visited His people in Sharon. About the 1st of August we began daily services in the Methodist church, the only one in the place, and closed the exercises with the week of prayer, on the 19th ultimo. Cold hearts were warmed, the dying were revived, and the entire church was, we trust, strengthened and encouraged. Fifty-four were added to the church, principally, though not exclusively, from among the pupils of the Sunday school. There is scarcely a young person in the community who has not united with the church. The superintendent of the Sunday school is a man of extraordinary zeal and energy in that good work. Though formerly a Cumberland Presbyterian, he adapts himself to Methodist peculiarities as readily as if he had never known any others. Persistently maintaining the final perseverance of the saints, he will tolerate no perseverance that is not evidenced by works of righteousness in the daily life. I see no necessity for objecting to that kind of perseverance.

Almost all the children of the Sunday school, who are old enough to read, have our church hymn book, and during the eleven o'clock service seem as much interested in all its parts as any persons in the house. We try to teach them that persons are never too young to be Christians.

We have been using an organ in our church. Some Methodists used to think that an instrument of music in a church must necessarily prove fatal to all spiritual devotion. Once, during the daily meetings of which I have spoken, the pulpit was unoccupied on a Sunday, because of my absence at a Quarterly Meeting. The superintendent of the Sunday school read a portion of the Scriptures, and after a short exhortation, announcing a hymn, invited penitents to the altar. While the organ was played and the hymn was sung, sixteen mourners knelt solemnly at the altar for prayer. The fact is that the music is not in the instrument at all, but in the soul of the performer, and one whose spirit is properly attuned to the heavenly melodies of sacred music can impart the sweet influences of holy sound as well from an instrument at the ends of the fingers as from one at the root of the tongue.

Yours truly,

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LETTER FROM OREGON.

L. E. V. Coan, writing to the San Francisco Spectator, under date of Oregon City, August 18, 1869, says:

"My camp meeting for Oregon City circuit has just closed. We had one of the most remarkable outpourings of the Holy Spirit of God I ever witnessed. The meeting resulted in thirty-nine conversions and accessions, making a total of one hundred and four for this Conference year. To God be all the glory, honor and praise for what He has done for us. We are indebted to Rev. Bros. Emery, Kelsay, Vanslyke, Oliver and Stovall for ministerial labor. Our beloved Bishop was not with us in person, but we know he was with us in heart and in prayer. I have ten days to spend with this people before Conference, which I intend to use in holding protracted meetings. Pray for us. May God bless you and yours.

THE SURE REFUGE.

Oh! I know the Hand that is guiding me
Through the shadow to the light,
And I know that all befalling me
Is meted out aright.
I know that the thorny path I tread
Is ruled with a golden line,
And I know that the darker life's tangled thread,
The brighter the rich design.

When faints and fails each wilderness hope,
And the lamp of faith burns dim,
Oh! I know where to find the honey-drop
On the bitter chalice brim;
For I see, though veiled from my mortal sight,
God's plan is all complete,
Though the darkness at present be not light,
And the bitter be not sweet.

I can wait till the day-spring shall overflow
The night of pain and care;
For I know there's a blessing for every woe,
A promise for every prayer.
Yes, I feel that the Hand which is holding me
Will ever hold me fast,
And the strength of the arms that are folding me
Will keep me to the last.

Dr. Newman, Reason, Certainty and Faith.

MR. EDITOR: Time is an infallible revealer of facts. In days past who would have thought that a believer in popery could ever be induced to write on reason, certainty and faith? The Morning Star and Catholic Messenger of Sunday, August 22, 1869, thus informs the world: "Dr. Newman is engaged on a philosophical work which will treat, we understand, of reason, certainty and faith. Controversy with Protestantism is at an end. As a system it is completely exploded, and the world holds it in contempt. The contest now is between reason and faith, the natural and the supernatural."

Dr. Newman will appeal to reason, and by it show that the true church is based on Peter, and that the Redeemer so designed when He said: "Thou art Petros, and on this Petra I shall build my church." When the doctor accomplishes his undertaking by reason, in this particular, it will be an easy task for him to prove by reason that a boy and girl, paying no respect to gender, are the same, for Petros and Petra, as used by the Saviour, are as distinct as boy and girl in English. In opposition to Dr. Newman's faith and reason we boldly assert, metaphysically speaking, that it was impossible for the Saviour to make Petros the rock of the church, as He himself, according to prophecy, was to be the rock. Does not David thus pray: "Lead me to the rock which is higher than I?"—Psalms 61: 2. The fathers think, and truly so, that Messiah is meant by this high rock. As the fathers are law to Roman Catholics, Dr. Newman will not indirectly by reason contradict their opinion. Prophecy having made the Redeemer the rock, it was therefore metaphysically impossible to Him to make a substitute, except at the expense of truth, which He was bound to respect. Let Dr. Newman try the full power of his reason on this problem, and the previous consideration that Petros, from which we have Peter, is a masculine noun, and Petra, from which we have rock, a feminine noun, and he will soon discover the task unreasonable to faith, and that the evidence of certainty is on our side.

"This is my body, this is my blood." Dr. Newman will tax his ability to prove by reason that Christ transformed His body into bread and His blood into wine toward the close of His last supper with the chosen twelve. The creed of his church on this point is: "That in the most holy sacrament of the eucharist there is truly, really and substantially the body and blood, together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that there is made a conversion of the whole substance of the bread into the body, and of the whole substance of the wine into the blood, which conversion the Catholic Church calls transubstantiation." Now as the Saviour continued to talk to His disciples after He had given them bread and wine, we are strongly tempted to think that Dr. Newman will fail by reason to convince intelligent men that His body, blood, spirit, soul and divinity were in their stomachs, while their eyes and ears told them that He was still before them, as on past occasions. Reason, certainty and faith infallibly informed them that the God-man was not in their stomachs—that He still lived to make atonement for the sins of the world. As it was metaphysically impossible to the Saviour to convert His body and blood into bread and wine, and at the same time maintain His special identity, we are forced to the conclusion that it was also physically impossible, and that those who teach otherwise outrage the province of reason, insult the dignity of faith, and totally disregard the doctrine of certainty.

A Roman Catholic takes the wafer on his tongue, then swallows it, being informed that it contains, by transubstantiation, the body, blood, soul, spirit and divinity of Messiah. He returns to his home, drinks a glass of ale or something stronger, then eats a hearty dinner, and thus mixes matter, spirit and divinity together, all destined to corruption. What an idea! And this is what Dr. Newman will demonstrate, by reason and certainty, to be worthy of the enlightened faith of mankind. The heathen, bad as they were, never ate their gods. This was reserved for a people called Christians, who, in eating the divinity of the Saviour, eat the unoriginated nature of Elohim.

We fully indorse one sentence of the quotation: "The contest now is between reason and faith, the natural and the supernatural."—We confidently look to a day in which no man will profess to eat his Lord and Master; when Roman Catholics will abandon the doctrine, and regard it as unworthy of a place in human records.

As to "controversy with Protestantism" being at an end—"completely exploded"—we reply that popery has scarcely seen the beginning of the end of the question. Are not its advocates, as a general rule, poorly informed in languages, history and the Scriptures? How many school books are traceable to popish talent? How many lexicons have priests published? How many editions of the Scriptures have been published at Rome in the last five hundred years? In their silly conceit they imagine that the Pope is infallible; and the "controversy with Protestantism" is at an end. They ought to bless God at the end of every mass for Protestantism, for only for it they would rush mankind into the savagery of superstition. We would not injure them, but would inform and reform them in all things perverted by popery.

AN OLD MAN.

A VOCAL DUEL.—I remember hearing a stage driver's story of Jenny Lind when she was riding in the country. A bird of brilliant plumage perched on a tree near by, as they drove slowly along, and trilled out such a complication of sweet notes as perfectly astonished her. The coach stopped, and reaching out, she gave one of her finest roulades. The beautiful creature arched its head on one side and listened deferentially; then, as if determined to excel its famous rival, raised its graceful throat and sang a song of rippling melody, that made Jenny rapturously clap her hands in ecstacy; and quickly, as though she was before a severely critical audience in Castle Garden, she delivered some Tyrolean mountain strains that set the echoes flying, whereupon little birdie took it up, and sang till Jenny, in happy delight, acknowledged that the pretty woodland warbler decidedly out-caroled the great Swedish nightingale.

He Don't Know the Worth of Money.

MR. EDITOR: On a certain occasion I was standing near two gentlemen who were engaged in conversation, and overheard one of them remark about some one of whom they were conversing: "He don't know the worth of money." I happened to be in a serious mood, and it struck me with considerable force, and I was led to inquire seriously whether the person who made the remark with so much self-complacency, himself knew the worth of money; for a person may prove his ignorance of the value of a commodity as much by overestimating as by placing too low a value upon it. In this view of the subject very few know the worth of money. Perhaps none but the dying man can estimate it properly.

The man who suffers the love of money to shut the love of God out of his heart, and whose thoughts are so occupied by schemes and plans of money-making that he cannot take time to think about God or heaven, don't know the worth of money.

The man who is so occupied in seeking wealth that he totally neglects the moral and religious training of his children, don't know the worth of money.

The man who never gives to benevolent objects, or does not give in proportion to his income, don't know the worth of money.

The man who sacrifices principle to acquire wealth, don't know the worth of money.

The man who flatters himself that he will be made happy by the acquisition of wealth, don't know the worth of money.

He who imagines his money will make him respectable, while he disregards the rights and privileges of others, don't know the worth of money.

The man who barters away his soul for the sake of filthy lucre, don't know the worth of money.

The wealthy man, who is still toiling and harassing himself to increase his store, who totally neglects his moral and religious culture, suffering his evil passions and unsanctified tempers and desires to rankle in his heart, watching his pecuniary interests with the utmost vigilance, while manifesting the greatest recklessness in regard to his spiritual welfare, don't know the worth of money.

The rich man who faithfully instills into his children the love of wealth, while he shows but very little interest for the salvation of their souls; who often instructs and warns them upon temporal interests, but rarely admonishes them about the evil of sin and the danger of losing their souls, and feels more anxiety for their temporal prosperity than for their eternal well-being, don't know the worth of money.

He who flatters himself that money will secure true friendship, don't know the worth of money.

"Can gold gain friendship?
Impudence of hope; as well
Mere man an angel might beget."

Money is a very useful article, and can command a great many of the luxuries and comforts of this life; but there are several things it cannot accomplish.

Money can't make a man happy while his heart is not right with God.

Money can't deliver the soul from the punishment of sin.

Money can't bribe disease and death.

G. SHAEFFER.

COLUMBUS, MISS, Sept. 3, 1869.

"I AM THE DOOR."—In a town in the north of Scotland, some boys were in the habit of meeting together for prayer. A little girl was passing and heard them sing. She stopped to listen, and thinking it was just an ordinary prayer meeting, she felt anxious to get in.—Putting up her hand, she pulled the latch, but the door would not open; it was fastened inside. She became very uneasy, and the thought arose in her mind: "What if this were the door of heaven, and me outside?" She went home, but could not sleep. Day after day she became more and more troubled at the thought of being shut out of heaven. She went from one prayer meeting to another, still finding no rest. At length, one day reading the tenth chapter of John, she came to the words: "I am the door." She paused, and read the verse again and again. Here was the very door she was seeking, and wide open too, and she entered in and found peace.—Eclectic Treasury.

GADSDEN DISTRICT MEETING.

This meeting was held at Lebanon, Alabama, commencing July 23, Bishop McTyeire presiding. The attendance was not as great as we anticipated, but those who were present seemed to be filled with the Spirit, and exhibited a zeal for the Master that will produce good fruit in the history of Methodism in this district. The meeting throughout was one of great interest. There was not a dull hour from the opening to the close. In consequence of so much business we had no preaching until night, which sermon was delivered by Brother Brandon, of Talladega district, with power from on high. His subject was calculated to excite great interest, as it was a Holy Ghost sermon in support of the ministry. The business meetings were far from dry, dull or tedious. The presence of a heart-warming spiritual influence was felt more or less at every meeting, when some question would kindle the Christian sympathies of the members. The sole object of the meeting was the growth and increase of Methodism. The committees were as follows, viz: Churches and parsonages, books and periodicals, Sabbath schools, education, missions and church extension, church finances, state of the church. These committees were appointed prior to the reports of the pastors, and as they reported each committee drew their estimates for reports. After culling from the reports of the pastors and consultation with the delegates from each charge, the committees reported as follows, viz:

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The average subscription to the church papers was about one to every seventeen members, but the increase of subscription was gradual, and ere long the Gadsden district would have her proportion of religious papers. It is a noted fact that the ablest and most pious members are subscribers to religious papers. The following papers were recommended, and the pastors exhorted to discharge their duties in obtaining larger circulations to these papers: The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was warmly supported as the organ of our Conference, and from this cause a necessity in every family. The Nashville Christian Advocate, the Southern Christian Advocate and the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist had each their claims presented for a larger circulation. Special attention was called to our Publishing House at Nashville, and the duties of the church to support it were strongly advocated and recommended.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The committee reported an increase of fifteen schools over that of last year, and a larger attendance at each school. The good derived from this powerful organization is being fully appreciated, and strenuous efforts are made to increase its utility, and impress upon parents the necessity of its support, both with purse and personal attendance. There is an increase of fifty-seven Sabbath school visitors over that of last year. A large number of the students are members of the church. The interests of Sabbath schools are gaining, and the cause is warmly supported in almost every community.

EDUCATION.

We have no denominational schools or colleges in the bounds of this district, but it was deemed expedient to build immediately, especially a female high school. The cause was nobly supported, and parents exhorted to patronize the institutions of our own church. The necessities of a complete and thorough education of the young were ably set forth, and the following institutions had their claims, as able and efficient schools, placed before the meeting: The East Alabama College, at Auburn, Alabama, the Female College, at Tuskegee, and the Centenary Institute, at Summerfield. The following resolutions were adopted in connection with the report on education:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that we should look to the immediate construction of a school for females in this district.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to do what we can to aid any worthy brother who may engage in this laudable enterprise.

MISSIONS AND CHURCH EXTENSION.

This report shows a sad neglect, but in a better condition than heretofore. Not quite half the assessment has been collected, but most of the pastors believe they will raise the amount assessed. As to church extension, we find that there are a number of new church buildings in course of erection, and that they are of a better style, more comfortable and durable. Although the entire district is occupied by our church, yet there are large neighborhoods destitute of Methodist church meetings. Resolutions of a local tenor were passed to remedy this evil.

CHURCH FINANCE.

The committee finds this subject covering so great a scope that they felt their inability to treat the subject properly, considering the time they had to prepare their report. Recommendations were drawn up and presented, which, if executed, will insure success to the stewards. The stewards of the district were exhorted to make the claims of the church a cash consideration, and collect the whole amount in advance; that the stewards hold their meeting as soon as they could ascertain the wants of the pastor, assess the different churches according to their ability to pay, and each steward of the different churches assess the members, and read it aloud at the first church meeting, and endeavor to secure the indorsement of each member, or heads of families, to the amount assessed. The Quarterly Conferences were urged to be more rigid with the stewards, and require of them a more prompt discharge of their duties. The pastors were recommended to take up their collections early in the year, so as to give time for renewing their collections, if necessary. The committee found most of the charges dilatory in supporting their preachers, but most of the stewards vouched for the amount assessed.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

The church is in a peaceable condition as to its relations with other denominations. There is a wanting of Christian vitality and spiritual mindedness. Worldly amusements exist to some extent, and in some cases they have led to open violation of the Discipline. A spirit of non-action, a masterly inactivity, pervades to some extent. These errors appear to be of the past more than present, for now there is evidently a spiritual growth over the entire district. The great size of the charges renders pastoral instruction and visitation almost impossible. The pastors, in their reports showing the number of miles traveled and sermons preached during the month, sustained the report of the committee. There is a larger church attendance than formerly. It is evident that so much labor or work as there is on large circuits has a bad influence, and the committee introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that small contiguous societies be consolidated wherever practicable, and the circuits so reduced as to enable the pastor to give each appointment Sabbath preaching.

It was decided to hold the next District Meeting at Spring Creek camp ground.

The selection of delegates to the Annual Conference resulted in the election of F. M. Roberts, local preacher, W. T. Shook, church steward, W. T. Slaton, Sunday school superintendent, P. W. Harbour, church steward; alternates: Jool Weems, P. J. Chisolm, W. N. Cowan and Stephen Furgerson.

Resolution to form a North Alabama Conference was offered and adopted.

A motion, made and carried, to publish a synopsis of the proceedings in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The meeting then adjourned sine die.

W. T. SLATON, Sec'y.

THE average time required for a finger nail to attain its full length (from the root to the commencement of the free edge,) is about four and a half calendar months. The toe nails grow much more slowly.

Jasper District, Mobile Conference.

JASPER, ALA., Aug. 25, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: We have entered upon the camp meeting season in this district. The campaign opened on the 13th instant, in Bristoe's Cove, Murphree's Valley circuit. The attendance was large, the behavior was good, and the result far beyond our expectations. The only seeming drawback was the want of ministerial help. Instead of finding twenty or more preachers there from abroad, we only found Brother J. B. Powers, the pastor, and his faithful corps of local preachers. This made heavy work for those who were there; but the Lord was there in great power. The good accomplished in the church was certainly great, and in the right direction. In addition to the usual work of reclaiming backsliders, stirring up the lukewarm and quickening the vitality of all, there was much done in raising the standard of holiness and enlarging the sphere of Christian duty. From the best information we could get there must have been at least fifty conversions. So large was the congregation, and so general was the work—so many going and coming—that it was impossible to get correct statistics. On one occasion the entire stand or harbor was one vast altar, all over which sinners were crying aloud for mercy, or some new-born soul was telling the story of redeeming love! I noticed one scene that was truly touching. On the very outskirts of the congregation I saw a group deeply interested, watching the result of something which they seemed to regard as of great moment. As I drew near I saw, in the centre of the circle, a little girl, who had just found the pearl of great price, talking to an old gray-headed sinner. There was a man who had steeled his stubborn heart for many long rebellious years; who had stood unmoved by the heaviest artillery on the walls of Zion; but now, as he listens to the simple story of the Cross, as it falls from those tiny lips, he is cut to the heart—he bows, he prays, he believes, and he is saved!

Mr. Editor, it is true we had some noise, but not half as much as John heard in heaven; we admit that there was also some excitement, but can there be any true work of grace without excitement? Yet, after watching and analyzing every development closely, we do not hesitate to pronounce it a genuine revival—just such a revival as we pray God to send the church in all this country.

Bristoe's Cove is a little world of itself; and if all the world were doing as well as this little one, we would begin to look for the millennium. There is a Sunday school at the camp ground church whose praise ought to be "in all the churches." It is composed of nearly everybody in the community. Old and young, parents and children, all take part in its exercises. They meet daily every Sabbath, bring their dinners, and make a day's work of it. A good deal of time is devoted to singing; hence nearly everybody in this community sings, and the most of them have a pretty good knowledge of vocal music. With such a choir as this to lead a camp meeting congregation, you may easily imagine that the anthems of praise which arose from that vast song-inspired throng were grand beyond description!

There are many, many more items I would like to notice, but I am too feeble to write more at present. I am literally worked down. In making two rounds on the district I have preached enough to have filled the regular appointments for two years. We have four more camp meetings to hold. Nearly every pastor in the district is now in the midst of a revival. Cries for help are coming in from every quarter. May the great Head of the Church bless His workmen and carry on His work. Yours in Christ,

J. M. BOLAND.

E SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

GREENSBORO, ALA., Sept. 1, 1869.

t the last annual meeting of Board of Trustees of the thern University we were apointed a committee to prepare address to the people of the th in behalf of that institution: had a liberal endowment at the mencement of the late national culties, but like all other South- institutions it was prostrated the result of the war. It has to rely for its existence upon liberality of an impoverished generous and enterprising peo- and upon their encouragement patronage. The University is ated in a healthy region of coun- fertile in soil, abounding in pro- tions, and blessed with an intel- ent and refined population. No ce or community in this vast ntry possesses a greater share the elements which make life de- able and felicitous than the town Greensboro. Its moral and in- llectual characteristics are of the t order, and the young men of country can obtain boarding and ial intercourse in the most cul- ated and refined families in Ala- ma. The people are hospitable generous, and all are willing to ertain as many young men as ey can accommodate in their uses. There is a sufficiency of ivate boarding houses of the class luded to for the entertainment of as ny students as the University is repared to receive. As to instruc- on, the curriculum is of the highest andard. The faculty consists of Dr. Wadsworth, chairman, Prof. Wills, fessor of mathematics, Prof. Ca- y, of languages, Prof. Lupton, of the atural sciences, and the prepara- ry department will be under the harge of an able and competent acher. We can confidently say at no institution in this country ossesses an abler or more indus- ious faculty. Their instruction is horough, and no one can obtain a iploma without possessing a high tandard of scholarship.

We do think that the University as strong claims on the Southern eople, and especially on the mem- ers of the Methodist Church South, nder whose patronage it was es- ablished and has been sustained, and e make an earnest appeal in its ehalf, in this the hour of its need, o the public and to the church.

Let us try, by all means, to sus- ain our institutions, and they, un- er the providence of God, will be blessing to this and coming gen- rations. A commendable State ride, a love of country, a love f virtue and pure religion should timulate us to maintain and up- old this noble and Christian in- titution. What more can we say? We leave the subject with the pub- lic and the church. Do your duty, nd heaven will bless you and crown the University with success nd prosperity.

Very respectfully,

Brookhaven District Meeting.

FOREST HOME, near Summit, Miss., September 7, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: This meeting convened September 2, 1869, at Beauregard station, on the New Orleans Jackson and Great Northern Railroad. No quorum on the 2d. Rev. Geo F. Thompson, presiding elder, in the chair. Rev. Robert B. Downer elected secretary. September 3 and 4 were profitably spent by a very fair representation from most every part of the district. Some circuits not represented, owing to a series of protracted meetings being in progress, and pastors would not leave the work to come down. Brother E A. Flowers being sick, reported nigh unto death, prayer was offered in his behalf.

The various committees appointed at the meeting duly reported, and the resolutions annexed to them were passed, but not without careful inspection. Some ultra measures, a little out of the order of our Book of Discipline, found a burial, not on account of any defect in love for Southern Methodism, however, but the District Meeting not being indued with power to execute them. Religious services held each day, morning and night, with marked spiritual good. The district, from the report of pastors for the past two months' labor, shows an awakening upon all that pertains to a closer walk with God. A resolution was passed asking the General Conference to legalize District Meetings. Lay delegates to the Annual Conference were elected, to wit: Rev. William H. Mullins, local preacher, Jessie Thompson, Isaac V. Enochs, Captain D. C. Wright; alternates, Rev. E. G. Cook, Henry Hoskins, J. C. Williamson and David Gillis.

BE YE ALSO READY.

Brother minister, are you ready? Ready for what? To give an account of your stewardship this hour.

Come, leave the business of worldly matters for a short time. Let the Spirit of God accompany you into your closet, light your lamp, disrobe your soul, stand before the bar of God's word, witness the Holy Spirit, and your own conscience; then ask yourself: "Am I called of God to minister in holy things? If so, what evidence have I that I am entirely the Lord's—that I am doing the will of God on earth as angels do it in heaven—that my eye is single to God's glory in everything I think, say and do? Not that I have preached so many sermons, am appreciated by a loving congregation, as a talented speaker or doctor of divinity; that I am a Bishop or presiding elder, and therefore must be acceptable in God's sight. No, nothing of the kind. But am I entirely consecrated to the service of God, pay or no pay, sunshine or clouds, appreciated or overlooked, hard appointment or an easy one?" Are your body, time, talents, property, yea wife, children, reputation, all, all calmly resting, as a living sacrifice, on God's altar, to be forever the Lord's? Have you once made the consecration, then removed the sacrifice? Is it before the Lord now?

Are you a local preacher? Why are you local? Come, brother, are you ready, even while sin abounds in the land and the love of many has waxed cold? "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

IT IS SAID by an old trapper in the Rocky mountains that the winds are milder and damper than formerly. It seems, too, that the fall of rain is more frequent and copious in Utah and other parts of the far West than formerly, and the rivers have increased in volume.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. ENOCH NICHOLAS TALLY.

The subject of this notice was born in St. Mary's county, Georgia, April 25, 1800, but removed with his parents to St. Landry parish, Louisiana, in 1804. Of his childhood and youth we have no data, only that at an early age his heart became the subject of Divine operations, and, yielding to the overtures of mercy, he experienced and professed conversion, connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for a time ran well. But subsequently, through the influence of wicked associates, and perhaps for lack of faithful admonition by the church and ministry, he relapsed into sin, and continued therein till he was about twenty-four or twenty five years of age, when it pleased God to reawaken and restore him to His gracious favor. Soon afterward, feeling that to him was committed a dispensation of the Gospel of the grace of God, he applied for and obtained license to preach. He was recommended and admitted into the Mississippi Conference at a session held at Woodville, about 1825-26—we judge only from circumstances, and therefore may be incorrect. He entered with alacrity upon what he intended should be his life-long employment; and feeling that his early educational advantages and acquirements had not been commensurate to the demands of his new position, he applied himself assiduously to the acquisition of knowledge, both scientific and theological, in connection with and as an adjunct to the great work of saving souls, in which he was "in labor most abundant." And such were his efforts and success that only a few years had elapsed before his name had become a tower of strength, and his earnest piety, zeal in and devotion to the cause a guarantee of usefulness. An unction from the Holy One accompanied his ministrations, so that many were awakened, converted and comforted through his instrumentality.

We cannot, from the data before us, name the different charges filled by him during the fifteen years of his connection with the regular pastorate. But this we do know, that he occupied the highest positions in the gift of the Bishop. Well do we remember him in the days of our nonage, first as pastor of the charge, and subsequently as presiding elder of the district in which we lived, and can testify that in the estimation of the church in that region none excelled him in those developments of mind and traits of character which constitute the true ministerial status. He is still remembered by many of the old members of the church in that section as the instrument, in the hand of God, of their salvation.

When he had traveled fifteen years his physical energies had become so exhausted, through excessive labors, as to require rest in order to recuperation; and believing that it was in accordance with the Divine will that he should become the head of a family, he united in marriage with Mrs. Leonida Catching, located and settled on the east bank of Pearl river, in Simpson county, Mississippi, where he lived—with the exception, perhaps, of a brief sojourn at Georgetown for the purpose of affording his children some educational advantages—up to the time of his death.

As a local preacher he labored zealously and effectively whenever his often and constantly increasing infirmities would permit. He loved the ministry and church, and was a faithful and able counselor of the one, and a jealous guardian of the interests of the other. He had ever a kind word and godly admonition for all with whom he mingled. We always felt that time was well spent in association with him, and are thankful that, from early youth up to the high noon of life, it was our privilege to enjoy an acquaintance with him. The last time we met him was at the church at Georgetown, and but a short time before his death. He was then in feeble health, but strong in faith, giving glory to God. During service his countenance became radiant with celestial light, while tears of heartfelt joy rolled down his time furrowed cheeks. Little did we think that would be our last interview on earth, but He who doeth all things well so ordered, in His providence, that before our next visit he was gone to the better land. During his illness, and when it was apparent that he must die, his eldest daughter asked him what she must write to Uncle Turner—Rev. J. M. Turner, an old and valued friend of his, residing in Texas; to which he replied, "Tell him that I am going home to heaven."

He suffered much, but patiently, until on the 23d of November, 1868, the weary wheels of life stood still, and our dear friend was numbered with the blessed on high. Thus passed away from earth a Christian of earnest, active piety, and a minister of far more than ordinary ability and usefulness. Truly, a prince and a leader has fallen in Israel; but heaven has gained a saint richly endowed with all the traits which constitute the true nobility of blood-redeemed and sanctified spirits on high.

He has left an aged companion, two sons, two daughters, and a numerous circle of relatives, friends and brethren to mourn their loss. But we sorrow not as others who have no hope.

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle's fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

COUNSELS TO YOUNG MEN.

Extracts from Commodore Maury's address to the graduates of the Virginia Military Institute:

"Ye'll try the world soon, my lad,
And Andrew, dear, believe me,
Ye'll find mankind an unco' squad,
And muckle they may grieve ye."

You have requested me, gentlemen of the graduating class, to give you a few parting words of advice. Considering the people to which you belong; the Christian principles and moral virtues which have been instilled into you at home; the precepts taught you here; and the examples that have been set before you by your teachers and professors in the daily walks of life, I might content myself by simply reading the advice given by Burns to a young friend, from which I have snatched a couplet to attract your attention, with the hope that you will read it at leisure, and profit by it also.

But you desire something fresher than that, and I agree with you in this; for I think that the time, the occasion and the circumstances by which we are surrounded, all call for something especial.

You are about to turn over a new leaf in life's history, and to commence, each one of you, upon a stage as wide as the world, to enact your part in the great drama. What that part shall be depends mainly upon your own choice. As to the brilliancy of the performance, that depends not a little upon the opportunity; but for its real merits it will depend chiefly upon the resolves which you may write upon that newly-turned leaf, and upon the fidelity with which you may carry them out. What these resolves should be are suggested by the cardinal virtues and dictated by the golden rule. It is needless for me to repeat them to you. * * *

Cast your eye over the world, and you will see that the men who observe and think are few. Why? Because we are all prone to indolence. One of the thinkers of the day tells us that "an immense majority of men always remain in a middle state, neither very foolish nor very able; neither very virtuous nor very vicious; but slumbering on in a peaceful and decent mediocrity, adopting, without much difficulty, the current opinions of the day, making no inquiry, exciting no scandal, causing no wonder; but just holding themselves on a level with their generation, and noiselessly conforming to the standard of morals and of knowledge common to the age and country in which they live." A vast majority! He means not ten, but tens of thousands to one.

I take it for granted that every young man that is trained up as you have been goes out into the world with aspiration for something higher than merely to drift down the tide of time with such as these.

"Are we, then," you may ask, to "devote our lives mainly to physical research, and to the observation and study of nature—her laws?" By no means. Every one of you will probably adopt some calling or other. It may be in the arts, it may be in literature, it may be in the humanities, or it may be in some branch of the applied sciences. But, be the specialty what it may, your first aim is to master the calling, striving so to acquit yourself in it as to win the confidence and esteem of all with whom it may bring you in contact. But no one calling satisfies the craving of the truly noble mind. You are members of society; you owe duties to it, and will possess influence upon it—some more, some less. But every one will have, may you already have, influence with some members of it—powerful for good or for evil. Let it be a rule always to use that influence for good.

But there is time for all this, and to spare. To keep the mind vigorous, healthful and strong, the different faculties—the different apartments of the brain—like the different muscles of the body, require frequently to be brought into play and exercised, that they may be strengthened. Therefore give now and then a moment of relaxation from the stern duties of life, to observation and contemplation of such features of God's handiwork as may be congenial to your tastes, aspirations and fancies. If you have a fancy for literature, poetry or the fine arts, cultivate it. It is a gift, and therefore not, without irreverence, to be despised or neglected. Take care, gentlemen; these gifts and advantages of yours are as money lent you, to be put out on usury. They are precious talents and not to be buried in a napkin.

Strive, also, to cultivate at least some one of the departments of physical science—not as a smatterer, nor, necessarily, as an expert, but master it sufficiently to understand its principles and to find companionship among its phenomena. I know of no mental habit more worthy of zealous cultivation than the habit of close and attentive observation. Man, you know, more than any other creature, has the facility of observing and remembering, of collecting and comparing, and of drawing conclusions by the lights of reason. Now, remember, that it is chiefly by bringing these powers and attributes to bear upon the facts and phenomena of nature that the world has been brought from the rude condition of ancient days to its present advanced state of industrial energy and material prosperity. Remember, that to observe nature does not require those rare powers that the young, especially, are apt to fancy. All of us, each in his way, are observers of nature; and it is the faculty of noticing what comes under the eye, and of striving, each in his own way, to trace effect back to cause, that I am advising you to cultivate and nourish until it ripens into habit.

You remember it was the fact, familiar to others, no doubt, but first noticed by a pump maker, that led to the invention of the barometer, an instrument which now daily and hourly saves ships and their crews, merchants and their fortunes, from wreck and disaster.

The whole science of electricity has grown out of a fact first noticed in the kitchen.

A traveler bought a writing desk in England, brought it to this country, and observed that it soon began to warp, crack and split. The fact led to the discovery of a most important meteorological circumstance, viz: that the climate of America is dryer than the climate of England.

And so with many other discoveries—as the aberration of light, by noticing that the wind-vane on board a vessel under sail pointed differently the moment she anchored.

Every physical fact, by whomsoever observed, is, when placed in its true connections, a discovery, an invention; and all such facts are like the sheaf of magic wheat—the more it is thrashed the more it yields.

Here let me remind you that I do not wish you to infer too much. In citing these examples, and urging you to observation and study, I do not wish you to understand that I am holding them up to you as the chief incentive why you should observe and study the phenomena of nature. Far from it. The chief incentive which I wish to hold out to you for study is, the idea that it will certainly make you wiser and better men, and may make you benefactors, if not of the world, at least of your own people. What you are to observe is the work of God—a writing by holy fingers, and spread out before you by omnipotent hands, with gems and precious stones, for your good, your enjoyment and your delight. The pleasures and the profit which the fondest student of history, or the most devoted admirer of romance, of song or of story, or the greatest lover of music derives from reveling in his specialty, is not to be envied for a moment by the observing student of nature as he passes over this great and mighty tome, which the Creator has garnished with the stars above, spread out in the air, suspended in the trees, written upon the landscape, engraved upon the rock, and buried in the earth.

A REMARKABLE CONVERSION.

Adoniram Judson, the illustrious American missionary, was a minister's son; he was very able and very ambitious. He was early sent to college. In the class above was a young man of the name of E——, brilliant, witty and popular, but a determined Deist. Between him and the minister's son there sprang up a close intimacy, which ended in the latter gradually renouncing all his early beliefs, and becoming as great a skeptic as his friend. He was only twenty years of age, and you may be sure it was a terrible distress and consternation which filled the home circle when, during the recess, he announced that he was no longer a believer in Christianity. More than a match for his father's arguments, he steeled himself against all softer influences, and with his mind made up to enjoy life and see the world, he first joined a company of players at New York, and then set out on a solitary tour. One night he stopped at a country inn. Lighting him to his room, the landlord mentioned that he had been obliged to place him next door to a young man who was exceedingly ill, in all probability dying, but he hoped that it would occasion him no uneasiness. Judson assured him that, beyond pity for the poor sick man, he should have no feeling whatever. Still the night proved a restless one. Sounds came from the sick chamber—sometimes the movements of the watchers, sometimes the groans of the sufferer, and the young traveler could not sleep. "So close at hand, with but a thin partition between us," he thought, "there is an immortal spirit about to pass into eternity, and is he prepared?" And then he thought, "For shame of my shallow philosophy! What would E——, so intellectual and clear-headed, think of this boyish weakness?" And then he tried to sleep, but still the picture of the dying man rose up to his imagination. He was a "young man," and the young student felt compelled to place himself on his neighbor's dying bed, and he could not help fancying what, in such circumstances, would be his thoughts. But the morning dawned, and in the welcome daylight his "superstitious illusions fled away." When he came down stairs he inquired of the landlord how his fellow-lodger had passed the night. "He is dead!" was the answer. "Dead?" "Yes; he is gone, poor fellow; the doctor said he would probably not survive the night." "Do you know who he was?" "Oh, yes; it was a young man from Providence College; a very fine fellow; his name was E—." Judson was completely stunned. Hours passed before he could quit the house; but when he did resume his journey, the words Dead! lost! lost! were continually ringing in his ears. There was no need for argument. God had spoken, and from the presence of the living God the chimeras of unbelief and the pleasures of sin alike fled away. The religion of the Bible he knew to be true; and turning his horse's head toward Plymouth, he rode slowly homeward, his plans of enjoyment all shattered, and ready to commence that rough and uninviting path which, through the death prison at Ava and its rehearsal of martyrdom, conducted to the grave at Maulmain.—Dr. James Hamilton.

THE Bechuana mission in South Africa indirectly owed its establishment to the Moravian missions in Greenland. When the famous English missionary, Robert Moffat, was a lad of twenty years, he happened to see, in crossing a bridge into Warrington, a missionary placard on the wall. He says:

"I read, and looked, and read again. I felt as if I could not leave the spot. I am persuaded that some standing by who saw me standing so long looking at a placard must have supposed that I was learning to read. I found the meeting had been held some time before. I hastened to transact the little I had to do in town, returned after taking another look at the old placard, and wended my way back to High Leigh another man. An entire revolution had taken place in my views and prospects within those few hours. On my homeward path memory brought out of her store stories which, when a little boy, I was wont to hear my mother read of the labors and toils of the Moravian missionaries in Greenland and elsewhere. These had from that period lain dormant, but now rose to view with all the influences of living realities."

He immediately sought out a man whose name was on the placard, gave up his flattering prospects for life, and devoted himself to the mission work. During the half century he has been among the Beohuanas he has seen them advance very far from barbarism to civilization, with an influence radiating around for hundreds of miles.

TO AGENTS.

It will greatly simplify matters if brethren who have funds in hand which they propose to pay over at Conference, will send them forward at once. We wish to enjoy preaching at Conference, and not be compelled to occupy the whole time in collecting bills.

REWARD THE MESSENGER.

We appeal to our agents to send us five hundred subscribers during the next two months. We think the request reasonable. Our church is alive again, if we may judge by the gracious seasons that are everywhere refreshing her. This ADVOCATE adds fuel to the flame, because it is the messenger bearing good news from one part of Zion to another. It has ever been the custom with princes to reward those who were so fortunate as to be the bearers of important information, when favorable and desirable. Great victories have conferred upon the swift courier a necklace of gold; and shall this faithful bearer of such blessed news, as was in our columns last week and this, go unrewarded? Are not the triumphs of the kingdom of our Lord worthy of some return, some faint recognition in the person of one who brings the note of victory? "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation!"

Let those warm-hearted men and women who praise God for every revival prolong the sound by spreading this paper. New converts should be indoctrinated at once. Begin by putting in their hands the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Show them of what the church consists—her bulwarks, her palaces. Let them walk about Zion, and see how beautiful and how strong is the Israel of God. Let them feel a hedge is about them to protect them from the enemy. Arm them with the word of God, the Discipline, the hymn book and the ADVOCATE, if you would teach one to chase a thousand, or two to put ten thousand foes to flight.

BISHOP PAINE'S LIFE OF BISHOP MCKENDREE — The Nashville Advocate gives copious extracts from the advanced sheets of this interesting biography. Judging from the chapter quoted this is the most important and original contribution to Methodist history ever published in this country.

DENOMINATIONAL HISTORY.

Our literature is becoming every day richer in history and biography. These histories of Methodism ought to exert a quickening and wholesome influence upon the church. Our doctrines are the subject of misrepresentation, and the circumstances attending the beginning and growth of the church are habitually warped and misstated. Our doctrines and government are caricatured by our enemies, and our youth are led away from the communion of their fathers. Were they thoroughly instructed in the history of the denomination, they could not thus easily be perverted and imposed on. Observation leads us to the conclusion that our denominational history, including biography, is sadly neglected, and that there is a surprising amount of indifference and ignorance among Methodists in reference to the origin and growth of the church. In this respect we may be growing worse rather than better, and the younger generation now coming upon the stage is perhaps not so well informed as that which is passing away.

The distinctive doctrines of our church are better presented historically than in any other form. We see them in the great revivals of the Wesleys, and of their sons in the Gospel in America, as the very life of the movement. Justification by faith, the witness of the Spirit, and the new birth are no abstractions under the preaching of those chosen men of God. Free grace, as opposed to the horrible dogma of Calvinism, is illustrated and displayed in the proclamation of mercy to all. The formal statement of our doctrines, and their vindication in the pulpit and in the catechetical instruction of the young, is necessary; but there is a peculiar advantage in the study of them, as they glow in the stirring conflicts and triumphs of the church in its organization and subsequent development. They have in their historical exhibition an overwhelming authentication, and a singular seal of their divine truth. The success of Methodism is in a large measure due to her distinctive doctrines, and these doctrines, to be fully appreciated, should be seen in their historical statement.

The same is true of church polity. Our discipline and government are illuminated by the history of their adoption. What is peculiar to us is best understood when seen in its historical associations, and the entire structure needs no other vindication than that which impartial history supplies. The growth of Methodism into a church, and the origin of its usages and various disciplinary provisions, attest its providential mission. In the light of history our government is displayed as eminently practical and scriptural. Every feature of it was adopted under the clearest indications of immediate utility. The results, as recorded by the pen of history, sufficiently exhibit the wisdom and effectiveness of our organization.—People have been sometimes grossly imposed on by ignorant or willful falsifications in reference to the purpose of Mr. Wesley in forming a church, and in reference to the character of our ministry. Churchmen, in their attempts to pervert our members, represent Mr. Wesley as opposed to the entire plan of Methodism as a distinct church organization. The facts of history, especially as they relate to American Methodism, plainly refute these errors.

It is a very difficult matter to comprehend our church as it is, in its doctrines and government, without referring to their origin and manifestation in our history. An intelligent and thorough understanding of our ecclesiastical structure must be based upon a knowledge of its history. The influence of denominational history is of a conservative tendency. The old landmarks are not easily obliterated when seen in their relation to the effectiveness and glory of the past. Reckless innovations are generally associated with ignorance or forgetfulness of the early times. It is thus in political matters, and also in the affairs of churches. An accurate acquaintance with the reason and origin of our institutions and usages tends to caution. Where this knowledge exists we shall not, without abundant deliberation, part with the old or take up that which is new. Whilst the lesson of our history is a check upon extreme and revolutionary measures, it is also an incentive to real progress. Conservatism and true progress are in perfect harmony when guided by historical experience. When separated from such experience, the one assumes the character of obstinate stupidity, and the other of rash improvidence.

There is that in our history which is calculated to improve the spirituality of the church. The demonstration and power of the early ministry, and the tides of converting grace which have swept over communities and countries, serve to strengthen our faith and to rebuke our unbelief. The examples of self-denial and suffering in the cause of Christ, which abound in the planting of Methodism, both in the Old and the New World, condemn self-indulgence and incite to a more rigorous self-renunciation. In those days "of the right hand of the Most High" the Gospel was indeed "the power of God," and miracles of grace were displayed on every side. Apart from the Bible itself, we believe there is no reading so adapted to stimulate our piety, and to give it tone and depth, as Methodist history. This is true of all ecclesiastical history. Daubigney's History of the Reformation has fired many a cold, backslidden heart with renewed interest in the service of God. Our own histories have doubtless imbued thousands of laggard souls with new life and devotion; and they have been a perennial fountain, to replenish the sometimes wasted and flagging energies of the church.

Another and important influence of our denominational histories is their power to incite devotion and love to the church. They foster a right sectarianism, and instill an unconquerable attachment to the doctrines and usages of Methodism. Our past as a church is one of which we need not be ashamed. It is a record of moral heroism, and the relation of events which transcend the wonders of epic creation. The chapters which describe the heroic times of our church are invested with more than romantic interest, and the great characters who occupy our attention draw us with a magnetic power. No one can rise from the perusal of such a work as the Life of McKendree without feeling a more enthusiastic devotion to Methodism. It is this aspect of historical influence that we must cherish—this special phase of it which deepens our affection for the church, and that kindles an ardor for the Wesleyan economy. Where love and enthusiasm for Methodism is thus implanted and inspired, our people will rarely be shaken in their allegiance to the church. Thus taught to love and admire our institutions, the young will seldom do so disgraceful a thing as to repudiate the people amongst whom they have been reared.

For these and many other reasons we would urge the utmost circulation of our historical literature. A thorough acquaintance with it will cure many evils in the church, and be productive of the greatest benefits. The young, especially, should be instructed in the history of Methodism, and be thus fortified and guarded against the arts of those who would seduce and alienate them from our communion. Our Sunday schools ought to have historical catechisms and a text-book of Methodist history, and parents should make their children familiar with the rise and progress of the church. In our family libraries, and those of our Sunday schools, the histories and biographies of the denomination should be prominent. Our pastors might, with great profit, deliver occasional lectures to their congregations on Methodist history.

RIGHTEOUSNESS exalteth a nation. It makes the laborious cheerful, the studious useful, the poor rich in faith, and the rich poor in spirit.

ROME OR NOTHING.

To advance the Romish Church is the one idea, the one controlling policy of the Catholics who are now in office. To this they are forced by the priests who determine who shall and who shall not receive the solid Catholic vote. By losing sight of every other interest, this body of voters have succeeded to an extent that is incredible in accumulating for this church an immense property. A writer in the Atlantic Monthly is of opinion that "our Roman Catholic brethren" own $50,000,000 worth of buildings and lands in the diocese of New York alone; and this diocese includes only the southern part of that State. This vast sum has been accumulated in the past sixty years. In 1847 the politicians of New York began to recognize this church party, and to buy it up with appropriations. In 1849 $9,000 were given to certain Sisters of Charity in Buffalo. From year to year these benefactions increased, until in 1866 the "Charity Bill," for various religious asylums, amounted for the State at large to $129,025,49. Of this a Jewish society received $2,484 32, four Protestant organizations had $2,367 03, while the balance, $124,174 14, went to Roman Catholic establishments. This is aside from the sums voted in the city of New York by its Common Council. In 1867 it paid to Catholic ecclesiastical institutions the sum of $200,000. The comptroller of that State reports as paid to orphan asylums, etc, during 1868, $141,328,84, and added that this sum is exclusive of $201,000 appropriated by the "Charity Bill." In the same report it is stated that in 1857 three blocks of property were leased perpetually to Sisters of Mercy, to two asylums—property worth the sum of $3,000,000—for the annual rent of $3; so that by political art alone the Romanists managed to raise their annual receipts from $13,000 in 1849, to nearly $500,000 in 1868.

While this was going on the same church party began its war upon the public schools of that State. First it objected to the Bible in the schools; next it insisted that the public schools be made rigorously secular; then that sectarian schools be supported by the State; and now it urges vehemently that all secular schools shall be abolished as seminaries of atheism.

It even goes beyond this, and insists on having a certain proportion of the educational funds handed over to the Catholic clergy. This is, to be sure, exactly what the Roman priests try to secure everywhere, but exactly what every government in Europe, even in Catholic countries, now denies them. What they have had wrested from them in Austria and Italy they expect to obtain here.

This open-handedness, which has bestowed millions in value of the best lands belonging to the city of New York upon the Catholic Church, may find its explanation in the following list of its office holders, for 1868, who are Catholics: The sheriff, register, comptroller, city chamberlain, corporation counsel, police commissioners, president of the Croton Board, acting mayor and president of the Board of Aldermen, president of the Board of Councilmen, president of the Board of Supervisors, clerk of the Common Council, clerk of the Board of Councilmen; five justices of the Courts of Record, all the civil justices, all but two of the police justices, all the police court clerks, three out of four coroners, two members of Congress, three out of five State Senators, eighteen out of twenty-one members of Assembly, fourteen-nineteenths of the Common Council, and eight-tenths of the supervisors. In reading this list one asks, Does the Catholic Church so far outnumber the Protestant in the State and city of New York? Not at all; the Catholics compose not over one fifth of the population. The result is secured by their sticking together, and knowing nothing but the political and financial advancement of the Romish Church. Should such a predominance of Methodists be in the New York Council it would create some alarm, especially if it were perceived that they were using the resources of the State to build up their own churches and schools.

The New York Independent, in its last issue, sets down the aggregate population of the Methodist Church in the United States at eight millions. Let us suppose that this body of Protestants swarmed and held together politically, as the Catholics are now doing in New York, Louisiana and everywhere else, and had but one idea, one policy, namely, the enriching the Methodist Church; that it voted in block, whipped in every one of its own politicians to its support, lost sight of every public interest, made war upon the public schools, and sacrificed every other public good to the aggrandizement of itself. Would the country endure it?

Previous to the recent election we had occasion to show that twenty out of twenty-four of the aldermen of New Orleans were Catholics; that the annual appropriations of this State, for the support of Catholic institutions, had swelled from $6,000 in 1846, to $56,000 in 1867; that this city is giving away the public money largely to the same object; and that, like the horse-leech, these Romanists are still unsatisfied, but moving heaven and earth to get control of the school funds. To those statements we have now added the above summary of the doings of this church party in the State of New York. They show the organization of Rome in this country to be compact, thorough and unrelenting. The immense advantage which this drill and system give amid the loose and shifting course of politics in a republic cannot be overestimated. A country whose population consists of twenty-seven millions of Protestants and five millions of Catholics we might suppose to be safe enough; but if this five millions constitute one phalanx under one leader, while the twenty-seven millions are divided about equally into two parties, Whig and Democrat, it is easy to see which may control the country. Whether a republican system of government can survive a large infusion of Romanism is the fearful problem which we are now solving. Under Roman guidance the Republic of Mexico passed into hopeless anarchy.—What this python may grow to here, in the next twenty-five years, may be estimated by the facts which we have presented

TO MERCHANTS AND OTHERS.

We do not know what are the conditions which are thought to be absolutely essential to a good advertising medium. But if a paper that goes to more towns, cross roads and settlements of the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana than any other in the Southwest be one of the conditions, then this ADVOCATE is, in so far, a good medium. Several hundred Southern Methodist preachers are in the four Annual Conferences lying in these States, every one of whom is a reader, and an agent for its dissemination. We believe that there is no other such complete agency in the Gulf States for widely circulating a paper. To those who wish to advertise for city readers we may offer no unusual advantages; to those who wish to be known in the country we do present the most superior.

Our terms are precisely those of the city weeklies; but we are so far from competing with them that it is doubtful if nine-tenths of our readers ever see any other New Orleans paper. The merchant who puts his card in this ADVOCATE addresses a new audience, no matter how much he may advertise elsewhere. The main object of the paper is to furnish religious, literary, agricultural and scientific information for the families of our people. We also furnish them the current commercial, financial and political news. To this we add a few advertisements.

THE New Orleans District Meeting will be held in the Carondelet street church of this city, on the first Saturday and Sunday in November—6th and 7th.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

THE REV. SHADRACH HARGISS.

This excellent man died on the 27th of August, at his home in West Virginia, of typhoid fever. His last words were: "Blessed Jesus, blessed Jesus." We had a delightful acquaintance with him, which began in 1866, during the session, in this city, of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he was a member. As a minister he had seen much service in various appointments on mission, circuit, station and district. He was also for some time the editor of the Christian Observer, published at Catlettsburg, Kentucky. He was born in Burke county, North Carolina, on the 5th of May, 1805; was licensed to preach in 1846, and was admitted into the traveling connection in 1852. We quote from the Observer the following just estimate of this beloved servant of Christ:

Brother Hargiss was a man of much study and thought; of a calm, reflective mind, yet a mind of great energy and zeal, putting forth efforts and unwearied labor in his investigations for the discovery of truth. And although a man who felt and appreciated the joys of social and domestic life, yet he ever felt a deep sympathy for the prosperity and happiness of all around him. As a friend he was constant, true, generous and confiding; as a counselor he was clear, prudent and reliable; as a Christian he was humble, conscientious and trustful; as a minister of the everlasting Gospel he was unswerving in the discharge of duty, sound in doctrine, ardent in his attachment to the church, clearheaded in his illustrations, and spiritual in his devotions. Although he had passed the bright meridian of manhood, yet he ceased not to labor and investigate the doctrines of the Bible, and delve deeper into the mysteries of redemption, and was continually bringing forth the hidden stores of knowledge and giving them to the church.

Before becoming the editor of the Christian Observer, he matured his subjects of thought and investigation under the process of his pen, and his writings were abundant, and though deep and grave subjects claimed the attention of his pen, yet he frequently turned aside and consulted the Muses, and his poetical productions were characterized with richness of thought and delicacy of feeling, showing the influences of religion upon the heart under the various vicissitudes of life.

The Colored Church Paper.

The following programme has been put forth in the Memphis Christian Advocate. Brother Watson has the enterprise, the generosity, and the indomitable purpose which can command success; and we wish him success in all the good that his heart devises. We think it about time for the more sensible part of the colored people to be tired of the whang and sing song which for several years past they have had in place of the Gospel. Occasionally of late they are to be seen in their old places listening to the word of life. We patiently wait for their sober second reason to assert itself. A paper properly edited will greatly enlighten and conserve them.

THE COLORED CHURCH PAPER—The Colored Conferences desiring an organ, and having been requested to undertake the publication, I have consented to do so, whenever sufficient subscribers have been obtained to defray actual expenses—say one thousand subscribers.

The object of the paper will be to promote the moral and religious, and the mental and physical well-being of the colored people, and to aid in carrying out the policy, present and prospective, of the Southern Methodist General Conference in reference to those of them in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

TERMS.—One dollar a year in advance, the money to be refunded if the paper should not be published. The preachers, white as well as colored, will please act as agents.

Address S. WATSON,
Memphis, Tennessee.

All our church papers will please copy this notice and keep it standing.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

REVIVALS.

The gracious shower still falls. One of our oldest itinerants writes that he has not seen such an outpouring in forty years. A letter from a friend, dated Marshall, Texas, August 31, says: "There has been a most gracious revival of religion in this town during the past two weeks, resulting in the conversion of between sixty and seventy souls, and about fifty accessions."

One or Two Political Items.

THE OHIO ELECTION.—Great interest is naturally felt in the approaching State election in Ohio. The issues involved are sharply defined, and are of a very momentous character. The Democrats, with Mr. Pendleton as their champion, go into the contest without conditions, on the following grounds:

1. Opposition to the fifteenth amendment and to negro suffrage.
2. Payment of the bonds in green backs
3. Taxation of bonds on the same terms as all other property.

The old questions about the war are ignored, dismissed and avoided by the Democrats. They insist that the war is no longer before the people, and the questions to be decided are of present and future interest.

These principles have a commonsense ring which will, we think, command the support of the masses throughout the country. That $2,000,000,000 of property should be held entirely exempt from taxation is a marvel of legislation. We cannot believe that either justice or wisdom requires that any such burden should be carried by this generation, not to say by the one hundred generations unborn upon whom it is entailed.

THE TENNESSEE ELECTION has produced among the Radicals a profound disgust. The Hon. Henry Wilson attributes the result to a "want of principle, violence and treachery so characteristic of Tennessee politicians." He cites Emerson Etheridge and Andrew Johnson as notable instances of bad faith and ingratitude, and even hints of other unfaithfulness. There is so much to grieve over just now, politically, that one can afford to withhold his commiseration until these gentlemen expose each other's frailties still more thoroughly.

THE VIRGINIA LEGISLATURE is pronounced capable of organizing without the test oath. Attorney General Hoar, in giving this opinion, says further that it is really not a State Legislature until Congress approves and admits its representatives; that one thing only it can do—that is, ratify the fifteenth amendment—and this it can do before Virginia has any real existence as a State. If Mr. Hoar sees his way out of this maze, the Radicals do not.

A LETTER OF THANKSGIVING.

SUMMERFIELD, September, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: You are a father and can no doubt sympathize with me in my feelings of joy. I have an only son, who has lain with great weight on my heart, and for whom my soul has long and earnestly prayed to God for his salvation; but he seemed indifferent to these things. Although he was respectful and attentive to the outward decencies of religion, was constant in his attention to church, and was a constant and useful officer of the Sabbath school, yet he remained away from the Cross. A few days since I received a letter from him bringing the joyful news of his happy conversion to God. It seems to have been a clear conversion. He sought earnestly for the witness of the Spirit, and God answered him to the joy of his heart. At the same time one of my grandsons, a student at Emory College, was also powerfully converted to God. Ought I not praise God for His abundant mercy to me and mine? My precious Amelia bore me nine children, and in the course of years God has taken six of them to rest in the heavenly home, leaving me but three, and of these my two daughters have been for years trying to walk in the ways of the Lord, but my son was long the subject of alternate hope and fear; but now, thanks to my gracious God, I can rejoice to feel that our whole family will at last meet the loved and lost who have preceded me to the home of God and the good. I know that hundreds who have long known me will unite their thanksgivings with me that God has heard my prayers, and I want you all to pray that God may enable him to stand firm in the grace of God, and that he may become a burning and shining light in the church. God bless you and your work and your household!

Yours very affectionately,

JAMES O. ANDREW.

P. S.—When my wife lay on the death-bed our old and valued friend, Dr. Capers, dedicated James to God in the sacred ordinance of baptism, and just before she breathed her last she blessed our precious boy; and, having blessed him, she charged me to train him for heaven, which I have tried to do. J. O. A.

IF AN earthly prince quit his palace to visit the cottage of a poor peasant, it is thought great condescension. What then shall we think of the King of kings, who designs to fix His abode in the contrite spirit of an humble soul?

GREENVILLE DISTRICT MEETING.

GREENVILLE, Miss., Sept. 1, 1869.

The first District Conference of Greenville district will be held in Greenville October 8 to 10, 1869.

Delegates to our coming Annual Conference will be elected at this meeting. Pastors will please bring full statistical reports of their charges. Indian Bayou having no pastor, Brother Wm. B. Smith is requested to prepare a report of that charge.

Consultations will be had on the subjects named below. To facilitate discussion, I request the following committees to give special attention to collecting information upon the subjects named in connection with their names:

1. State of the church, R. H. Herbert, R. A. Davis, J. D. Murff, William T. Ashford and William B. Smith.
2. Camp meetings, D. N. Anderson, O. C. Rives, J. Mann and K. R. Wilson. To suggest a plan, time and place of holding a camp meeting in the district next year.
3. Sunday schools, W. L. Sibley, G. A. Kirkland, J. H. T. Anderson and Berry Marshall.
4. Church finances, W. L. Nugent, A. G. Baxton, W. H. Worthington and L. T. Wade.
5. Church literature, James Maclenan, G. W. Thomas, W. R. Trigg and W. D. Brown.

Preaching at night during the Conference, and to be protracted. Address to the Sabbath school on Saturday night. Preaching twice on Sunday.

We trust this meeting will do something toward securing more concert of action on the district, and stimulating us to more enterprise and vigor in prosecuting our Master's work. That these fruits may follow, and that we may be baptized afresh with the Holy Ghost and with fire, let us pray fervently.

W. W. DRAKE, P. E.

MARRIED.

On the 2d of September, 1869, in the Protestant church of Pascagoula, Mississippi, by the Rev. A. M. Jones, of the Mobile Conference, Mr. ENOCH G. JORDAN, of New Orleans, to Miss MARGARET E. PICKETT, of Pascagoula.

OBITUARIES.

JAMES PRENTICE, SR., died at the residence of his son, near Montevallo, Alabama, July 25, 1869. He was born in Sevore county, Tennessee, October 9, 1792. He was married, in 1813, to Miss Margaret Pierce, who was his companion until removed by death in 1853.

Father Prentice came to Alabama in 1818. He settled near Montevallo, and remained in that section until he died. He came to the State when there were but few living in this part of it—when the horse could live on the cane, and the hunter could find plenty of game. He joined the Methodist Church in 1834, and continued a member of her communion until he died. He served long as steward for the itinerants of the Alabama Conference. He loved the preacher, the church and all her ordinances. He loved to entertain a man who came as a minister of Christ. He rejoiced at the prosperity of Zion and wept over her decline, and was ever ready, when able, to obey the injunction: "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." When he was not able to get to the church, by his request the brethren would meet at his house and hold prayer meeting. He would meet them with tears, and enjoy the meeting; and if they chanced to sing his favorite hymn,

"How firm a foundation," he was sure to get happy, and rejoice in the fulfillment of the promise given in the sixth verse:

"E'en down to old age all my people shall prove My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love."

In his last illness he often rejoiced in the hope of the glory of God, and we have no doubt his spirit rests with the good in heaven.

Where all the ship's company meet,
Who have sailed with their Saviour beneath;
With shouting each other they greet,
And triumph o'er sorrow and death.

The voyage of life's at an end,
The mortal affliction is passed;
The age that in heaven they spend
Forever and ever shall last.

The cogs on one end of a roll are set relatively between those on the other end of the same roll, virtually forming a and thereby nearly doubling the purchase.—(The importance of setting gears in this position is not generally understood.)

Notwithstanding the rolls can separate freely at either end, the Cog-wheels cannot be thrown out of gear on both ends of the Wringer at the same time, unless the pressure is taken off.
The "NOVELTY" is fastened to a tub or box by a patent Curved Clamp, which has an equal bearing on a tub the whole length of the Wringer. Other Wringers are merely fastened to a stave at each end, and are thus liable to wrench the staves from their proper position and ruin the tub.

PAIN PAINT still stands between
The living and the dead,
A Rock on which to lean
When hope and strength are fled.

A Lighthouse on the shore
Saves human ships from wreck,
Lost health and strength restore
To every man on deck.

'Tis Water to the faint
To cool the parching tongue,
The blessings of Pain Paint
A million men have sung.

Pain Paint is like the Sun—
Gives life and vigor new,
To every nation run,
Refreshing as the dew.

'Tis Freedom to the slave—
Pain Paint those fetters broke;
No drugs or dosing knave
Reblads the heathen yoke.

'Tis Summer to the drear,
'Tis Victory to the lost,
'Tis Fruit and gold in ear
To those by famine tossed.

A Friend amid our foes,
A Breeze in torrid zones,
Pain Paint will banish woes,
'Tis Meat instead of bones.

A Horse to weary legs,
'Tis Money in the till,
Or Wine instead of dregs;
Pain Paint is better still.

What Physicians Say.
I have not lost a single patient in sixteen months past, since using Dr. WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT and ANNIHILATOR in my practice. The cause of my success I owe to his medicines. I cured a case of Cancer with thirty ounces of Pain Paint. This patient was resigning himself to a surgical operation. He is now entirely well. Also cured a woman with Cancer of the Womb of six years' standing. I have two other cases under treatment nearly well. I can refer you to Judge Dixon, of McConnellsburg, Fulton county, Pennsylvania, for the validity of my statements.
H. BUSHEY, M. D.,

Water will not stain nor smart; neither will Pain Paint.
Water is harmless for injection; so is Pain Paint.
Water can be drank freely; so can Pain Paint.
Inflammation is the cause of all physical pain. Matter or corruption will never form unless caused by high inflammation; absorption and evaporation remove inflammation with wonderful rapidity. This is the new principle of Pain Paint. Cancers are healed as readily as a cut. Old fever sores, including ulcers of every name or of the foulest description, are cured by simply keeping them under the cooling influence of Pain Paint. Diarrhea and Dysentery cured within ten minutes by a faithful application across the bowels of the patient. A pint of Pain Paint applied properly to the head, when the pulse reaches the highest point, will positively cure Typhoid, Yellow, or any other known fever; by cooling the brain properly no fever can exist in the body. Pain Paint applied to a burn, with several folds of cotton cloth dripping wet, will positively prevent blistering, if done immediately. It removes pain or swelling from bee stings, musquito bites or poisonous wounds; stops Headache or Neuralgia in a few minutes. Pains in the Liver, Heart or Kidneys relieved at the first application. Removes stiffness in joints and muscles, including all kinds of Rheumatic ailments.
Large bottles are much the cheapest, and should always be used for violent pains, spasms, fits, tumors or chronic ailments, or the whites. Beware of counterfeits. Dr. Wolcott's remedies are put up in white wrappers; buy none other. One gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of $20, or one quart $8, or one pint $5; or six pints of Annihilator, for Catarrh and Colds in the head, for $5, including directions and medical advice. All who come to the office treated free of cost, and no dosing the stomach. Small bottles sold at all drug stores. All remittances should be by post office orders or registered letters or by express, to R. L. WOLCOTT, No. 181 Chatham Square, New York. se4 4tr

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.
DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.
THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE.
Saved from Death!—Read!
MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.
MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago; the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.
"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly entire exhaustion.
I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.
I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.
I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.
I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,
WILLIAM FOWLER.

AND AGAIN!
Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Pains, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:
189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.
MESSRS. J. DARBY & CO., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.
During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.
It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.
I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.
Very respectfully yours,
FRANK SAUNDERS.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

CURIOSITIES OF ANIMAL LIFE.

THE MANATEE.

Inhabiting the mouths of the Amazon, Oronoco, and other South American rivers, is a singular-looking creature, appearing like a curious mixture of several dissimilar animals, the seal and the hippopotamus being predominant. Its name, the manatee, or lamantin, has reference to the peculiar form of its swimming paws. These, as in the other genera of the same family, are composed of soft parts, and a membrane which enfolds the bones of the hand and fingers; but in the manatee four flat nails are seen attached to the edge of the paw. The tail, also, is peculiar, being about one-fourth the length of the body, and oval-shaped, not unlike that of the otter. The head is round, and attached to the body without a neck. The muzzle, in which the nostrils are placed, is large and fleshy; the upper lip cleft and bristled at the sides; the lower lip much shorter, and the mouth small. The teeth, which are all molars, bear a resemblance to some cloven footed quadruped. The mammæ of the manatees are pectoral, and this structure, joined to the adroit use of their finger-like flippers, has caused them, when seen at a distance, with the fore part of the body out of the water, to be taken for some creature approaching the human shape. The effect is deepened by the thickest hairs of the muzzle, giving somewhat the appearance of human hair or beard. From this fancied resemblance to man, the Spanish give the manatee a name which signifies woman fish, and the Dutch call it the Baardmanetze, or little bearded man, while with the English its common designation is the man-fish. It is not unlikely that some of the stories about mermaids have originated from sailors catching a glimpse of these singular creatures; and "it is not improbable," says Scoresby, "that the walrus has afforded foundation for others. I have myself," continues the navigator, "seen a sea-horse in such a position that it required little stretch of the imagination to mistake it for a human being; so like indeed was it that the surgeon of the ship actually reported to me that he had seen a man with his head just appearing above the surface of the water."

There are at least three species of the manatee, two of which are found in America and one in Africa, but always on the Atlantic shores.

The manatee generally measures from six to seven feet in length, though zoologists have accorded to it seven or eight feet more. But as its flesh is highly esteemed, the war of extermination waged against it does not allow of its obtaining its full growth. Its meat is dried, and its fat tried out for exportation. The skin of the manatee is remarkably tough, and makes an excellent substitute for "cowhides." It is commonly met with in great herds at the mouths of the larger rivers, where it feeds upon the algæ and other herbage so plentiful there. It has been said to sometimes leave the water entirely and to seek its food on land, but later researches have disproved this. It does, however, crawl partly out of the water.

"The young manatee," says a recent French traveler in South America, "swims by the side of its dam, like the whale-cub by the whale. The affectionate mother directs it, watches over it, frolics with it, calls it to order with a flap of her paddle, defends it, if necessary, lets it suck at discretion, but would be considerably puzzled to hug in her swimming paws, like a nurse with her nursling."

"On one occasion," writes the same author, "our pirogue was coasting a tongue of land planted with willows and other trees peculiar to the low grounds of the country. Rounding this point, our attention was suddenly drawn to a splashing in the water and a cracking in the branches. We ceased paddling, and seizing the overhanging boughs of a willow, drew our boat under this curtain of greenness.

"Twenty steps from us, on the bank in front, some three feet high, a jaguar of the largest kind, with tawny robe magnificently ocellated, was crouched in act to spring, ears straight and body motionless. The bright, golden disks of his eyes were relentlessly following every motion of a poor manatee, busied in grinding, between its flat-crowned molars, stalks of the false maize and of the water plantain growing there.

"Suddenly, just as the cetacean raised it shapeless, clumsy head above water, the jaguar pounced upon it, and burying the claws of his left foot in the folds of the manatee's shoulder, stopped its muzzle with its right paw, and held it under water.

"The suffocating manatee made a tremendous spring, in the endeavor to throw its adversary off, but it had met its master, who never relaxed his hold on the struggling victim.

"A few moments later and the manatee ceased to struggle. It was dead. Backing out of the water, the jaguar squatted down, and, bracing himself upon one fore paw, managed with the other to haul out upon the bank the mangled body of his prey. At this moment, recovering from their surprise, one of our native boatmen let fly an arrow, which, whizzing past the jaguar's head, stuck in a tree farther on. Startled by this attack, the animal sprang to one side, and turned on our willowy curtain his round eyes, whose yellow lustre now reddened like fire. A second arrow missed him as the first had done; but the shoutings of our boatmen, who heaped upon him their most insulting epithet of sua-sua, or double robber, caused him to prudently take to flight. Before he disappeared in the thicket he once more directed his eyes toward us, and then toward the manatee upon the shore, as if regretfully abandoning the trophies of his prowess.

"The abandoned victim was cut up and jerked upon the spot by our crew, whilst I wandered out into the forest, at the risk of being called to personal account by the savage provider of our feast. We saw no more of him, however, and I met with no living creature except some large sphinx-moths, flitting from tree to tree with that uncertain flight peculiar to bats and to twilight butterflies. It was a fine opportunity to philosophize on this creation, ever in commotion, and on its creatures, ever at war; to count, like beads on a rosary, the links of that chain of destruction which begins with the infusoria and ends with man; to shrink with terror before blind Force, or to kneel before the Supreme Intelligence, so awful in its causes, so sublime in its effects, which educes the order, the harmony, the beauty, the preservation of the universe out of the inveterate war of the elements that compose it, and the unceasing destruction of the beings that people it."—Once a Month.

FARM AND GARDEN.

STOCK FARM COMPANIES.

Since you promise to put in proper shape articles sent you, I have concluded to venture my thoughts from home, and tell you what I've been pondering over. We have railroad, navigating, banking, insurance and manufacturing companies. All of them are good in their places, yet they do not meet the demand. Why can't we have stock farm companies? Now, that it is almost as easy for a camel to go through the eye of a needle as a hog to roam in the forest, or a cow to venture further than the tinkling of her bell can be heard from home, and return unmolested, we must study up a remedy. The idea seems yet to prevail that cotton is king, and all wisdom can't root it out. The propensity for buying mules and planting more cotton is deep seated, and practiced now to an alarming extent. The extravagant prices of mules and bacon reduce the profits now to a bare support, and in many localities the farmer falls short of meeting his liabilities. We have tried three years the Western prices, with cost of transportation, and find at best but poor pay. We can't make the negroes honest, nor can we raise stock on a cotton farm and make it profitable; the two must be separate branches of industry. As we can't change the order of things, we must try to lessen the expense and let them go on. Can't we do this with a stock farm in Georgia? I give you my idea of such a farm and ask if you think it would work. Can a charter be obtained for a stock farm? If yea, then organize a company from stockholders, consisting of president, treasurer, superintendent and board of directors, buy a farm, erect necessary buildings, purchase improved labor-saving machines, employ laborers, etc. The dams to be used in cultivating the land, to raise forage for the entire stock, horses, mules, cattle, hogs and sheep. (Hogs and sheep a specialty.)

Let us look to the expense of running such a farm. With labor-saving machines we can do so much more work, and with so much more ease, that laborers would work for nearly or quite half the present wages; more than three times the amount of work can be performed, the feed for the animals would cost less than half its present value; no commercial manures would be needed. Why, then, would such a farm not be profitable? Would not such a farm under good management pay a much larger dividend to stockholders than any of the above named companies? My opinion is that in three or four years' time it would pay a hundred per cent. more than the best railroad in the State. The question may be asked by some reader, how would we manage to protect the stock? I answer, from sickness, by a veterinary surgeon—from theft by day and night, by watchmen. Why not raise stock on a cotton farm and make it profitable? I answer, why not run a railroad, a foundry and a factory on a cotton farm? And you have my idea, not because they do not pay, but because in running them jointly they would conflict with each other; separate them, then, and you derive mutual benefit.—H. P. M. in Southern Cultivator.

Cotton Culture, Clover, Etc.

I have a three acre lot which I plowed twice, very deep, with a common scooter, and laid off my rows three feet by two and a half; subsoiled the three feet rows, and crossed with my subsoiler two and a half feet. I then had the soil, as also the clay which the subsoiler brought to the surface, scraped out with a common cotton hoe, to the depth the subsoiler went into the clay, and put the guano in; then made a hill on the guano, and rolled my seed in a composition of guano, salt, wood, ashes and plaster, (about twice the quantity of salt, ashes and plaster, as guano.) I then opened with the hoe and covered with the same. I completed the planting about the 10th of May; had a big rain same night—ground baked in two or three days; cotton did not all get up, but think I have two thirds of a stand; looks better and is larger now than cotton planted in the old way 15th of April. Think you this plan will answer? Is it not pretty much the same plan Mr. Dickson has followed? I have barred it off with a common turning plow, taking care not to break down the hill, and am now hoeing it the first time by thinning to two stalks in a hill, and drawing up the dirt all the time, instead of digging it away. I intend to cover up the grass that may come up on the hill, by drawing from the middle of the row, and not take any dirt from the cotton the whole year. What think you of the idea? If you do not like it, will you or Mr. Dickson give your objections to the plan, and suggest a better? Experience is what we all need in attempting to inaugurate any new system in farming, and most assuredly the experience of older and wiser heads will keep the young and unwary beginner from falling into that old beaten track in which so many have walked to ruin since the close of the war.

I propose in the future, when I can find leisure time, to give you some of my experience on clover culture on my place, as it seems to be an important subject to our country now.

I desire to be informed through your columns what is the best and cheapest cotton press for plantation use, and the price, and where to be obtained, before another cotton crop comes on. I wish one that is durable, can be worked with fewer hands than the old ones, and will pack a large bale. By giving such information, you will not only confer a favor on me, but many others.—J. in Southern Cultivator.

One Cause of Insanity.—The intelligent physician of the Mount Hope Institution for the Insane, in Boston, in his late report, enunciates a sentiment of which any thoughtful observer must have seen enough to convince him to be very near the truth. Without being so absurd as to deny all utility or excellence to works of fiction, or their harmlessness upon some minds, there is no question that their perusal by the young, particularly females, is hurtful and dangerous to a degree little dreamed of.—Parents owe a stern and solemn duty to their children, to watch their reading, and to preserve their opening minds and hearts from the vitiating influence of much of what is called popular literature. The opinion below is worth pondering.

"Another fertile source of this species of derangement has appeared to be an undue indulgence in the perusal of the numerous works of fiction, with which the press is so prolific of late years, and which are sown broadcast over the land, with the effect of vitiating the taste and corrupting the morals of the young. Parents cannot too cautiously guard their young daughters against this pernicious practice. We have had several cases of moral insanity, for which no other cause could be assigned than excessive novel reading. And nothing is more likely to induce this disease than the education which fosters sentiment, instead of cherishing real feeling—such as results from the performance of active benevolence, and the sacred duties of ordinary life, and of religious obligations—which awakens and strengthens the imagination, without warming the heart; and, to borrow the language of an eloquent divine, places the individual 'upon a romantic theatre, not upon the dust of moral life.'"

Spurgeon on Methodism.—Oh, how I delight to listen to a brother who talks to God simply and from his heart; and I must confess I have no small liking to those rare old-fashioned Methodist prayers, which are now quite out of date. Our Methodist friends, for the most part, are getting too fine and respectable now-a-days; too genteel to allow of prayers such as once made the walls to ring again. Oh, for a revival of those glorious, violent prayers which flew like hot shot against the battlements of heaven! Oh, for more moving of the posts of the doors in vehemence; more thundering at the gates of mercy! I would sooner attend a prayer meeting where there were groans and cries all over the place, and cries and shouts of "hallelujah," than be in your polite assemblies where everything is dull as death, and decorous as the whitewashed sepulchre. Oh, for more of the prayers of God, the body, soul and spirit working together, the whole man being aroused and started up to the highest pitch of intensity to wrestle with the Most High!

A Chinaman Taking Notes.—The Mandarin in Burlingame's troupe, who writes up the manners and customs of the various countries for the Chinese archives, has given the Paris correspondent of the London Post a translation of his last letter. In it he speaks of the table habits of the Paris barbarians: "We have dined," he says, "at their tables, where the stomach is expected to receive with pleasure some thirty different objects of food, and perhaps ten different liquids. The French and other foreigners eat until they feel very uncomfortable, and require much medicine drugs, as may be seen by the many chemists' shops of this city. They have the same capacity as our pigs. Had you been here the other night, and observed how these people rudely scrambled for food at the supper table when we gave our fête! They put their hands violently on the dishes, and disputed with each other most roughly."

In telling about Burlingame's ball he writes: "Oh! if you had seen the women at our ball! They came half undressed; that is to say, the upper part of the body was wholly exposed, but they are jealous of showing their feet, and seem to desire to hide the floor also, as each woman drags about with her a long robe, on which it is not etiquette to place your shoe. Their eyes are painted round (not all of them,) and they use coloring for the lips and a pearl powder for various exposed sections of the frame. They purchase the hair of the dead, and artists work it into various designs; then the women put it on their heads with flowers; and yet they are not a dirty people. The high caste women are allowed every license. At our fete they were clasped round the waist by men they knew not, and danced with painful vigor, for it was hot."

PLAIN AND EXTENDED BACKS,

the Extended Back with cast iron Enameled Reservoir and Faucet. Tin Warming Closet, Gridiron Cover, etc. The part of the top supporting the Reservoir is raised so that the flue is above the top plate, instead of below, as is the case in most of the Stoves now used, and the heat is forced directly against the whole surface of the bottom of the Reservoir. The Reservoir being detached from the pipe, can be removed at pleasure, thereby forming a six-hole Stove—the best in use, as the back holes will heat as well or better than the middle ones. Constitutes it as good a medium for reaching the people who trade with this city and Mobile as any offered in the Southwest.

Our Circulation is Widening Daily

Under the care of

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in the general market. The wholesale trade, especially dry goods, boots and shoes, clothing, etc., shows increased activity, under a lively demand from Texas and the upper Red river districts. Stocks of all kinds are ample and well assorted, offering both in styles and prices annual inducements to country merchants to come forward freely. Very little of any moment has been reported in sugar and molasses, and the movement in Western produce has been of inconsiderable extent, there being no stocks to invite any operations for foreign export. The only exception to this remark is treble extra and choice flour, the stock of which is in excess of the home demand. The stock of foreign sugar is ample, and importers are offering it at prices which present unusual inducements to buyers, but the latter stand aloof.

The weather was clear and cool on Saturday, but on Monday a heavy rain fell, with but little intermission throughout the day, and partially suspended outdoor operations. Our accounts from the interior are quite as discouraging as those noticed last week. Drouth and worms in some districts, and stormy weather in others, have evidently done great injury to the crops, while from all points we hear of a deficiency of labor for picking. Ten days ago the indications were that we should have an increase in the receipts at this port of 150,000 to 200,000 bales. We are now compelled to reduce these figures at least one-half, with the chances of a still greater reduction from future contingencies. We notice, moreover, that telegrams received at New York, on Monday, report "half the cotton crop of Florida and Georgia destroyed by caterpillars," but this we hope must be put down to the credit of the sensationalism of the New York press, and worthy of little more consideration than the same authorities' unqualified assurance, a few days ago, that the crop would be 3,000,000. We presume, however, that the caterpillars have done a good deal of injury, which must be taken into the account as affording a reasonable cause for a reduction of estimates. We regret to say that our accounts from the sugar districts, also, are discouraging, although we have little doubt the crop will be of liberal extent.

The river continues falling slowly, and is now about eleven feet four inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 10th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	3085
Lake	5
Mobile	128
Texas	24
Total	3242

On Saturday the sales embraced 430 bales, at 30 to 30¼c. for low middling, 30⅛ to 30⅜c. for strict middling, and 31½c. for middling. On Monday the movement was almost entirely suspended by a heavy rain which fell throughout the business hours, and the sales were confined to 21 bales, at easier prices. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but buyers claiming concessions of ½c., to which factors would not submit, the morning passed with very little movement. A further heavy decline at New York, and more liberal receipts, then caused the latter to meet the demand more freely, and 413 bales changed hands at prices indicating a decline of ¼c. in low middling, and ⅛c. in middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 864 bales, taken mostly for the North, but partly for Great Britain.

The receipts proper since Friday evening comprise 3,090 bales, against 1,400 during the corresponding period last week, and 4,039 last year. Receipts proper since the 1st instant, 5,814 bales, against 10,632 last year.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	— to —
Good ordinary	29 to 29¾
Low middling	29¾ to 30¼
Middling	30¾ to 31
Strict middling	— to —

Molasses.—No lots of Louisiana molasses are coming in now, and fewer quotations are consequently nominal.

Monetary.—Gold opened at 134⅜ to 134⅝, (against 135¾ at New York,) and closed at 134¾ to 135.

Operations in silver have been of moderate extent, the only sales reported being a small amount in American half dollars at 131½, $500 at 132, and $900 at 132.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21.—Specials to New York papers to night say that the government repudiates Sickles' action on the Cuban question.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The United States government, learning through parties who had visited Spain that its mediation between Spain and Cuba would be accepted, instructed Minister Sickles to tender its friendly offices.

Spain has formally replied, thanking the United States government, and declining to enter into any arrangements with the insurgents on the basis proposed. There is no reason to believe that Spain invited other European powers to intervene in the affairs of Cuba.

Spain having declined mediation, there is nothing else proposed by our government.

There are no more apprehensions here.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—The Methodist Book Concern, No. 505 Broadway, have lost several hundred thousand dollars by corruption and fraud. The deficit was discovered by Rev. Dr. Lanahan, the new agent. The frauds have been going on for eight or nine years. Investigation still in progress.

NEW YORK, Sept 21.—The alleged fraud discovered in the Methodist Book Concern seems to lie in the fact that Dr. Porter, the former agent, allowed his son, who was a paper broker, to charge heavy commissions on the purchase of paper used in the establishment. Irregularities are also reported in the binding department.

EUROPE.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—The Times, in an editorial article to day, comments on Sickles' note to the Spanish government on the Cuban question, says: "It was generally believed that President Grant would not interfere, or allow interference, in the Cuban question until Congress could vote upon it. Is he less resolute than formerly, or has the pressure forced him to sanction the demands upon Spain for the abandonment of Cuba?"

The Times has an editorial on Sickles' note, saying no ultimatum is offered Spain but abandonment of Cuba, or American recognition of the insurgents. The struggle will be hopeless, so far as Spain is concerned, but the government cannot control the impulses of the people. The pride of the Spanish people is fast kindling, and the government, in striving to check it, will be extinguished. From the most tranquil provinces come offers of men and arms, so that the regulars may go to Cuba. An aggressive policy by the United States cannot be justified by the attitude of Spain toward Cuba.

MADRID, Sept. 16.—Two iron-clads and three thousand men have been ordered to Cuba; seven thousand more will follow this week.

PARIS, Sept. 16.—Bullion in the Bank of France has decreased four millions of francs.

Prim has another interview with Napoleon to-morrow.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—Storms continue, with much rain.

MADRID, Sept. 16.—Prim telegraphs the government from Paris, advising diligence in sending troops to Cuba.

MADRID, Sept. 21.—Epoca says that Sickles has withdrawn his note on the Cuban question. This statement is not believed.

MADRID, Sept. 21.—City journals are still violent against the presumed unfriendliness of the American government. Some urge an immediate declaration of war, if the Cubans are recognized as belligerents.

The ministry, after discussing the propriety of returning Sickles' note unanswered, decided to postpone reply until the arrival of Prim.

LONDON, Sept. 21.—The Paris correspondent of the London Times says the note of the American minister to the Spanish government, in regard to Cuba, varies both in tone and conclusions from diplomatic communications between the Spanish minister at Washington and the government of the United States. The diplomatic experience of Sickles is limited, and probably insufficient to enable him to rightly estimate the value and effect of his words.

MADRID, Sept. 22.—Prim returned here to day. The council resolved to use every effort to save Cuba and dispatch more troops to the Island of Cuba.

LONDON, Sept. 22.—The Times says: The Spanish have found their advantage in a grand display of patriotism and national courage. They met an imagined affront with immediate defense, though their threatened adversary is ten times more powerful than themselves.

Sickles is manifestly alarmed at the result of his proceedings, and has requested further instructions. Pending a reply from Washington, he desires to withdraw his notes. If this is actually his position, Spain owes it to her own friendliness, which may savor of unreason, but does not partake of the nature of bravado; she declares that if driven to extremes she will fight. No doubt she will. For her to gain advantages by doing so, is out of the question; but, as matters stand, she would lose less than her adversary.

America may fairly decline an easy victory on such onerous terms.

The people and government of Spain have resolved not to part with Cuba without a struggle.

The contest could only result in the sacrifice of Cuba, coupled with other but slighter losses.

Sickles expected no such resistance as it provoked.

Possibly in the face of such opposition, his proceedings may be qualified, or repudiated by his government.

It is believed he exceeded his authority, and that America is not responsible for his act.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RICHMOND, Sept. 21.—Governor Walker was installed as provisional governor, at the gubernatorial mansion to-day at noon, General Canby being present. Governor Wells turned over the office to the new incumbent, who took the iron-clad oath of office. There were no ceremonies or demonstration, save the gathering of a considerable crowd of white and colored people to congratulate the new Governor, who shook hands with them.

RICHMOND, Sept. 21.—The first appointment made by Governor Walker, after assuming the duties of his office, was that of Captain William E. Cameron, editor of the Petersburg Index, as his secretary. Captain Cameron was an officer in the late Confederate army, and one of the first and most determined supporters of the Walker Republican ticket in the late political campaign.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 22.—Mr. Peabody met the trustees of the Peabody Institute to-day and made an additional donation of $300,000 in Tennessee sixes and $100,000 in Pennsylvania sixes.

MORE CONVENT HORRORS.—The Cracow revelation has brought to the light other convent cruelties. Ireland furnishes its share. Italy is crying from the ground for vengeance. It is boldly asserted that there is a nun at this moment in the Carmelite Convent of Bologna whose condition may be perhaps similar to that of Barbara Ubryk. Some forty years ago two young ladies of good family were placed in this convent against their will, for a love affair which their parents disapproved. They escaped from the building, but were detected and brought back again. One expressed repentance for the offense she had committed, and gave so many proofs of contrition that she ultimately became abbess of the convent. The other could not overcome her repugnance to a conventual life, for a long time refused food, and acted with such violence that the nuns declared her insane, and placed her in an isolated part of the establishment, where only the doctor occasionally visited her. There she still is, and the persons who live near the convent constantly hear her wild cries.

In Berlin two thousand persons met and demanded of the Prussian government the suppression of convents and the expulsion of the Jesuits.

A thorough examination of all these prisons is demanded. And in no country in the world are these convents more carefully guarded against the public eye than in our own "free land." Doubtless scores of women are this moment in durance vile, who are pining and perishing for liberty and air and food.—New York Observer.

A FARMER in a remote district of the Yorkshire wolds recently met a country rector who had been two years absent on travel. "Mr. Rector," said the farmer, "you've been to the Holy Land I hear." "I have, John, and got safe back, you see." "Well, I often thou't I'd like to hear about that spot; it's a fine country, I hay." "Well," said the rector, "I saw Lebanon and Jerusalem, and the twelve palm trees and the wells of water in the great desert, and we went across the Jordan, and we went up Mount ——." "Excuse me interruptin' you, Mr. Rector, one. But if it be a fair question, how was the turmets (turnips) looking out yonder?"

The Cotton Crop of Last Year.

The New York Shipping List has the following returns of the cotton crop of last year:

We publish our annual statement of the cotton crop of the United States for the year ending August 31, ultimo. It will be seen that we make the crop 2,260,557 bales, against 2,430,893 the preceding year, a decrease of 170,336 bales. This result, though below the general expectation at the beginning of the year, is about as has been foreseen for some time past. We exported the past year 1,447,643 bales, a decrease of 208,173 bales. The consumption in the Northern States we find to have been 821,924 bales, an increase of 22,107 bales; and in the Southern States 173,203, an increase of 4,855 bales. The total consumption in the United States was 995,127 bales, against 968,165 the previous year, a net increase of 26,962 bales. This figure of the quantity consumed has never before been reached. That nearly one-half of the whole production of the country last year was consumed at home is, indeed, a fact full of significance in connection with the future of a great branch of home industry. Every particle of enterprise in that direction by so much lessens our dependence upon foreign nations, and is, therefore, a national boon, whether manifested North or South, East or West. We hope and expect to see the growth of cotton manufactures in this country proceed pari passu with the growth of the raw staple in the coming years. The stocks of cotton at all the ports, and throughout the country, have not been so low, probably, in a long series of years, in view of which the next crop will come upon a comparatively bare market and command good prices.

The crop is distributed as follows:

The True Story of Lady Byron's Life.

An article under this title, written by Mrs. Beecher Stowe, commences the September number of Macmillan's Magazine. It will be read with world-wide interest, for though forty-five years have worn out the spell which once belonged to Byron's verse, though criticism has dealt coldly and calmly with it, rejecting its meretricious sentiment and determining its sterling qualities, the man himself remains much the same as he was first pictured to us in Moore's biography and Macaulay's brilliant and pathetic essay. To those who cannot rest content with an author's writings, but must concern themselves with his individuality, he is still the beau ideal of a poet. He stands out from them all with his handsome face, his susceptible and impetuous temperament, his sorrows and dissipations, his loves and hatreds. Condemned at the bar of opinion as a dissolute man, of violent, uncontrolled passions, his misfortunes to this day have averted judgment. By virtue of them he has, like his predecessor, "the wicked Lord," claimed a benefit of clergy, and not got off scot free.

There is no doubt that Mrs. Stowe's narrative will owe much of its universal interest to the fact that it gratifies the lowest kind of curiosity; but it was not written and ought not to be read with this end in view. It is a late and necessary act of justice—of justice to the wife clearing her from the accusation of cold-heartedness and uncharitable prudery made so repeatedly during her life and since her death—and of justice on the husband, destroying at once and forever the romance which has so long been allowed to drape the falsehood and meanness of his character. Leaving the present revelation out of the question, the fact that those interesting misfortunes which at one time the world delighted to weep over were the natural consequence of the vices of their victim, has all along been clear enough, yet seldom, if ever, has this been boldly insisted on, while in nearly every extant biographical notice of the poet—and their name is legion—his wretchedness has been pleaded in mitigation of his errors.

His domestic quarrels have been discussed wherever English poetry is read, and the public, forced reluctantly to take Lady Byron's part, has done so with the worst grace. To blame her was, indeed, impossible; but it was easy to pity him; coadole with this genius thrown away on a woman who could not understand him, and paying so dearly for his mistake. Men, and women, too, made haste to revile the cold and ungenerous prude, who left her husband to make what wreck he pleased of his life, when, by bearing with his faults, as the good wife of a great man ought to bear, she might have saved him from himself, and done the duty she owed no less to the world than to its poet.

The public, however, has had some excuse for its tacit condemnation of the most devoted wife that ever sacrificed herself to an unworthy man, for Lady Byron never uttered a word in her own justification, and it is only now, when she herself and all those whom the dreadful revelation would overwhelm are in their graves, that it is given to the world. As it is, the seals of it would have remained unbroken, perhaps for ever, were it not for the recent publication by Byron's mistress of a book reviving the old and threadbare calumnies against his wife, and referring his reckless indulgence and miserable life to the despair which took possession of him when he found himself abandoned by the woman on whom he rested his hopes of better things.

* * * * *

Mrs. Stowe states fully her unimpeachable authority for the narrative laid before us. When, as the authoress of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," she first came to England, she formed a friendship with Lady Byron; crossing the Atlantic a second time, in 1856, this was renewed, and Mrs. Stowe received one day an invitation, in which her friend "indicated that she wished to have some private conversation upon important subjects." Lady Byron, of delicate health for many years, had at that time been warned by her physicians that she had not long to live; she considered that the time had come when her long silence should at last be broken, or when, at least, the means of breaking it should be placed in other hands than her own.

* * * * *

The daylight has thus at last streamed in on the stage romance of Lord Byron's life; has struck the thin tinsel and the dirty paint, and now the curtain may be dropped, and the play, still dragging on, put an end to. As far as Lord Byron himself is concerned, we do not regret it; the truth is the truth, and we would sooner know him for what he was than take him for what he might have been. Sad it is beyond everything how black a mark is forever set against some of the most perfect poems—those to his half sister Augusta—in this, our mother tongue; but, horrible as is the crime now divulged, the unutterable meanness of the man is still more despicable. When we learn that the author of Childe Harold not only brutally ill-used his wife and turned her out of his house, but challenged her before the world to say a word against him, well knowing that her noble nature sealed her lips, and that he all the while kept her money, which she had scorned to secure to herself, to be the means of his debaucheries, we almost feel that we can never open his works again.—London Times, August 30.

DENYING OF CHRIST.—Bishop Heber said: "It is a fatal mistake to suppose that there can be no apostacy from Christ, where we are not absolutely called on to deny His name or to burn incense to an idol. We deny our Lord whenever, like that Demas, we, through love of this present world, forsake the course of duty which Christ has plainly pointed out to us. We deny our Lord whenever we lend the sanction of our countenance, our praise, or even our silence to measures or opinions which may be popular or fashionable, but which we ourselves believe to be sinful in themselves or tending to sin. We deny our Lord whenever we forsake a good man in affliction, and refuse to give countenance, encouragement, and support to those who, for God's sake and for the faithful discharge of their duty, are exposed to persecution and slander."

ALL EQUAL HERE.—It is related of the Duke of Wellington, that once when he remained to the sacrament at his parish church, a very poor old man had gone up the opposite aisle, and reaching the communion table, knelt down by the side of the Duke. Some one—a pew owner probably—came and touched the poor man on the shoulder, and whispered to him to move further away, or rise and wait until the Duke had received the bread and wine. But the angle eye and quick ear of the great commander caught the meaning of that touch and that whisper. He clasped the old man's hand, and held him to prevent him rising, and in a reverential undertone, but most distinctly, said: "Do not move—we are all equal here."

The Colored Church Paper.

The Colored Conferences desiring an organ, and having been requested to undertake the publication, I have consented to do so, whenever sufficient subscribers have been obtained to defray actual expenses—say one thousand subscribers.

The object of the paper will be to promote the moral and religious, and the mental and physical well-being of the colored people, and to aid in carrying out the policy, present and prospective, of the Southern Methodist General Conference in reference to those of them in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

TERMS.—One dollar a year in advance, the money to be refunded if the paper should not be published. The preachers, white as well as colored, will please act as agents.

There will be a camp meeting held at Lower Peach Tree, on the Alabama river, commencing on the 7th of October next. Ministers specially invited.

A camp meeting will be held at Bethlehem, four miles north of Fayette C. H., Fayette circuit, commencing on Friday night before the fourth Sabbath in October next.

The High Church and the Low.

Many Episcopalians, as well as other people, are at a loss to know the distinctive difference between Ritualists and Low Churchmen. We copy from one of the ablest of the Protestant Episcopal organs, the Christian Witness, a very lucid statement as to the essential difference between the two.

In a former article we indicated the dangers which threaten the peace and the unity of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Two conflicting elements are struggling within her fold. Two great schools, historic schools, coming down from the days of the Reformation, live and labor and contend side by side. Call them by whatever names we please—Evangelical and Sacramentarian or High Churchmen and Low Churchmen—they exist as most marked and distinctive schools, representing different conceptions of the Gospel and the church of God, of the method and the means of salvation. It is upon the central and vital doctrine of justification that these schools divide most surely. "We disagree," says Hooker (of the Church of England in her attitude to Rome,) "about the nature of the very essence of the medicine whereby Christ cureth our disease." And our difference with our brethren of the churchly school is on this point scarcely less wide and vital. With them baptism is the sole instrument of justification; with us it is faith alone. That saintly Evangelical man, Dr. William Marsh, in the early stages of the Tractarian controversy, sent to one of the leaders of that movement at Oxford this summary of his belief on this great point: That we are justified—

Freely by grace (Romans 3:2)

Meritoriously by Christ (Romans 5:19)

Instrumentally by faith (Romans 5:1)

Evidentially by good works (James 2:26)

The paper was returned to him with the third sentence struck out, and the following substituted: "Instrumentally by the sacrament of holy baptism."

It would be difficult to find the contrast between the two schools more definitely stated. Hence the earnestness of the struggle around the baptismal office. To the one side baptism is the instrument of justification, and conveys to adult and infant alike the pardon of sin, the new birth. To the other baptism is the sign and seal of the great blessing received through faith alone.

"THE SINGING PEOPLE."—This paper advocates "congregational singing." It is issued quarterly. Fifty cents per annum. No. 805 Broadway. The following article is a good sample of its merits:

One serious difficulty in the way of cultivating congregational singing in some of our churches is the fact that, following the fashion prevailing in some other churches, we have placed the leading singers, the choir, in the rear of the congregation. The position is not a proper one for leaders, but only for those who do not expect to be followed. In any case in which the people are expected to sing, the leaders ought to be in front of them and facing them. They, the people, can then have the aid of both sight and sound. Besides, the leaders, by occupying a position in front of the people and in close proximity to the pulpit, place it in the power of the preacher to make any suggestion to them that he may wish, without rendering it necessary for him to speak to them over the heads of the congregation. In several of the most popular churches in the United States the leading singers occupy positions just behind or just in front of the pulpit.

A writer, speaking of a service in Mr. Spurgeon's church, in London, says: "His hymn read through, he returned, as is his uniform practice, and re-read a verse at a time, directing the singing—a chorister standing at his side—now soft, now slow, now with force and energy, and when a whole congregation joined, it was singing such as we seldom hear."

The same writer, in speaking of a service in Dr. Cumming's church, says: "The singing, as in most of the dissenting chapels, was congregational, the chorister occupying a place in front of the speaker's desk."

It is possible to have congregational singing in all our churches, and certainly it is desirable. Let the advocates of it earnestly and constantly insist upon it as a prominent feature in church worship. God loves the praises of the people,

The Christian Advocate.

A LESSON.

BY ALICE CARY.

The great good sun at morning
Maketh a fair adorning
  Out of the cold, uncomely
And else disastrous cloud—
  Each sullen hill-top tinges
  With light of yellow fringes,
  And calls the lark to celebrate
The time with matins loud.

With face veiled darkly over
He holds his place as lover,
  And for his low, lorn sweetheart
Bringeth miracles to pass,
  Dropping rain in cooling showers
  On the dry tongues of her flowers,
  And setting green and straightly up
Her fainting blades of grass.

Even while we tell the story
Our eyes are filled with glory,
  Both with crimson of the clover
And with tassel of the corn,
  And the pity of the shadow
  Turns to pleasure in the meadow,
  For the high noon's burst of splendor
Of the early rain was born.

O heart! so wild and widowed,
Of thy shadow be disshadowed,
  Get thee up from lamentation,
And from weeping, low and loud;
  Think how the sun at morning
  Doth make his fair adorning,
  And all with yellow fringes
Trims the borders of his cloud.

O soul! so bowed and broken,
Take for a sign and token
  His thrusting of a golden horn
From out the clouds so dim;
  No flower so poor in blushes
  But 'neath her chin he pushes
  And turns her timid little face
Up trustfully to him.

ROMANISM.—NO. 1.

In the fall of 1855, during the epidemic season, when there was but little travel, I found myself on board of a Mississippi steamer, bound for Vicksburg. There were but four or five passengers, among them a distinguished Roman Catholic dignitary. This gentleman, I should judge, was sixty years old, but excellently well preserved. He was above six feet in height, straight as a column; richly but plainly dressed, and with the exception of a massy gold guard chain, and his ring and seal of office, there were no ornaments. He was a noble-looking man, most urbane and affable, with the easy manners of a traveled and cultivated gentleman. I had no formal introduction. I know not that he ever knew anything particular of my position, save that I was a Protestant. We were formally thrown together by intercourse at the table, and traveling talk as we sat on the guards.

It occurred to me that I might never have such an opportunity again for a free conversation with so distinguished a Roman dignitary on the points of difference between Catholics and Protestants, and that I would avail myself of the opening to ask some questions and learn whatever I could. I said: "Archbishop, I have the Catholic catechism, published under your authority, in my house. I see in it prayers addressed to the Virgin Mary. Do Catholics pray to the Virgin?" He replied: "Oh, yes; all good Catholics pray to the Virgin." I then asked: "Does the Catholic Church hold that the Virgin Mary is finite or infinite?' He replied: "What do you mean?" I answered: "I mean, does the church hold that the Virgin is everywhere present, and does she see and know all things at the same time, like God. Or is she, like other creatures, confined to one locality, and limited in her knowledge?" He replied: "The church holds that she is finite. There is but one Infinite Being." I then asked: "How does the Virgin hear and comprehend the prayers addressed to her—many millions in all parts of the world, at the same moment of time, in scores of languages?" He answered: "God is everywhere present, knows all things, and the Virgin is in the presence of God." I replied: "Very true. But, Bishop, we are in the presence of God too, but we know very little. How does the Virgin know our wants and griefs?" He answered: "God tells the Virgin what the pious wish and say in their prayers." I replied: "Bishop, I have always understood that your church taught that we were such sinners that we could not or should not pray directly to God, but that we should approach Him through the intercession of the Virgin or the saints; but if it be as you say, that our prayers reach God first of all, that is all that a Protestant wants. If our prayers first of all reach the great heart of our Father, who alone knows how and has power to answer them, we wish nothing more." I added further: "Bishop, you will excuse me for saying, I do not know whether it is most blasphemous or ridiculous to suppose the great and infinite God as incessantly engaged in saying to the Virgin: Such persons in Spain, France, Italy or England are saying so and so in Spanish, in French, in Italian or English." He seemed to see the apparent awkwardness of this, and replied: "When we go to the King, the President, or the Governor, we always prefer to go in the name or through the introduction of some one, or to refer to some one of influence." I replied: "Very true, because these civil dignitaries are finite mortals, and it is necessary to post them up as to the merit of our claims. But," said I, "in the case under consideration the Governor knows infinitely more about it than the referees." He replied: "Tradition and the custom of the church had long settled the question of prayer to the Virgin, and that all good Catholics did and should pray to her." As this was outside of the Book, and nothing but human authority, I considered it no satisfactory solution, and so closed the conversation on that point.

THE COLORED WORK.

MR. EDITOR: I have recently held my first Quarterly Meeting with the colored people. Hitherto there has been no opening on this district for anything of this kind. Since 1867 we have had two authorized colored ministers, one ordained deacon, the other elected to orders; but until of late they were unable to make headway among their people. The way for sober religious instruction seemed hedged up by the influence exerted over the race by political disturbers and unauthorized colored preachers. After a long, fruitless effort to get them to hear me preach, I found that they were always taken to task severely by their own preachers whenever they came to hear me. The colored preachers having authority from our church had pretty much the same reception from them as we ourselves. Most of the freedmen in this country call themselves Baptists, though their doctrine and government is a grotesque mixture of different denominations, largely interspersed with absurd superstitions of their own. The radical error which renders them impregnable in their superstitions seems to be this, that the Bible is intended only for the white people who can read, while they who cannot read receive their revelation directly from the Spirit. This error I believe is common among them in this region. With such a view they must inevitably go further and further from the truth, "heaping to themselves teachers, having itching ears." It is with us to bring them into contact with intelligent religious ideas. But how to get them in sympathy with those who will teach them the truth, this is the question. Preachers from the North can get their ear; but as a general rule they pander so to their political proclivities as to paralyze the effect of their religious teachings. Our church, always the best friend of the negro, has looked into the merits of the question, and wisely set on foot the plan which seems to me the only one which will meet the case. When we find a good colored man, who is measurably in sympathy with us, we ordain him and help him all we can, and thus get fully into his confidence. We instruct him as he is able to receive the truth, and in the meanwhile we send him out among his people. Slowly, it may be, but surely, if he is a faithful man, he wins them to himself and to our church. He has full access to them, which we have not; he is "a native helper." Through him we can work upon them, and after a while can get access to the masses. We find those who have been won over to us and our church by him, and even himself, it may be, still full of their old superstitions. Dreams and visions make up most of their religious experience. They preach and pray and groan and sing in the "heavenly tone," and lay a great deal of stress upon all these things, perhaps more than upon the right ordering of their lives. Their characters are still very far below the standard of intelligent Christian morals. But we have their ear, their confidence, and if faithful to our charge we can teach them, and by degrees can elevate them to higher views and purer morals. As long as they look to us for instruction we have a powerful hold upon them. As Christ called sinful and ignorant men to be His disciples, and bore with their failures and imperfections as long as they clung to Him for instruction, and at length by His contact with them educated them to be good and wise men, so we, who are His representatives as far as we are imbued with His Spirit and His knowledge, by bearing with the ignorance and consequent imperfection of the colored people, may draw them up to a much higher standard, both of faith and morals. To witness their present ignorance, and their dullness in learning the truth, to hear them go over their foolish dreams with such zest, as if this was religion, tends indeed to throw a damper over the zeal of him who would engage in this great work; but "charity hopeth all things and endureth all things."

At one point only on this district have we gotten a hold upon them—the Duncan plantation, in Issaquina county. There Charles Lewis, who was ordained in 1867 by Bishop Paine, has been faithfully at work in the interest of our church, now and then gathering a few, until now he has nearly a hundred members. Brother R. A Davis instructs and advises him, which he receives gladly. Brother Davis often preaches to them also, and they come to hear him in large numbers. On Sunday of our Quarterly Meeting we had about three hundred out in spite of much opposition from a colored Baptist preacher in the neighborhood. I organized them into a Quarterly Conference, with all the necessary officers, including a secretary. The Conference was a fine looking body of men, of more than average intelligence. They seemed highly gratified at our coming, and we trust the meeting will result in good. In other parts of the district the freedmen are leaning toward us more than they have been, and I may say the whole aspect of the colored work here is hopeful.

W. W. DRAKE.

GREENVILLE, MISS., Sept. 11, 1869.

A WRITER to the Methodist Recorder from France says: "There is a deep religious awakening in France, and a strong undercurrent in favor of Protestantism is setting in. Numbers of people in Paris and its neighborhood especially are alienated from Romanism, and only need a little more weight in the Protestant scale of the balance to lend them at once to renounce Romanism and rally under the Protestant banner. Now is the time for Methodism to be awake, and not let its opportunity go. There is something in Methodism exactly adapted to the genius and modes of thought of the French people, and there is now a good chance of establishing it in a place neighboring Paris, where at present there is no Protestant chapel."

TREATMENT OF SUNSTROKE.—The new treatment of this terrible complaint by heat is being received with favor. Recently Dr. F. G. Horron, one of the city physicians of Cincinnati, Ohio, tried it in two cases with success. Instead of cold water be applied warm water to the head, in cloths, the water as hot as the skin could bear without injury. The effect was very striking, restoring the patient to consciousness very soon. Then, as a stimulant, he administered liquor ammoniæ acetatis. In this city it was tried in a number of cases, with, it is said, excellent results.—Medical and Surgical Reports.

HONEST industry is always rewarded. No young man need complain of being kept poor if he rolls up his sleeves and goes cheerfully to work.

A MISSIONARY NECESSITY.

MR. EDITOR: A remark made by one of the brethren at our last Annual Conference, asserting the deficiency of missionary information among the clergy and laity of our church, has been ringing in my ears ever since, and has awakened my attention to the subject to a degree I never experienced before. The fact stated by the brother has become more and more apparent to my quickened observation every day since he made it, and I am satisfied that right here is one of the great causes of the missionary apathy of our church. Sparse information in any given cause awakes but a feeble spirit in that cause, and as a consequence it languishes. This is as true of the missionary cause as of any other, and hence my belief that the disgraceful, unchristly neglect of missions, becoming so characteristic of our church, is largely owing to the equally characteristic deficiency of information among us on the subject. This deficiency of information is unquestionable, whatever may be the opinion of the very few who "sit over against" the missionary treasury. You may point me to the numerous appeals that are published from pulpits and platforms, and in circulars and journals; but, sir, these are, from the nature of the case, uncommunicative of the very information so greatly needed to render them effective; grand generalities necessarily constitute the staple of these eloquent addresses—the need for brevity and the laws of rhetoric will have it so. Figures, names, incidents, local necessities, and difficulties and successes, and the like—all manner of detail—this is the sort of information needed, and of which, generally speaking, we are almost totally deficient.

You may point me to the Advocates and say: "There you will find all these things". Yes, sir; but in so fragmentary a style that even with them before us we "know nothing yet as we ought to know;" and then, were they full of the information so much needed, they do not reach scarce a tithe of our people, for the subscribers to our Advocates are "few and far between," to our reproach be it said. But you may rally again, and point me to the Conference minutes, if figures are what I am seeking. Ah! that would be unkind, sir. Whom do their tabular A B Cs enlighten? Who learns anything of actual missionary information from their homeopathic and scarified reports? Say what you will, sir, we are all in lack of satisfying information concerning the missionary operations of our church. Who, even of our clergy, knows any details as to the appropriation of missionary funds? Who of them can understand why, with the thousands of dollars raised for foreign missions every year, the one or two missionaries we have in China are obliged to "minister to their own necessities" by laboring with their own hands? And if the clergy cannot get this information, much less can the laity get it. Moreover, we need such other information—details about places and people, and as to the work being done—as shall familiarize our minds with everything concerning missions; and we need this information often and regular, to keep the facts before us. The friction of facts upon the mind is essential to warm it up to a degree of ardor in this as in any other cause. This done, our people would take greater interest in missions, feel more responsibility for supporting the missionaries, pray more fervently for and be more systematic and liberal in their gifts to the missionary cause. Supply the information here indicated—broadcast it among our membership—and there is sound reason to believe that the present mortifying condition of our missionary work would gradually change to one more worthy of the characteristic liberality of our Southern people.

But how shall this desideratum be accomplished? I suggest nothing new. I simply suggest that our church follow the example of sister churches distinguished for their missionary spirit and abundant missionary labors—that is, publish a missionary magazine of some sort, that shall furnish all the needed information as its specialty; publish it at as low a figure as possible, so as to insure it the largest circulation possible; publish it monthly, that its contents may refresh and stir up the minds of our people on this subject regularly. Let our next General Conference authorize the issuance of such a publication: and if there be any argument in precedent, our missionary work will soon recover from its weakness and sickliness, and grow strong and vigorous.

The necessity and suggestion are here given. I leave to others the elaboration of the blessed consequences which would result to us as a church were we to become more faithful in our missionary duty.

LETTER FROM ANACOCO CIRCUIT

ANACOCO CIRCUIT, Sept. 1, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps it would be interesting to some of your readers to hear of the progress our country is making in the advancement of the Gospel. The month of August has, upon the whole, been an auspicious one for our country at large, and our circuit in particular. On the second Sabbath our beloved elder, Bro. Fred. White, met us at Kisatchie Union church, where he had appointed our second Quarterly Meeting. On Saturday he gave us some "sweet morsels" just out of "one corner of the loaf;" but on Sunday the loaves and fishes were spread before us, and our souls were feasted. His text was Psalms 119: 57-60; and when he came to the crowning thought, "Thou art my portion, oh! Lord," we all had forgotten where we were. The presiding elder was lost in the preacher, and ourselves, "on Pisgah's top, viewing the landscape o'er," were about to break forth in a shout that would have echoed in every part of the house, when the brother, too full of love, could go no further, but sat down rejoicing. We had a glorious time around the table whereon were spread the sacred emblems.

We paid Brother White one-fourth of his salary, and if God blesses us we will pay him all, and more too. His claim is only $50, but that is no consideration when compared with his labors. Oh, may he come again!

On the third Sabbath in August we attended the Oak Grove Union Sabbath school celebration, under the superintendence of Brothers Presley and H. B. Miller, a Baptist brother. For two days beforehand we were preparing the scholars, and in decorating the church, which was accomplished by our friends in the community in a worthy and appropriate manner. On Sunday, about nine o'clock, the congregation began to collect, and soon the house was filled to overflowing. The scholars of three other schools were present by invitation, viz: The Holly Grove, the West Anacoco, and the Taureau. The singing was good, the music being taken from the Sabbath School Bell. The performances were confined almost entirely to the scholars. We would like to mention the names of some of those who spoke, in a manner complimentary to themselves and the school. The services lasted about five and a half hours, and were very edifying to all. About the prettiest performance was a temperance song, which was accompanied with the suitable movements. We thought if Brother "Socks and Sirup" were there he would have valued it as worth more than all the rest together. On the whole, the services revived the cause of Sunday schools in this part of our country.

Some time ago Brother J. M. Franklin promised to assist us in a meeting at Holly Grove church, on the fifth Sunday. The time found many people on the ground, and seven preachers to minister to them. Among these was old Father Weeks, a veteran of the cross; and after thirty-five or forty years he still says his evidence is bright. The preachers all had power with God. On Sunday Bro. Tanner preached a soul-stirring sermon, which was listened to with profound interest, and many felt that God was at hand. The weather was extremely unfavorable, but while it stormed without God stormed within. We have had twenty-seven accessions—nineteen white and eight colored persons. The colored members were taken in by an old colored class leader whom we sent to a school house near by to talk to the negroes. Some of the best people of our land have united with us as church members. We are now looking forward to glorious times in this country, and if we work God will bless us. We have had forty-three accessions this year. Yours, in love,

PRAIRIE.

To the Preachers of the Mobile Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: The Joint Board of Finance, at the last Conference, made the following assessments—For Conference collection: Mobile district, $700; Meridian, $425; Demopolis, $650; Enterprise, $500; Tuscaloosa, $800; Columbus, $600; Jasper, $200; and for Bishops' collection: Mobile, $250; Meridian, $175; Demopolis, $250; Tuscaloosa, $300; Columbus, $275; Jasper, $50. At the last Conference our dues to the Bishops were not met by several hundreds of dollars, and they were embarrassed on account of it, for they had calculated upon the full payment of their claims. This I know. The Conference collection, also, was a good many hundreds of dollars short of the assessment; and, when divided, afforded a shamefully small amount to each one of the claimants. It was painful to send off these little sums to the needy widows and orphans of our fallen comrades, and to the aged and infirm veterans who once led us to victory and conquest.

We venerate our Bishops and love the wives and children of our brethren, but we have failed to do our duty to them. We are the stewards of the Bishops and the guardians of the widows and orphans, and we owe a debt of gratitude to our infirm brethren which money cannot pay, but which cannot be met without money. Between this time and the meeting of Conference let every one of us do his whole duty in this respect, and see if we cannot once more pay our Bishops the full allowance, and send food to the needy and helpless in fuller measures than we did last year. Justice, mercy, duty, gratitude, truth and honor all urge us to this work.

If Brother A. cannot raise the amount assessed him, let him tell the presiding elder so, and let the presiding elder tell Brother B. to increase his collection. Let the presiding elder, as he passes up and down his work, take private contributions to help out the weaker charges in his district. Bring the money—all of it. That is the thing; and you will feel good, and so will others.

Yours, etc., J. W. RUSH.

JOHN BUNYAN, being once asked a question concerning heaven which he could not answer, because the Bible had furnished no reply, very wisely advised the querist to follow Christ, and live a holy life, that he might by and by go to heaven and see for himself. "Lord, are there few that be saved?" asked a curious questioner of Christ. "Strive to enter in at the straight gate," was the instant and pertinent reply.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

EVERGREEN, LA., Sept. 2, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: You may say to the friends of Zion that the good Lord is reviving His work greatly on the Alexandria district, Louisiana Conference. Nearly the entire district is in a revival flame. More than one hundred were added to the church during the round of Quarterly Meetings which has just closed.

The Spring Creek mission is stirred from centre to circumference. I have just closed the third revival on the mission. Brother John S. Davis, of the Evergreen circuit, and Brother Henry Thomas, local preacher, were with me, and did efficient service. Forty have been added to the church in the bounds of the district. To God be all the glory.

FRED. WHITE, P. E.

WINONA, MISS., Sept. 4, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The revival on Winona circuit is extending. At Bethesda a six day's meeting resulted in sixteen conversions, and an accession of eighteen members to our church. At Salem, during the week of prayer, we had a fine accession to the church, in the spirit of renewed consecration to God and ardent aspiration for holiness. Four persons professed faith, and four joined the church. At these meetings very efficient labor was performed by those excellent local elders, Billy Holmes and Hollis Williams.

At Friendship the Quarterly Meeting continued nine days. Here our popular presiding elder and his equally worthy brother, Ransom Jones, were with us, most while preaching in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Some thirty-seven souls were converted, and as many received into the church.

At all these meetings congregations were large and serious, a profound religious influence pervading the several communities. Many persons are still seeking religion, while stated prayer meetings (at Salem, class meetings also) are held.

The revival at these meetings is not the result of labored effort to get up excitement. There was only simple, earnest preaching, singing and prayer, and a people prepared, it would seem, of the Lord Some excitement has attended the work. Some soul moving, glorious shouts we have heard. But usually, with intense interest and much feeling, the services have been remarkably quiet for Methodist meetings in the country.

At Friendship, during one hour's service, twelve souls found peace At Bethesda an angry man came one night and led his daughter from the altar. The second day after this he was there. Father and daughter were converted. Father Applewhite, in his seventy-seventh year, was with me in all the fervid zeal, I must think, of fifty years ago, when he was a young preacher.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

CRAWFORD CIRCUIT, LEE CO., ALA., September 9, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Through the mercy of God and the riches of His grace we are prepared to say to you and your readers that the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. The churches on this circuit have been blessed with an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in such power and to such an extent as recalls vividly to my mind Methodism forty years ago. Our third Quarterly Meeting for the circuit was held at Mount Zion, embracing the second Saturday and Sunday in August. The first day of the meeting the question was repeatedly asked, Where did these people come from? The services began, the Holy Spirit was with the preacher and with the people. Sunday night about thirty were at the altar. Monday night about fifty, and fifteen conversions. Thus the good work went on for twelve days, increasing in power and interest, resulting in an accession to the church of sixty-one members. About fifty of this number are converts. There were men and women who, during the war and its close, overcome by the pressure of the times, and yielding to the despondency of the hour, had wandered far out into the desert, and had lain themselves down beneath the juniper tree in repining and murmurings. They now heard the "still small voice," What doest thou here? They have left the desert. They are come to Mount Zion. They are happy, rejoicing in the love of God Our presiding elder, Brother M. S. Andrews, labored with us for ten days, both in pulpit and at the altar, with an ability, efficiency and power rarely equaled, endearing himself and his labors to the hearts of the multitude who came and went. A minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ has his poverty, his afflictions, and "labors more abundant;" but when he feels that souls are being born into the kingdom of God, how brightens the crown!

This meeting will never be forgotten. At the same time, and on the same ground, our colored friends held a meeting, resulting in an accession to the church of one hundred and nine; total, one hundred and seventy. Closing this work we went to Mechanicsville, and there found a meeting of great spiritual power. It was a Holy Ghost time. Six converts, fifteen backsliders reclaimed, and the church greatly edified. The entire community is blessed. While the other churches have had no special revival season they have had many comfortable meetings. We now leave for Silver Run. The Lord is already pouring out His Spirit upon the people there. We expect the Lord will do great things for us there. We hope for it, we pray for it.

I very much doubt if there has been such an universal work of the Spirit on this district in twenty-five years as now. It is a significant fact that the churches, being so abundantly blessed now, are principally those that have fostered the Sabbath school with an untiring zeal. And that prophecy of old seems now to be fulfilling: "The hearts of the fathers are turning to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers." Let good men everywhere pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done."

M. C. TURRENTINE, P. C.

Ouachita District Meeting, Louisiana Conference.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

Your committee are much gratified in being able to report Homer College, the only school in the Ouachita district in our charge, as yet alive, and could it but receive that fostering care and attention from those who are and should be its friends, which its importance demands, we doubt not that in a very short time it would become the pride of the church, and the praise of the country around.

Homer College has labored under many difficulties during the past nine or ten years; and for a time its strongest friends could but regard it as dead. It had passed into other hands, and to redeem it seemed impracticable. With a debt of four or five thousand dollars hanging over it, the building was in a dilapidated condition, glass all gone from the windows, many of the sashes broken, doors and mantlepieces destroyed, floors torn up, some of the pillars supporting the building torn down, and plastering broken off. Our people, in their resources and feelings completely exhausted by the war, worm, Federal and State exaction, and seemingly scarcely a friend left, all hope that it could again be ours was well nigh lost. But we are proud to inform you that with money and management the college is ours, and will so remain, if we are true to ourselves.

The greater portion of its debts have been cancelled, and could some five or six hundred dollars be added to its assets, we believe at your next session it might be presented to you not owing one dollar.

This much has been done for the college by persons in its immediate vicinity. We would recommend that some means be devised by which it may receive aid from its friends abroad. For their encouragement we remark, during the last session there were near a hundred pupils in the college, and the instruction highly satisfactory.

We offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Homer College is worthy the support of its friends in the Ouachita district.

Resolved, That the friends of education be requested to co-operate with our agent in raising the funds necessary to enable the trustees to relieve Homer College of all pecuniary embarrassment.

Resolved, That in view of the fact that the tuition is not sufficient to enable the president to pay such salaries as will secure the assistance of experienced and competent teachers, that this District Meeting respectfully ask the Louisiana Conference to appoint an agent to represent the college throughout the Conference, with the view of securing an endowment fund for the college.

Respectfully submitted,

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE CIRCULATION OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

We, your committee, to whom was referred the subject of the circulation of the Holy Scriptures, beg leave to report that we have spared no pains in eliciting all the information within our reach.

We have before us the report of Rev. B. F. Alexander, the collecting and distributing agent of the Southwestern Bible Society, and we have conferred with ministers and laymen from the various parts of the six parishes represented in this District Meeting.

From the agent's report we learn that of the twenty-two parishes within his field, he has visited ten. He found that in the ten parishes there had been organized, prior to the beginning of his agency, seventeen Bible societies and Bible committees. He has visited all these, and found most of them in an entirely disorganized condition, and doing nothing. These have all been reorganized, and their depositories supplied with books. He has also organized twenty-one new societies and committees, making in all thirty-eight actively engaged in the circulation of the Bible. Books to the value of about $4,000 have been sent out from the Bible House of New Orleans. A large number of these have been disposed of by sale and donation; but the agent has received from the societies only about $550. He has also received, as donations to the Bible cause, about $700, making a total of $1,250 received by the agent for the Southwestern Bible Society. The few societies that have been formed in the six parishes represented in this District Meeting are of but recent date, and have accomplished but little in the great work of supplying all the people of this widely extended country with the word of God. From all the facts that have come before us, we are convinced there is great destitution in these parishes. In the total absence of a system of colportage we have no means of ascertaining the exact amount, but we believe that at least one half of the families of this land are destitute of the Holy Bible, not to speak of the multitudes of young persons and others who have no Bible as their own property. These facts are truly appalling, but we believe them true; and, if true, they should no longer be hidden. They should not be hidden from our own eyes, nor from the eyes of those who are more especially charged with the responsibilities of distribution and supply. The important question before the Christian public, and the Bible society in particular, is, By what means shall this destitution be met, and these families and individuals be supplied? We are ready to believe and declare that the present agent, Rev. B. F. Alexander, has done much for the supply of his field, probably more than all who have preceded him from the beginning. But he has done little more than organize societies and establish depositories. And this, from the nature of the case, can be done only in towns, villages and more central and populous neighborhoods, where, though the destitution is great, yet not so great as in the more remote settlements, where there are no churches, no ministers, no Bibles. In these remote places societies cannot be formed, nor can they be supplied by societies in distant towns, nor can voluntary distributers be engaged to do this work.

We are well acquainted with the people of this country, and with their condition. We know how far they may be enlisted in church enterprise. And we know that it is impossible to induce them to undertake and accomplish the distribution of the Bible. We are fully convinced that the only means by which a general and thorough supply can be effected is a systematic colportage. It is now hoped that the society and the agent will enter promptly and with energy upon the great work of supplying this vast field with the word of God.

We recommend the following resolutions for adoption:

Resolved, That, as heretofore, we will continue to co-operate with the Southwestern Bible Society, and to encourage and assist the same to the utmost of our ability.

Resolved, That the agent of the Southwestern Bible Society is invited to visit all our churches and congregations, and organize Bible societies and raise funds for the Bible cause.

Resolved, That we do recognize the importance and necessity of a general system of colportage within this field. And we do respectfully recommend the Southwestern Bible Society to inaugurate and prosecute the same, until the whole country shall have been visited and supplied with the word of God.

Resolved, That the foregoing report and resolutions be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Southwestern Presbyterian, of New Orleans, for publication.

Respectfully submitted,

Union Springs District Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: The fourth meeting of the Union Springs district, Montgomery Conference, convened in Brundidge, Pike county, Alabama, August 26, at nine o'clock A. M There being no Bishop present, the meeting was opened with religious exercises by the presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Shores, who presided over its deliberations with impartiality and general satisfaction.

W. H. Parks, of Troy, was elected secretary, and Rev. A. Dowling assistant.

The Rev. S. F. Pilley, who had been appointed to preach the opening sermon, was not present on account of feeble health, but his place was filled by the Rev. J. B. Cottrell, who preached an able and appropriate discourse on Gall. 5: 1. All the charges in the district, except one, Greenville circuit, were represented.

In all, including pastors, local preachers and laymen, the meeting numbered sixty-three members.—Committees were raised on the following subjects, viz: The state of the church and discipline, finance, Sunday schools, education, church property and parsonages, the arrangement of the work, local preachers, missions, religious interests of freedmen, church literature, and the Bible cause.

The presiding elder gave a verbal report of his work, stating that he had met all his appointments, having held forty-two Quarterly Conferences for the white charges and five for the colored. He represented the condition of the district generally as encouraging, and in some charges that there are evidences of spiritual development and growth.

Written reports were submitted by nearly all the pastors, representing the spiritual state of the church and attendance on social meetings, the finances and Sunday schools.

These reports were, in the main, encouraging, and in some instances very much so indeed. Written reports, also, were presented by most of the local preachers in the district, from which it is evident that they are most heartily co-operating with the pastors. Able and appropriate reports were made by the different committees that had been raised.

A preamble and resolutions, expressive of the feelings of the district, were offered by the Rev. J. B Cottrell, and unanimously adopted, on the sad and lamented death of the Rev. James M. McKee, of the Presbyterian Church, who was drowned in Pea river, last May, while prosecuting his labors as an evangelist of the South Alabama presbytery.

A resolution, offered by Rev. J B. Cottrell, was unanimously adopted, indorsing the able and candidly Christian reply of our Bishops to the overtures of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, viz: Colonel R. H. Powell, of Union Springs, William H. Parks, Esq., of Troy, W. Capers Menefee, Esq., of Orion, and Rev. P. R. Clements. M. D., of Brundidge. The reserves are: D. T. McCall, of Greenville, G. N. Gilmer, of Fort Deposit circuit, William Threadgill, of Union Springs, and H. D. Cowart, of Troy circuit.

There was preaching every day and night during the meeting, and it was able indeed, and "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

Suitable resolutions of thanks to the citizens of Brundidge and vicinity, for their generous hospitality in entertaining the meeting, were passed. Also, thanks to the president and secretaries of the meeting.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

WM H. PARKS, Sec'y.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

MRS ELIZA KIMBROUGH BOWEN was born February 19, 1800, in the State of South Carolina, Darlington district, on Great Pedee river.

Her childhood was spent among the early pioneers of Methodism, and from them she received her earliest impressions of Christianity. These were her models of earnest, active and uncompromising men of God, and their lives the true examples of piety.

At the age of fourteen years she embraced religion, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Fayettevillo, North Carolina. For fifty-six years she was true to her profession, and unintermitting in her piety and devotion to God. In 1815 she was married to W. H. Bowen, at Stoney Hill, being fifteen years of age, and with him began the career of a long, varied life. Together, hand in hand, they traveled the pathway of life, up the hill to its summit, and down the declivity to the shadowy valley. Their heads grew gray and whitened together; for fifty-five years sharing the same joys and griefs. In youth and prime, in old age and feebleness their lives were one; for years they walked along the brink of the river until she first stepped into its waters. Only a short space separates them.

In 1847 she moved to Monticello, Mississippi, where she lived until 1852. She then moved to Union Church, Mississippi, where she lived, respected and beloved, until her death, July 26, 1869.

She gave birth to eleven children. Ten of them lived to mature life, and eight of these preceded her to the land of spirits. Though they have died, one in Texas, one at sea, one upon the tented field, two in South Carolina, and three under the same roof where she breathed her last, all have left clear evidence of reunion above. Her piety and Christian life impressed them all. Her prayers were answered in the salvation of her children. Her two surviving children are ministers of God in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and, together with one son-in-law and one grandson, are four members of the Mississippi Conference. May her life inspire them with great fervency and zeal in the great work of preaching Christ. She leaves four heralds of the Cross to widen and extend the waves of her influence.

She had passed from prosperity and temporal abundance in youth, through many vicissitudes, to humbler circumstances in old age, yet maintained the same integrity and uncompromising spirit of right.

When misfortune came she surrendered all to the exactions of justice and a good conscience rather than use the privilege granted by law. Her property was given up, her integrity saved. She was industrious, provident and cheerful in all her labors. She loved and respected her husband through long life, and made a home happy and bright to all, which gathered around the declining years of the aged couple the brightness and tenderness of first life. She was true in every relation of life, and true to her God. She died as she long had lived, full of faith and love to God. She needed no reiteration of this, nor expression of her thought, for in many years of her past life it was the daily utterance of her lips and abiding comfort of her soul. Her Bible, through which she had read once each year for years past, is now marked by her hand where she last paused in her course, to read no more forever.

She leaves an aged companion, the partner of a long life. May God prepare him by abundant grace for his approaching end.

THE COTTON TAX.—The Macon Telegraph says it has seen a circular from Washington, which states that it is now certain that the entire Supreme Bench, with one exception, are of the opinion that the cotton tax was unconstitutional, and will have to be refunded. A case is to be made in court next December, and no doubt is felt about the ultimate result. It is further said that a company is being organized in New York with a capital of five or ten millions to buy up these claims, and that parties are now selling them for a song, when they are worth their face. Planters and others, who have paid this tax, are earnestly advised not to part with their claims for the present. No doubt they will be collected at the proper time, at a very moderate per centage.

SCIENTIFIC.

PAPER is now employed in the manufacture of innumerable articles for which it was once thought utterly unadapted. Paper collars were once thought quite an invention, but now it is used for water-pails and racing boats, and for various sorts of clothing. Paper petticoats have been introduced into England, either printed in imitation of the fashionable skirts of the day, or stamped out with open-work of such beauty and delicacy as no amount of labor with needle and scissors could imitate. The paper used for these "garments" is of great strength and flexibility, and can be sewn with a machine. Another use to which paper is applied is the production of imitation cretonnes and chintzes for bed furniture, a set costing retail about a dollar and a quarter. The material of which these are composed is so flexible that a curtain may be twisted into a rope and shaken out again, showing as little creasing as a chintz similarly treated. White day-covers for beds, and table cloths embossed with designs of great beauty, are also manufactured; and imitation leather, made impermeable to water, forms a cheap covering for furniture, and even for shoes. The Japanese custom of using paper for the manufacture of pocket handkerchiefs has not yet, that we have heard of, been introduced into Europe or America.

HOW TO CATCH RATS.—The following is said to be a cheap and effective way to catch rats: Cover a common barrel with stiff, stout paper, tying the edge round the barrel; place a board so that the rats may have easy excess to the top; sprinkle cheese parings or other feed for the rats on the paper for several days, until they begin to think that they have a right to their daily rations from this source; then place in the bottom of the barrel a piece of rock about six or seven inches high, filling with water until only enough of it projects above the water for one rat to lodge upon. Now replace the paper, first cutting a cross in the middle, and the first rat that comes on the barrel top goes through into the water and climbs on the rock. The paper comes back to its original position, and the second rat follows the first. Then begins a fight for the possession of the dry place on the stone, the noise of which attracts the others, who share the same fate. — Scientific American.

THE MASTER'S FRIENDS.

We are apt to think that if we had had the manna we should never have complained of it; no, we should regard it as at once settling the question whether the Gospel can be sent to every creature. There is nothing, however, in the history of the Israelites that looks as if they took any undue advantage of the mysterious mercy. They did not, because of it, hesitate to offer of their flocks and herds, of their silver and gold for the support and adornment of God's service; but gave of their goods with a freeness that will be for all time an example of enlightened piety. Between their conduct and our own a comparison may be instituted, if we consider that our daily bread has been as sure to us as the manna was to them. They, as well as we, gathered from the ground as much as was meet for the support of life. The Lord is the Lord of the harvest in either case; only their supply grew in a night, while ours matures in a season. Is not, therefore, the question of daily bread fully settled, and are we not left as free to support the service of God as they, or as we could reasonably ask? Let us believe that, though we are not in a desert, our "bread shall be given us, and our water shall be sure." Until this matter is settled in the mind of a man, we may expect but little from his Christianity. And if the church is to be halting forever at these "first principles," she will never attain perfection.

Yet this bread and meat case seems to be the chief concern of our people—they hardly get beyond it. A gracious dependence upon a gracious God is not their habit. The support of God's poor is too frequently lost sight of in the engrossing inquiry, What shall we eat, what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed? Every year an appeal comes up in the behalf of the Conference orphan and widow, and superannuate, stating the deficiency of the previous year. And it is heard as the agonizing cry of some starving creature, which it were a pity and a sin not to heed. Yet these are necessary expenses of the church. We have known nothing otherwise all our lives than that they are as just and as imperative as the claims of heaven. Such claimants stand to us as our own; and to refuse them a support is to show ourselves "worse than an infidel." If a member of the church can be found who will not pay, according to ability, for such an object, surely he dishonors the name of Christ.

We are ashamed to tell all we know about this matter and things kindred; so we forbear. But as they value eternal life let our people not fail to inquire what are the widows, the orphans, the superannuates and the worn out Bishops receiving? For they are the Master's friends; and of this none may plead ignorance or affect surprise in the day of judgment.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

It is the duty of all to become members of the visible church. In entering the church certain and important obligations are voluntarily assumed. Some of these relate particularly to the welfare of the church itself, and to what we contract to do by virtue of our union with it. Our obligations chiefly centre in the particular church to which we have attached ourselves; and with greater specialty still to the charge or congregation where our names are recorded. Whatever we owe to the church of Christ, in its widest aspect, is mostly discharged by and through our connection with some single religious congregation. It is here that we have confessed Christ, that our souls have been nourished in piety, and that we have our very existence as a part of the Saviour's body. It is through the denominational and local organization that we claim association with the universal church. Our love is due the whole church, and our devotion and charity should embrace the entire limits of Zion; but for the most part we are practically confined to a particular society. Here is the field of our labor, and here our zeal for Jerusalem is exhibited. Every believer is under specific vows of faithfulness to his church and society. If he fail in this, we may be sure that he is wanting in the duties of his profession as a disciple of Christ. A piety that has no local habitation, and owns allegiance to no particular church, is scarcely worth any serious consideration. It contributes nothing to the general effectiveness, and is on the road to self-destruction. The man who is deeply devoted to his own church is the faithful and valuable laborer. He may be thus devoted without taint of bigotry or offensive sectarianism, while his religious fervor, nursed at home, is ever bursting forth in streams of generous deeds and love to all.

One object of church membership is our own personal benefit. It is resorted to as a means of grace, and as affording help in working out the salvation of the soul. This association with the godly is not to bring us in contact with sacraments saving in themselves, but to extend the social religious influences and sympathies, to hedge us in from the world, and to give us the advantages of all the ordinances of the house of God. It is clear that the church will do any one little good without diligent improvement of all the gracious helps which are furnished. It is of no use that the public profession has been made, and that the name is recorded, if we are neglectful of those very things which have been appointed to encourage and edify. This object of union with the church may be employed as a criterion by which to judge of our faithfulness. Is this end being subserved by the active and habitual improvement of the means of grace? That we are growing better and holier may be regarded as a test of fidelity, for we can safely assume that no one can be thorough and sincere in waiting upon God in His ordinances without evident progress in religion. If our connection with the church has secured little occasional spiritual benefit, it is because this connection has been of a merely nominal character, and we have neglected the most obvious aids to a spiritual life. People are bound to be benefited and blessed in the church if they do their duty. Governed by the desire of spiritual benefits, they will fail in none of the appointed services, and they will be always in their places in the congregation.

Another object of membership in the church is to do good. It is in the church that many duties must be performed. In no other way can one realize "the communion of saints" or obey God in the sacraments. We cannot otherwise adequately confess Christ and be identified with the Saviour's kingdom. Men are supposed to do all of these things when they join the church. They enter the religious communion that they may do them, and that obligations due directly to God and Christ may be performed.—Through the church organization the ministry, missions and every good enterprise are maintained. The congregation is a centre of influence in the community, sending out streams of life to the social and political world. Through the church the individual believer exerts an influence wide as the earth. The power and usefulness of the congregation to which he is attached depends upon the faithfulness of the members, and in a proportionate degree upon his fidelity. If a churl in giving, besides his own deficiency, his example tells upon others. If absent from his post in the prayer meeting, besides the loss of his personal spirituality, he depreciates and damages the piety of all. If an easy-going steward, the contagion of such a standard puts the finances of an entire circuit in peril.

Some seem to forget that this purpose of doing good should constitute a leading motive in the duties of church membership. They are religiously selfish, seeking only to be pleased and profited, with no absorbing concern for the advancement of the divine kingdom. The point we would make is that the church member is under obligations to do good in the church. He is to aim at the highest possible usefulness in sustaining the institutions of religion, and in bringing the world to Christ. He is most alarmingly recreant to his vows if he does not feel the binding force of these considerations, and seek most earnestly to do something in the church for the glory of God. Whether to get good or to do good should be the leading principle need not be determined. The former may operate most powerfully in our entrance, the latter in our continuance in the church. Both may be present, however, in every period and stage of religious experience. The greatest benefit to ourselves usually coincides with the conditions of greatest usefulness to others. Those who wander about, governed only by the desire to be gratified, and, as they may imagine, also to be profited, miss of the highest blessedness. Generally, where we can be most useful is the place where we shall find the most grace. There are probably a few who have never thought of their relations to the church except as the means of being benefited. The idea of being of service to the church does not enter their minds. Where church membership is under consideration, these two motives should have their due and proportionate weight. Where can I be most benefited? In what church or society can I find the greatest helps to piety? And where, with the means of my own salvation assured, can I do most for the church and its divine Head? In the changes of membership from place to place, convenience, the talent of the preacher, the music, and the social standing of the members are less to be thought of than the real good of our souls, and the opportunities of laboring for Christ and helping to build the waste places of Zion. The older members especially should feel themselves called to work rather than to enjoy themselves. *

SPECIE POWER OF THE SOUTH.

The right to make money has been illustrated by the Congress of the United States upon a scale that rhetoricians might place among their examples of "the sublime." The distance from this planet to the sun, the diameter of the earth's orbit in miles, and our national debt in dollars, we consider of about an equal value in giving one an idea of a quantity of which, in fact, the human mind can have no adequate conception. To this vast financial creation must be added the hundreds of millions of greenbacks that constitute our national currency, if one would have a just expression of the ability of Congress to make a floating universe out of nothing. And yet not exactly out of nothing, but out of that absolute power which, in defiance of the Constitution, presumes to enact that paper money shall be a legal tender.

To determine that paper, for which gold and silver cannot be demanded at the counter that issues it, is equal to specie, is a wonderful artifice. It is as artificial as the creations of Aladdin, though seeming to be as real as those seemed to childhood. By the drawing up of a bill, by three several readings and three signatures, reams of common paper are declared to be millions of money—money that no man shall refuse! Now, until the third department in the government has fixed its seal nothing is law; and until the judiciary affirms that greenbacks are gold we may be excused for doubting the Arabian Nights. The wonderful lamp had many rubbings, we know, but its genii were not more industriously plied than has been this new found alchemy by the party in power.

It is difficult to overcalculate the advantages which Eastern and Northern mercantile centres have from being able to make as much money as they want. And we are not surprised that they monopolize the art. By it they can command the offices of the country, control elections, preserve the Union, build a railroad to the Pacific, and enable one man to make $10,000,000 in a single day by dealing in stocks. It is the art that turns the spindles of New England, and digs the mines of Pennsylvania. It keeps Virginia out of the Union, hands Mississippi over to a military autocrat, enables the Governor of Louisiana to publicly drive about in company with negro women, and emboldens negro policemen in this city to drag to prison white women by the wrist with iron nippers.

Can any value of the South based upon real production ever compete with this 'baseless fabric' of the United States Congress? That is the question. Is there not in gold and silver a universal, intrinsic value which cannot be obliterated or ignored by base legislation? Can all the Congresses ever held in this country so far destroy the value of five hundred millions of the precious metals as to make them worth only one million of $500 Treasury notes, with the heads of Senators Wilson, Sumner, Stevens, and the lamented Lincoln finely engraved upon their face, but promising to pay—nothing? Europe doubts, California doubts, Texas doubts, China doubts, and the North itself doubts, if we may judge by recent nominations in Ohio.

The South is immensely interested in testing the vitality of this financial monster, paper money. If it be all that its holders claim for it, we shall be no worse off by actual demonstration. If it be not, the sooner its power for evil is destroyed the better. By determining that that which is worth specie in all the markets of the world shall be sold here for specie or its equivalent, and for that only, the whole money system of Congress will come to its bearings. So far as an individual planter is concerned, it can make but little difference whether he sells his crop for gold, or for greenbacks which can be sold for gold; but if the whole crop of cotton and sugar and rice and tobacco be exchanged for specie, it will compel the United States Treasury to resume specie payment, to say the least. This will take the creation of money out of the hands of Congress, and lift the party in power out of the city of Washington. It will give to those who produce values the true power that inheres to them, whether in Virginia or Mississippi. It will not disturb the tender relations which exist between the Radical and the negro, but it will afford them both a more retired sphere for their cultivation. And we think it worth the experiment.

CUBA.

Private information received in this city within the past few days, direct from one of the principal camps of the Cuban insurgents, represents their cause as very desperate. This change in the before bright prospects is said to have been brought about wholly by the interference of the United States government with their plans. In view of the heavy reinforcements Spain is certain to send at the end of the sickly season, it is thought they cannot maintain themselves without assistance from abroad. This may account for the rumor current in Washington—as reported by our correspondent—to the effect that England, France and Austria will coalesce to sustain Spain. This action could only have been brought about by a great change in the situation, since it was only a few weeks ago that the absorption of Cuba by the United States was looked upon with favor by all these countries. In Europe diplomacy is always a little in advance of events, but with our present Blunderbore administration we are always hopelessly behind.—New Orleans Times.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—The Times, in an editorial on the Cuban question, says if American negotiations for the accession of Cuba have failed it must be because the sum tendered was deemed insufficient. The Washington government dreads the opposition of those who feel confident Cuba must fall into the hands of the United States, and deem it folly to incur liability. The Spanish government has been admonished to put an end to the insurrection or give up the island on any terms. If these circumstances have prompted the Madrid government to play its card for Cuba, and stake all on it, it cannot be congratulated on its resolution. The subjugation of Cuba cannot be achieved by soldiers, nor will it result from a series of victories. Troops may hold the seaports, but the inland regions will be against them. Armed columns may traverse the island, but can nowhere establish a footing. With the exception of a few traders, Spain has no friends on the island. Prim and Serrano have often told the Cortes that the loss of Cuba is merely a question of time. For four months they have been advising the most advantageous terms. It is to be hoped that wisdom and consistency will enable them to see that it is good to be rid of the island on any terms, and cause them to consider before wasting men and money, which they cannot spare, in the furtherance of an enterprise which will never yield a hundredth part of what it has already irreparably lost.

Our people want Cuba, because they want everything. Then it is just such a strong position as England, Russia or France would have, if it were as near to them as it is to us. The opportunity presented by the revolution in the island would seem to be specially favorable to our acquiring this Queen of the Antilles. But, on the other hand, capital is timid, and the bondholders would have nothing done without the consent of every European power. Yet the Radicals know that if they neglect this auspicious moment for annexing this much coveted island the next election will tell the popular disappointment. This constitutes the dilemma that at this moment perplexes the cabinet at Washington.

The South does not specially desire Cuba, because three cents in gold would vanish from the present price of sugar in the instant of its annexation. She only hopes that the production of the island may be enhanced by the substitution of free labor for slaves. A little while back the powers of Europe seemed to be getting ready to assent with a good grace to our having this important naval point; but by the last news we see that the combination is to sustain Spain in retaining it. Like ourselves, Great Britain covets the whole world in the East, in the West, in Africa, in Asia, the islands in every sea, and the seashore of every continent. Just returning from the subjugation of Abyssinia, she deprecates all wars for conquest. Stretching her lines over all central and eastern Africa by the help of those adventurous chain carriers, Livingstone, Speke and Baker, she is just about to take in a greater breadth of land and water than are included in her entire possessions in North America. Russia, too, has scarcely recovered from her huge territorial gorge of the regions of the Amoor. In fact nations, like individuals, become covetous in proportion to the greatness of their wealth, until the spirit of rapacity and the ambition for empire give birth at home to parties and passions which work out dissolution.

THE MARYLAND AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.—The Rev. S. Register, D. D., formerly the presiding elder of the Baltimore district of the Southern Methodist Church, is the president of this institution. It is situated in Prince George's county, Maryland. Its curriculum embraces ancient and modern languages, mathematics, etc. The peculiar feature of the institution is the blending of the theory and practice of agriculture with the usual educational training. It is not expected to make practical farmers out of youths, but with the aid of a well stocked farm, and a garden and orchard, to put the student in the way of becoming a thoroughly informed agriculturist.

Always and Everywhere Against Public Education.

The two scraps below, one from England, the other from Ohio, are specimens of the way the "unrelenting opponents of public schools at every extremity" are at work in Europe and America. The common school system and the Bible are fatal to Roman Catholicism under every clime.

LONDON, Sept. 4.—The Times comments as follows on Cardinal Cullen's last pastoral letter, and on the claims put forth by the Roman Catholic Bishops of Ireland: "They demand the overthrow of common education and the exaltation of denominationalism. The language of Archbishop Cullen must provoke resentment. The pretensions of the Catholic hierarchy toward the State are intolerable. There is not one of their resolves on education which the people will not emphatically repudiate, and which, if brought before Parliament, will not be rejected. The lesson of the past two years seems lost on these prelates. They have not understood how a proposal of great moderation and acknowledged wisdom proved abortive last session, through the profound antipathy of Parliament to applying public money to Catholic uses. The present proposals are about as hopeless as any that could be propounded. England and Scotland will not listen to them; even in Ireland they will not command the assent of classes interested in higher education; and in Parliament they would be mentioned only to be condemned."

CINCINNATI, Sept. 14.—The attempted compromise between the Protestants and Catholics, in regard to public schools, failed.

Petitions against the exclusion of the Bible were presented, signed by ten thousand persons.

The conference session was stormy and lasted until after midnight.

Finally the proposition to exclude the Testament as a text book was tabled.

MEN are rendered happy by the exemption of pain, rather than by the enjoyment of any pleasure.

BATHING IN OIL.—It has often been asked whether it would be possible for a man to swim in oil. The question was practically solved the other day by a workman employed in an oil manufactory at Nice, who fell into a tank of olive oil nine feet deep. He was an expert swimmer, but he went to the bottom like a plummet, and was only saved from drowning by the timely aid of a comrade. Oil is too light to swim in; it is not sufficiently buoyant, and does not offer the resistance necessary to keep a man afloat. On the other hand, it is worth knowing that if a bath in oil offers dangers to the swimmer, there are occasions on which it may be of valuable use, for it is the best of all remedies for serious burns. A German ballet girl, whose dress had caught fire and who had been horribly burned in consequence, was put into a bath full of oil by the chief physician of the Leipsic Hospital. She was suffering excruciating agonies, but the oil caused her pains to cease almost immediately. She remained in the bath nine days and nights, the oil being renewed five times during that period, and her burns were then so far healed that she could be taken out without pain or danger. Three weeks after she had completely recovered. This is an admirable form of cure, because it suppresses the intolerable tortures which do more to kill the victims by fire than the actual gravity of the wounds. Unfortunately, like most good things in life, it is a remedy beyond the reach of small purses.

MARRIED.

At the residence of Mr. C. M. DIXON, in Yazoo county, Mississippi, on the 8th instant, by Rev. A. B. Stewart, Mr JAS. PEASTER to Miss MARY DIXON, all of Yazoo county.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS, a veteran member of the Methodist Church, died at his residence in Carroll county, Mississippi, June 11, 1869. He was born in South Carolina, October 11, 1791.

The deceased was the son of William Williams, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Thirty-four years ago he came to Mississippi and settled on the place where he died.

He was the father of nine children, who grew up to maturity. Two of these are effective Methodist preachers in the local ranks—A. J. Williams, of Alabama, and Hollis Williams, of Mississippi.

Father Williams loved the church, illustrated the Christian religion, and did, in his retiring way, the part of a faithful servant in the cause of God.

He bore with soldierly fortitude the infirmities of age and the sufferings of his last illness. From early life even down to old age he lived a Christian life. "The end of that man is peace."

By resolution of Quarterly Conference, Winona circuit. JOHN A. ELLIS.

WINONA, Miss., Sept., 1869.

SISTER PERMELIA JACKSON was born October 12, 1821, and died July 2, 1869.

She was early given to God in baptism by her parents, at the hands and ministry of the Rev A. G. Brewer. During the year 1839 she was convicted of sin. She sought and found pardon through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, and at once joined the Methodist Protestant Church, in which connection she remained until the year 1850. She was led to the marriage altar by Brother Lemuel Jackson, who had been for years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She thought best to sever her connection with the Methodist Protestant Church and join the church of her husband's choice. This she did, and was a faithful member to the day of her death, and in every way a model Christian.

Sister Jackson was one of those calm, quiet spirits that rarely became greatly excited upon any subject. She was a good wife, and a very kind, affectionate stepmother of two children. For several months before she died her bodily suffering was very intense, and probably no one ever exhibited more patience and resignation than she. While sick she said nothing special about the future; but she lived the life of the righteous, and her last end was like his. R. A. TIMMONS.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a meeting of the Sunday school at Pleasant Valley church, Mississippi Conference, on the 29th of August, 1869, it was Resolved, That the superintendent be requested to appoint a committee of three to prepare a tribute of respect to the memory of the Rev. C. J. HENDAY, who has been removed from our midst by death.

Whereupon the superintendent appointed Brothers W. H. Mullins, B. F. Granberry and William Wadeworth as the committee.

The committee submitted the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, The great Head of the Church has seen fit to take from us one of our number; therefore,

Resolved, That as individual Christians and members of the Sunday school we humbly bow in submission to the Divine will. But while we acquiesce in the afflictive dispensation of Divine Providence, which has removed from the Sunday school our esteemed and efficient teacher of the Bible class, we nevertheless sensibly feel our loss, and know not upon whom his mantle will fall. He was always at his post, and prepared to elucidate any passage of Scripture that might be at all obscure. No one took a deeper interest in his Bible class. He always prepared himself with great care upon every lesson, and took delight in explaining to the young the great doctrines of the Bible.

Resolved, That the superintendent and teachers in the Sunday school and members of his class be requested to wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Copiahan be requested to publish the above preamble and resolutions, and that a copy of the same be furnished the bereaved family, with the condolence and prayers of the school.

W. H. MULLINS,
B. F. GRANBERRY,
WM. WADSWORTH,
Committee.

MRS. ELIZA M. DUNNING, daughter of Francis and Malinda Patton, was born in Claiborne county, Mississippi, November 25, 1827. Her parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and she was taught to reverence and fear God in early life. With such instruction she sought the Saviour, and soon after reaching womanhood—in her twentieth year—while praying in an upper room, she was happily converted to God, and went down rejoicing, and told her friends of her strange joy.

Some time after this she was married to Mr. Davenport, who lived but a few years. Passing a few years in the loneliness of widowhood, she was subsequently married to Mr. Hugh Dunning, in the month of May, 1852.

In 1853 she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which she remained until her death, on the 10th of August, 1869, at Hazlehurst, Mississippi. Sister Dunning told her pastor that religion had made much of her life very happy, but for a few years past she had enjoyed but little of its comforts. At the first meeting of her pastor for this year she said she had no religion—had neglected and almost entirely given up religious duty, and became indifferent to the claims of Christianity, and the dreadful future to which it pointed the negligent and indifferent. But after one or two interviews of serious conversation, reading and prayer, this dreadful spell of indifference was broken, and thought and penitence and faith sprung up in the heart, and the sweet life, and the glowing hope, and rejoicing praise, and the patient suffering followed. She told her pastor that the angels were in her room and around her bed, to watch her and care for her in slumber, and waiting to escort her to that bright world where loved ones awaited her coming. In this frame of mind she lived and suffered, and talked and sang, and shouted the praise of God for five or six weeks, and then her triumphant spirit leaped from its cumbering casket, and, mountine its angel chariot, was borne to its mansion and the society of sainted loved ones.

A stricken husband and several children remain to sorrow; but not as those who have no hope. May they prepare to join her in that glorious inheritance.

ON BOTH ENDS OF THE ROLLS.

The cogs on one end of a roll are set relatively between those on the other end of the same roll, virtually forming a and thereby nearly doubling the purchase.—(The importance of setting gears in this position is not generally understood.)

Notwithstanding the rolls can separate freely at either end, the Cog-wheels cannot be thrown out of gear on both ends of the Wringer at the same time, unless the pressure is taken off.

The "NOVELTY" is fastened to a tub or box by a patent Curved Clamp, which has an equal bearing on a tub the whole length of the Wringer. Other Wringers are merely fastened to a stave at each end, and are thus liable to wrench the staves from their proper position and ruin the tub.

The Cog-wheels, Thumb-screws, etc., are nicely galvanized.

Buy the "NOVELTY," or at least take it on trial with any or all others, and keep the best. For sale everywhere.

When hope and strength are fled.

To every man on deck.

'Tis Water to the faint
To cool the parching tongue,
The blessings of Pain Paint
A million men have sung.

Pain Paint is like the Sun—
Gives life and vigor now,
To every notion run,
Refreshing as the dew.

'Tis Freedom to the slave—
Pain Paint those fetters broke;
No drugs or dosing knave
Bebinds the heathen yoke.

'Tis Summer to the dear,
'Tis Victory to the lost,
'Tis Fruit and golden ear
To those by famine tossed.

A Friend amid our foes,—
A Breeze in torrid zones,
Pain Paint will banish woes,
'Tis Meat instead of bones.

A Horse to weary legs,
'Tis Money in the till,
Or Wine instead of dregs;
Pain Paint is better still.

What Physicians Say.

I have not lost a single patient in sixteen months past, since using DR. WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT and ANNIHILATOR in my practice. The cause of my success I owe to his medicines. I cured a case of Cancer with thirty ounces of Pain Paint. This patient was resigning himself to a surgical operation. He is now entirely well. Also cured a woman with Cancer of the Womb of six years' standing. I have two other cases under treatment nearly well. I can refer you to Judge Dixon, of McConnellsburg, Fulton county, Pennsylvania, for the validity of my statements.

H. BUSHEY, M. D.,
Sipes Mills, Fulton county, Penn.
August 2, 1869.

Water will not stain nor smart; neither will Pain Paint.

Water is harmless for injection; so is Pain Paint.

Water can be drank freely; so can Pain Paint.

Inflammation is the cause of all physical pain. Matter or corruption will never form unless caused by high inflammation; absorption and evaporation remove inflammation with wonderful rapidity. This is the new principle of Pain Paint. Cancers are healed as readily as a cut. Old fever sores, including ulcers of every name or of the foulest description, are cured by simply keeping them under the cooling influence of Pain Paint. Diarrhea and Dysentery cured within ten minutes by a faithful application across the bowels of the patient. A pint of Pain Paint applied properly to the head, when the pulse reaches the highest point, will positively cure Typhoid, Yellow, or any other known fever; by cooling the brain properly no fever can exist in the body. Pain Paint applied to a burn with several folds of cotton cloth dripping wet, will positively prevent blistering, if done immediately. It removes pain or swelling from bee stings, musquito bites or poisonous wounds; stops Headache or Neuralgia in a few minutes. Pains in the Liver, Heart or Kidneys relieved at the first application. Removes stiffness in joints and muscles, including all kinds of Rheumatic ailments.

Large bottles are much the cheapest, and should always be used for violent pains, spasms, colds, tumors or chronic ailments, or the whites. Beware of counterfeits. Dr. Wolcott's remedies are put up in white wrappers; buy none other. One gallon of Pain Paint, double strength, sent free of express charges on receipt of $20, or one quart $8, or one pint $5; or six pints of Annihilator, for Catarrh and Colds in the head, for $5 including directions and medical advice. All who come to the office treated free of cost, and no dosing the stomach. Small bottles sold at all drug stores. All remittances should be by post office orders or registered letters or by express, to R. L. WOLCOTT, No. 181 Chatham Square, New York. se4 4tr

FRESH TESTIMONIALS.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID,

THE ASTONISHING FAMILY MEDICINE

Saved from Death!—Read!

MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 28, 1869.

MESSRS. J. DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST., N. Y.—Gents: Yours of the 23d is before me, and has attention. It gives me pleasure to say that my belief is that your "Fluid," under the supervision of a kind Providence, saved the life of my youngest child, some six years ago, the child being wasted to a skeleton by the effects of teething, and an affection of the bowels therewith. I had never seen any one reduced so low to recover.

"Physic" had been tried in vain, until the physicians stated it was useless. A friend recommended your "Fluid," or Ozone, which he stated was one of the component parts of it. I did so, and the effect was like magic, plainly discernible in one hour in its good effects, producing quiet and sleep almost at once, where irritation and sleepless restlessness had previously possessed the child to nearly sotire exhaustion.

I at first administered it in a small way, two and three drops in a spoonful of water, and increased it to six and ten drops. It completely checked the bowels, and had the happiest effect, the child rapidly recovering.

I have tried your "Fluid" on animals, with the same effect—both horses and cows—mingling more or less in water, and letting them drink.

I have no hesitation in saying I believe it a specific for Chronic Diarrhea, or any violent affection of the bowels.

I would not be without it in my family under any consideration. Yours truly,

WILLIAM FOWLER.

Mr. Fowler is a member of the celebrated Banking House of Fowler & Somerville, Montgomery, Alabama.

AND AGAIN!

Read the following letter from Mr. Frank Saunders, a well known citizen, and brother-in-law of the beloved Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

189 BROADWAY, N. Y., July 29, 1869.

MESSRS. J DARBY & Co., 161 WILLIAM ST. N. Y.—Gents: About the 10th of June last one of my children was taken with Scarlet Fever, in its most malignant form, and as soon as I could I procured your valuable disinfectant, "Darby's Prophylactic Fluid." Although it was several days after the appearance of the disease before I began using the Fluid, still, by a free use of it, the disease was not only confined to the one case, but the malignity of that case somewhat mitigated.

During the use of the Fluid as a disinfectant in my family it was also tried in a case of headache, and one of toothache, the results in each case being instantaneous relief. It was afterward tried in a case of Erysipelas, with almost equal success.

It is due to the merits of this compound, also, to state that the case of Erysipelas in question, being located in the feet, the Fluid, in its application, was brought in frequent contact with a troublesome corn on one of the feet, to the utter discomfiture of said corn, for, upon subsequent examination, it had disappeared, and though it was sought for diligently, it could not be found.

I hand you this, hoping it may be the means of inducing others of earth's poor sufferers to test for themselves, as I did, the great merits of this great remedy.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANK SAUNDERS

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

"PUT A RING ON HIS HAND."

This may seem a small thing for Jesus to mention in so thrilling a description of the welcome home of the wayward but penitent son. And if it were to be estimated merely as it is used for ornament, by its costly jewels and cunning workmanship, it would be trifling with a solemn occasion. But the ring, from time immemorial, has been employed as a signal or token of precious things. Did you ever have a wife or sister die, and as she passed away take a ring from her finger and give it to you, saying, "Wear that for me?" If so, you have some appreciation of its value.

General Price related, shortly before he fell on the battle field, the following touching incident. They had been some time resting in camp, where they had a large prayer meeting tent, under which they were accustomed to meet for worship. Among those who were active in that meeting, and whom the general frequently met around the throne, was an orderly sergeant. Then they were called into action, and when the battle was over the general rode over the field to see whom he could relieve. Among the wounded he found this orderly. He dismounted and went up to him, and found him bleeding to death.—"Sergeant," said he, "you will soon go into bivouac."

"How! shall we encamp so soon?"

"Yes, you will soon pitch your tent."

Then he began to comprehend the general. "Do you mean that I am about to die?"

"Yes; you have but a few hours to live."

His eye kindled with a heavenly smile. "Well," said he, "thank God, I am ready, and I am glad to die for my country."

Then he drew a ring from his finger and kissed it, and handed it to the general, saying, "I wish you would take that and send it to my mother, and tell her that her son blessed her memory in dying." Then he drew another ring from his finger and kissed it, and handed it to the general. "Take this, and send it to her to whom my heart was betrothed, and tell her to come to me in heaven;" and he sunk in death.

"Put a ring on his finger," says Jesus. Let him know that he is not only forgiven, but loved. So with the forgiven sinner; all that ever has been symbolized by the ring is given to him. It is the emblem of an inviolable covenant of love. So God declares, "I have made an everlasting covenant with you. I have loved you with an everlasting love." If the poor, self-condemned sinner ever doubts the love of God, let him think of the ring on his hand.

It is also an emblem of delegated power and protection. When Joseph interpreted the dreams of the Egyptian King, and was appointed his deputy, Pharaoh drew a ring from his finger and placed it on Joseph's finger; then whoever touched Joseph touched Pharaoh. So with Ahasuerus and Mordecai. So with Jesus: "Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and whoso rejecteth you rejecteth me." The ring of divine protection is on the finger.
